PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SEVENTIETH CONGRESS FIRST SESSION

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, February 1, 1928

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, from whom all holy desires, all good counsels, and all just works do proceed, grant to us, Thy servants, that we may think and do only such things as are right and well pleasing in Thy sight. Bring all the nations into Thy fold, and heal all wounds that have been caused by our unhappy divisions. Send us forth with joy to our work and to our labor until the evening, that having served Thee with clean hands, pure hearts, and sound minds, our soul at last may say, "I will lay me down in peace and take my rest; and when I awake I shall be satisfied with His likeness." Grant this, O Father, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, January 27, 1928, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 5725. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ouachita River at or near Monroe, La.;

H. R. 5726. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing a bridge across the Black River at or near Jonesville, La.;

H. R. 5728. An act granting the consent of Congress to the police jury of Morehouse Parish, La., or the State Highway Commission of Louisiana, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew at or near Point Pleasant, La.; and

H. J. Res. 81. Joint resolution for the amendment of the act of March 3, 1927, by authorizing an annual appropriation to carry out the cooperative experiments contemplated by the act.

REPORT OF THE CAPITAL TRACTION CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Capital Traction Co., transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the operations of the company for the year ended December 31, 1927, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORT OF THE GEORGETOWN GAS LIGHT CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Georgetown Gas Light Co., transmitting, pursuant to law, a detailed statement of the business of the company, together with a list of stockholders, for the year ended December 31, 1927, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WILLIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Quincy, Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation, granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NORBECK presented a resolution adopted by the Sioux Falls (S. Dak.) Lodge, Sons of Norway, protesting against the quota provisions of the existing immigration law and also against the passage of legislation decreasing the immigration quotas of the Scandinavian countries, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BLAINE presented resolutions adopted by the county boards of Manitowoc and Winnebago Counties, in the State of Wisconsin, favoring the holding of a nation-wide referendum on the question of modifying the Volstead Act so as to legalize the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials signed by 94 citizens of the State of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CORN SUGAR

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have read from the clerk's desk a letter, written by Prof. A. C. Gould, of Cornell University, concerning a very important matter of legislation which is now pending in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CORNELL UNIVERSITY,
NEW YORK STATE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE,
DEPARTMENT OF ENTOMOLOGY,
Ithaca, N. Y., January 21, 1928.

Senator M. M. NEELY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I wish to call your attention to the corn sugar bill, which I understand is to be introduced in this session of Congress.

I want to make it clear in the beginning that I have no objection to the manufacture, sale, and use of corn sugar when it is sold as corn sugar in a fair and legitimate manner, but I do most emphatically object to the selling of this product by misbranding, fraud, and deception. I also object to any attempt to break down or weaken the pure food and drugs act.

The corn-sugar people apparently have two objects in view: First, to break down the workings of the pure food law; second, to sell their product by deception. They are attempting to secure legislation amending the pure food law to legalize the use of corn sugar in any food product without declaration on the label, thus legalizing misbranding and deception. Such unprecedented special privileges have been granted to no trust in the history of the administration of the pure food law. The administrators of this law have insisted, and still insist, that the consuming public has a right to know what it is eating.

Corn sugar is a cheap and inferior product known as glucose, which the manufacturers can not sell in a straightforward and honest manner on its own merits, so they seek to force it down the throats of the unsuspecting consuming public, hidden in some other product.

The corn-sugar people claim that they are being discriminated against. This is not true. Corn sugar is not, nor has it ever been, discriminated against by the administrators of the pure food law. This law does not restrict the manufacture or sale of corn sugar in any way, neither does it restrict its use as a sweetening or preserving agent for food products. It only requires that the presence of corn sugar in other foods be declared on the label, where the absence of such a declaration would be a deception and an imposition on the public.

When the statement is made on the label of a package that sugar is used as a sweetening agent, such a statement means cane sugar (sucrose) to the consuming public, and anything else used under the name of sugar would be a deception. The corn-sugar people gave their case away at the last session of Congress when they violently objected to the suggestion of officials of the Department of Agriculture that the exact nature of all sugars be stated on the labels of all food packages. Of course, this was just exactly what they did not want, namely, to label their product truthfully. Their attitude in this case shows beyond a doubt that the corn-sugar interests do not want fair and just legislation but that they want favored legislation that will give them special and unfair privileges.

The corn-sugar interests fought bitterly against the enactment of the pure food law, their bitterness being exceeded only by that of the blended-whisky people, and since its enactment they have made repeated attempts to break down its workings.

If this was a case of an industry fighting for self-preservation, it might be viewed with some sympathy, but no such principle is involved in the present case. In 1927 the Corn Refining Products Co. paid 16 per cent dividends on their common stock. They are evidently not suffering much from unjust and discriminating laws.

The corn-sugar interests have been quite active among the corn farmers of the West proving (?) to them that in the passage of the corn sugar bill lies their salvation. However, the farmers will undoubtedly find it pretty hard to swallow a 16 per cent dividend at their expense. Likewise, when the farmers read in the Wall Street Journal for July 8, 1927, that the Corn Products Refining Co. were importing 750,000 bushels of corn from Argentina for August delivery alone, they certainly must be far from convinced that the corn-sugar people have a fatherly interest in the corn farmers of the United States. Experts of the Department of Agriculture have expressed the opinion that legalizing the adulteration of food products with corn sugar would not materially affect the price of corn in the United States.

I hope that you will give this matter your most careful consideration. When the pure food and drugs act was passed in 1906 a great forward step was made in safeguarding the rights and the health of the American people. I am certain that you will see in the corn sugar bill one of the most disgraceful attempts in the history of this country to break down a just and beneficial law and give special privileges to an unscrupulous trust to practice fraud and deception upon the American people. It is only just that the public know what it is eating. If this bill becomes a law, when the consumer realizes what has happened it will take a lot of explaining to free this action from the taint of the machinations of a powerful and unscrupulous manufacturing concern to break down the pure food and drugs act and foist upon the consuming public, by fraudulent means, an inferior product in disguise.

Very sincerely yours,

A. C. GOULD.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, as a friend of the pure food law and an implacable foe to the corn sugar bill I give notice that I shall demand a hearing before the committee to which this bill has been referred. I shall undertake to prove by the eminent Dr. H. W. Wiley, the father of the pure food law, and a number of other expert witnesses that to enact the corn sugar bill into law will be to perpetrate a monstrous fraud upon the American people and do them incalculable and irreparable injury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the letter referred to the committee?

Mr. NEELY. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter will be referred to the Committee on Manufactures, which has the bill under consideration.

PARCEL-POST CONVENTION WITH CUBA

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not know that the matter which I am about to present comes directly under the present order of business, but it is of such urgent importance that I should like to call the attention of the Senate to it. I have before me a communication from a constituent of mine, who is ex-chairman of the National Chamber of Commerce, who writes me as follows:

I am inclosing you herewith a letter from Mr. Davis, secretary of the National Foreign Trade Council, with reference to parcel post with Cuba, which may be of interest to you.

He incloses a communication in which it is indicated that our convention or treaty with Cuba in reference to the parcel post will expire on March 1. In his letter, Mr. Davis says:

Between now and March 1 it is absolutely essential for American manufacturers and shippers to Cuba to get positive action in Congress on H. R. 9195, the Watson bill, to save the parcel post with Cuba.

I am going to ask that the letter from Mr. R. G. Rhett and the communication addressed to him by Mr. O. K. Davis may be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which I presume is the committee that would have charge of this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter and communication will be so referred.

THE MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I seldom transgress what I deem to be a proper rule, but I do ask the privilege of having incorporated in the RECORD, and then having referred to the Committee on Appropriations, a short editorial from the Salt Lake Tribune relating to the mining industry. It is a very important editorial and discusses the question very fully.

There being no objection, the editorial was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Salt Lake Tribune, January 25, 1928]

DISCRIMINATION

If a man erecting a house were to rob the foundations of concrete and steel to complete the upper stories, the law would no doubt interfere, compel a discontinuance of such procedure, and initiate an investigation of the builder's sanity. Yet Congress plans to follow a similar course in regard to the mining industry, and Government officials seem more disposed to cooperate with this movement than check such an alarming tendency.

Mining is a basic industry. From time immemorial the nations possessing great mineral resources have been the ones to lead civilization to higher achievements. The United States owes its prosperity and its commercial and industrial leadership to its mining industry. Upon the mining industry rests the responsibility of finding and developing our natural deposits and of producing the raw materials required in manufacturing.

That the mining industry might have adequate scientific aid the United States founded the United States Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines. These departments have repaid manyfold the funds expended in their support. They have done valuable pioneer work which has returned millions and millions of dollars to Government and industry. No branch of Federal activity has yielded more beneficial results than the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines.

Instead of being hampered by a niggardly and parsimonious budgeting policy, these branches of the Government should be fostered, their needs studied, and plans made to strengthen and amplify their organizations. But they are threatened by further incursions of a shortsighted Congress, totally blind to the highest interests of industry and alive only to the exigencies of politics.

Agricultural products in 1926 were valued at $12,000,000,000; mining products, $6,000,000,000. Yet $124,774,141 was appropriated by Congress for agriculture and but $3,937,340 for mining! Why the disparity of $91,000,000? The importance of mining surely demanded that appropriations for research in itself should be more than one-fortieth of those for agriculture.

It is time that Government leaders called a halt on such a policy. The efficiency of both the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines is threatened. The men working for these departments at salaries considerably less than could be commanded in private service can not do good work under such a thankless system. Each year finds valuable public servants leaving Government service and seeking employment for corporations. Necessary investigations must be postponed. Surveys, inquiries into water and power resources, and valuable research have to be foregone from year to year for lack of adequate financial assistance.

Public-spirited citizens, business men, broad-visioned politicians should unite to see that during the current session of Congress the mining industry secures the needed financial aid that its importance demands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 115) to print the manuscript of the laws, agreements, Executive orders, and proclamations relating to Indian Affairs, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 200) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 1281) to amend section 7 (a) of the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1119), as amended by section 2 of the act of July 3, 1926 (44 Stat. 812), so as to provide operators' permits free of cost to enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard operating Government-owned vehicles in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 201) thereon.

Mr. BROOKHART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 134) for the relief of Francis Mooney, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 202) thereon.

ELECTRIC-POWER INDUSTRY—SUPPLY OF ELECTRICAL EQUIPMENT AND COMPETITIVE CONDITIONS

Mr. BINGHAM. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably a communication from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, together with Volume II of the report of the commission on the electric-power industry entitled "Supply of Electrical Equipment and Competitive Conditions," and I ask unanimous consent that the report may be printed with illustrations as a public document. Volume I has already been so printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL JUDICIAL DISTRICT IN INDIANA

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 2752) to amend section 80 of the Judicial Code to create a new judicial district in the State of Indiana, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 199) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. I will state briefly what the bill proposes to do. It affects only the State of Indiana. It provides for a second judicial district. We have now there two judges. The bill went to the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, the subcommittee being composed of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN]. Those Senators unanimously reported the bill favorably to the full Committee on the Judiciary, which, after considering the bill, unanimously recommended a favorable report. The passage of this proposed legislation is urgently needed in Indiana at the present time. I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 19, after the word "northern," to strike out "division" and insert "district"; on page 3, line 11, after the name "October," to insert "of each year"; on the same page, line 22, after the word "on," to strike out "Sunday or"; on the same page, line 23, after the word "next," to insert "day"; at the end of the same line, after the word "following," to strike out "day not a Sunday or a legal holiday"; on page 4, line 5, after the word "concluded" and the period, to insert "A grand jury summoned to attend a term of court held in any division of either of the districts as above provided may investigate and find an indictment or make a presentment for any crime or offense committed in the district, whether or not the crime or offense was committed within the division in which the jury is in session"; and on the same page, in line 25, after the word "himself," to strike out "and" and insert "or," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 80 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 80. The State of Indiana shall constitute two judicial districts, to be known as the northern and southern districts of Indiana.

"A. For the purpose of holding terms of court the southern district of Indiana shall be divided into four divisions, constituted as follows: The Indianapolis division, which shall include the territory embraced within the counties of Bartholomew, Boone, Brown, Clinton, Decatur, Delaware, Fayette, Fountain, Franklin, Hamilton, Hancock, Hendricks, Henry, Howard, Johnson, Madison, Marion, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Randolph, Rush, Shelby, Tipton, Union, and Wayne; the Terre Haute division, which shall include the territory embraced within the counties of Clay, Greene, Knox, Owen, Parke, Putnam, Sullivan, Vermilion, and Vigo; the Evansville division, which shall include the territory embraced within the counties of Daviess, Dubois, Gibson, Martin, Perry, Pike, Posey, Spencer, Vanderburg, and Warrick; and the New Albany division, which shall include the territory embraced within the counties of Clark, Crawford, Dearborn, Floyd, Harrison, Jackson, Jefferson, Jennings, Lawrence, Ohio, Orange, Ripley, Scott, Switzerland, and Washington.

"B. For the purpose of holding terms of court the northern district shall be divided into three divisions, constituted as follows: The Fort Wayne division, which shall include the territory embraced within the counties of Adams, Allen, Blackford, De Kalb, Grant, Huntington, Jay, Lagrange, Noble, Steuben, Wells, and Whitley; the South Bend division, which shall include the territory embraced within the counties of Cass, Elkhart, Fulton, Kosciusko, Laporte, Marshall, Miami, Pulaski, St. Joseph, Starke, and Wabash; the Hammond division, which shall include the territory embraced within the counties of Benton, Carroll, Jasper, Lake, Newton, Porter, Tippecanoe, Warren, and White.

"2. Except as hereinafter in this section provided, terms of the district court for the southern district shall be held for the Indianapolis division at Indianapolis on the first Mondays of May and November of each year; for the Terre Haute division at Terre Haute on the first Mondays of April and October of each year; for the Evansville division at Evansville on the second Mondays of April and October of each year; for the New Albany division at New Albany on the third Mondays of April and October of each year. The terms of the District Court for the Northern District of Indiana shall be held for the Fort Wayne division at Fort Wayne on the first Mondays of April and December of each year; for the South Bend division at South Bend on the first Mondays of October and February of each year; for the Hammond division at Hammond on the first Mondays of March and November of each year. When the time fixed as above for the sitting of a court shall fall on a legal holiday the terms shall begin upon the next day following. Terms of the district court shall not be limited to any particular number of days nor shall it be necessary for any term to adjourn by reason of the intervention of the term of court elsewhere; but the term about to commence in another division may be postponed or adjourned over until the business of the court in session is concluded. A grand jury summoned to attend a term of court held in any division of either of the districts as above provided, may investigate and find an indictment or make a presentment for any crime or offense committed in the district, whether or not the crime or offense was committed within the division in which the jury is in session.

"3. A. The senior district judge for the district of Indiana in office immediately prior to the passage of this act shall be the district judge for the southern district as constituted by this act; the junior district judge for the district of Indiana immediately prior to the passage of this act shall be the district judge for the northern district as constituted by this act; and the district attorney and marshal for the district of Indiana in office immediately prior to the passage of this act shall be during the remainder of their present terms of office the district attorney and marshal for the southern district as constituted by this act.

"B. The President is authorized and directed to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a district attorney and a marshal for the United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana.

"4. A. The clerk of the court for the southern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Evansville, and New Albany, and the clerk of the court for the northern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Fort Wayne, South Bend, and Hammond. Such offices shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court. Each deputy clerk shall keep in his office full records of all transactions and proceedings of the district court held at that place in which the office is located.

"5. A. The following act is repealed: 'An act to authorize the appointment of an additional district judge in Indiana for the district of Indiana and to establish judicial division lines, and for other purpose, being the act approved January 16, 1925.'"

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 41, being Senate Joint Resolution 42, to amend the act of May 29, 1884, as amended, the act of February 2, 1903, and the act of March 3, 1905, as amended.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, let us dispose first of the regular routine business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. Introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 2962) for the relief of J. H. B. Wilder; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FRAZIER (by request):

A bill (S. 2963) regulating Indian allotments disposed of by will; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 2973) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to collect and dispose of, and to regulate and control, the collection of all garbage and miscellaneous refuse in the District of Columbia; and authorizing the construction and equipment within the District of Columbia of an adequate disposal plant or plants of the modern high-temperature incinerator type; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 2974) granting an increase of pension to Rose E. Connor (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2975) granting an increase of pension to Lucy E. Rumer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROUSSARD:

A bill (S. 2976) for the relief of S. Livingston & Son; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2977) for the relief of Charles L. Galloway; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 2978) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate certain buildings to the city of Tucson, Ariz.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. HOWELL, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2894) for the relief of Robert O. Edwards, and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO TAX REDUCTION BILL

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 1, the tax reduction bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) providing for the completion of Dam No. 2 and the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2, in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, for the manufacture and distribution of fertilizer, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE—PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to speak for a few moments on a question of personal privilege.

On yesterday the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] introduced into the RECORD three or four telegrams which he had received in connection with the proposal made to the Shipping Board by the Transoceanic Corporation. He quoted from certain remarks of mine made in connection with that company and with its proposal, which I was endeavoring to present as an example of what American enterprise and American initiative might do if they were given a fair chance and a certain amount of aid and assistance from the Government. He objected to the use of my words "concerned in" and "connected with" this company.

I regret, Mr. President, that in presenting the names of the gentlemen who had been consulted with regard to this great enterprise I used words which were liable to misconstruction. The Senator from Massachusetts was entirely within his rights in sending telegrams to these gentlemen to find out if they were connected financially or technically with this company. I regret, however, that he did not take the matter up with me and ascertain what I meant before making his charges public at a time when I was in the chair and was therefore unable to reply.

It was not my intention to convey the impression that certain gentlemen were financially connected with the enterprise or employed by it, although my remarks were subject to that interpretation. Many of the gentlemen mentioned are experts in shipping matters and are not likely to be financially connected with such an enterprise. As a matter of fact, they were experts who had been consulted by those who proposed to establish the company who, in order to get this great plan into proper shape, formed several committees to which they propounded certain technical questions. The scope of those committees was limited to the technical study of particular parts of the subject. I regret that I did not make this sufficiently clear. At the time I was chiefly interested in trying to show that this enterprise was a serious proposal; that it was not some fly-by-night scheme that had been brought in to stem the progress of the bill in which the Senator from Massachusetts was interested; that it was not a gesture, but an earnest effort to inaugurate a great enterprise which would merit the approbation of all the people of the United States, and the admiration of the world, if it could be done.

The very magnitude of the enterprise involving an investment, as proposed, by private capital of some $50,000,000 and a proposed loan from the Government of some $95,000,000 justified and demanded a most careful study of the project.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator rose to a question of personal privilege. He appears, however, to be making an argument. Does the Senator wish to debate the subject further?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not. I merely wished to state what it was I was trying to do for which I was criticized yesterday when I was in the chair and telegrams were presented in an effort to prove that my statements were not true. Does the Senator object to my doing that?

Mr. WARREN. It would not take long for the Senate and the public to understand that the distinguished Senator from Connecticut tells nothing but the truth. I do not wish to cut the Senator off, but I am waiting here expecting to call up an appropriation bill when we conclude the morning business, and I feel that I ought to remind the Senator of that fact so that he may, if he desires, suspend his argument until some other time when he can avoid interruptions.

Mr. President, I inquire whether morning business has closed?

MUNICIPAL AVIATION FIELD AT YUMA, ARIZ.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am reluctant to take the time of the Senate at this moment, but there is on the calendar a bill which should be considered soon, being Order of Business 91, Senate bill 1154, which proposes to lease to the county of Yuma, Ariz., a tract of land for a municipal aviation field. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1154) to authorize the use by the county of Yuma, Ariz., of certain public lands for a municipal aviation field, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with an amendment on page 1, line 3, after the word "Interior," to insert a comma and the words "subject to valid existing rights," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, subject to valid existing rights, be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease to the county of Yuma, Ariz., for the establishment and maintenance of a municipal aviation field, the east half of section 10 and the west half of section 11 in township 9 south, of range 23 west, of the Gila and Salt River base and meridian, Yuma County, Ariz., containing 640 acres, more or less.

SEC. 2. That said lease shall be for a period of 20 years, and be subject to renewal for a like period, on condition that the county pay to the United States a rental of $1 per year for the use of the said land: Provided, That Government departments and agencies operating aircraft shall always have free and unrestricted use of said field and the right to erect and install upon said land such structures and improvements as the heads of such departments and agencies may deem advisable, including facilities for maintaining supplies of fuel, oil, and other materials for operating aircraft, and that in case of emergency, or in event it shall be deemed advisable, the Government of the United States may assume absolute control of the management and operation of said field for military purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAINTING OF BATTLE OF FORT MOULTRIE

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 119. I desire to offer an amendment which meets the approval of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. I hope that the resolution may be passed.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, the resolution will come up regularly under the order of resolutions coming over from a previous day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be reached in the regular order of resolutions coming over from a preceding day.

Mr. BLEASE. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions to be offered, resolutions coming over from a preceding day are in order. The Chair lays before the Senate such a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 119) submitted by Mr. BLEASE on January 25, 1928, as follows:

Whereas there is hanging in the south corridor of the gallery floor of the United States Senate in the Capitol at Washington, D. C., a painting of the Battle of Fort Moultrie, which was painted in 1815 by John Blake White; and

Whereas from the position that it now occupies on the wall it is shown to great disadvantage on account of the reflection of the light as it is cast upon it from its place and position, making it almost impossible to obtain a clear view of it: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the authorities in charge of the placing and location of paintings around the Capitol and within the Senate gallery be instructed to remove the said painting of the Battle of Fort Moultrie from its present location and to put it in such position that it can be clearly seen and will be distinguishable.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from South Carolina desires to modify the resolution by inserting, after the word "distinguishable" the words "or place electric light or lights about it which will give it proper illumination."

Mr. CURTIS. There is no objection to that, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution as modified is agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL TERMS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate Senate Resolution 128, submitted yesterday by Mr. LA FOLLETTE, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from the presidential office after their second term, has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senate commends observance of this precedent by the President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has announced that he intends to address the Senate this morning, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The morning business is closed.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9481, the independent offices appropriation bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will state it.

Mr. McNARY. If that unanimous-consent agreement is made, what effect will it have upon the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will have no effect upon the unfinished business. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS IN PENNSYLVANIA COAL FIELDS

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, on the 9th day of January, 1928, I introduced Senate Resolution 105, providing for an investigation into the conditions in the coal fields of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio.

In the presentation of this resolution I want to make it very plain at the outset that I have not been impeded in the slightest degree by any Senator, and that I have received the sympathetic cooperation of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. I want to say, too, sir, that I make no criticism of the committee to which this resolution has been referred—the Interstate Commerce Committee. I recognize how busy that committee has been, and that it has been an impossibility, with the multitude of matters coming to the attention of that committee, for it thus far to act upon the resolution.

I bespeak from the committee, however, because substantially an emergency exists to-day, and because of the sum of human tragedies existing in the coal fields of Pennsylvania, that the committee at the very earliest possible moment will take up the resolution and will act upon it.

The resolution, sir, seeks many things. It desires to investigate thoroughly the situation in these coal fields. It asks for the committee to ascertain whether railroad companies are endeavoring to depress labor costs of coal produced by union mine labor; to ascertain as well whether wage contracts have been repudiated; whether there have been evictions wrongfully of the defenseless from their homes; and, generally, to ascertain the conditions in the coal fields and the reasons for those conditions, and to learn whether or not injunctions have been issued in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Involved, sir, is the charge that railroad companies have exercised their great power to coerce others into the repudiation and violation of contracts in the making of which the United States Government itself had participated; that these railroad companies have conspired to destroy a labor union; that in some instances they have refused cars to transport coal mined by union labor; that they have hammered down the price of coal, while basing their rate structure upon a much higher price; that, in fact, the present horrible conditions had their inception in a conspiracy between railroad companies and coal operators.

It is charged, sir, that injunctions have been issued, not only in violation of the Constitution but injunctions that are destructive of the fundamental rights of a free people. It is charged, sir, that the police power of the State of Pennsylvania has been shamefully abused and prostituted to the vengeance of private interests. It is charged, sir, that cruelty unspeakable has been practiced, sparing neither the aged, the sick, the weak, nor the infirm, the mother nor the babe. These are but some of the counts in the indictment.

If those relating to the railroads and injunctions be true, then swift and certain should be the action legislatively. If tyranny in the guise of a police power exists; if private interests utilize a State constabulary solely for private gain; if helpless women and little children are ruthlessly and cruelly made to suffer; then, even more quickly and with more deadly precision, the facts should be uncovered and the guilty held up to public obloquy and punished.

I repeat, sir, I state but some of the charges. They not only warrant but demand the investigation I have asked. The innocent man or corporation involved should welcome such an investigation, and those of great wealth and power who are accused should be swarming the corridors of the Capitol clamoring for vindication. So far as I am aware, but one side is here seeking your interposition; and that fact speaks loudly in their behalf and for the passage of the resolution.

I do not assume, sir, to-day to discuss in detail the charges made; nor is it my purpose to pronounce a verdict of guilty upon the one side or the other. I speak, sir, of existing conditions in Pennsylvania—conditions which disinterested observers have painted and which, apparently, none deny.

Sir, in Pennsylvania to-day there are social revolution and economic warfare. Worse, far worse, in that great Commonwealth are all the dark evils of bloody warfare, sickness, suffering, hardship, privation, want, and hunger and the ever-attendant infamies of wrong, oppression, and tyranny.

The inception of the difficulty, sir, is admitted. The primary cause for the strike that exists in the bituminous-coal fields none deny.

In February, 1924, at the city of Jacksonville there was a gathering of those who represented the workers on the one hand and those who represented the operators on the other. Another party was present, too; and that party, in the person of the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Commerce, was the United States of America.

In February, 1924, at Jacksonville, Fla., a wage agreement was signed by the operators on the one hand, the workers on the other, with the United States Government participating in order to avert an industrial conflict; and that wage agreement, dated April 1, 1924, was to run until April 1, 1927, and was solemnly executed by both the parties in the impending contest.

That agreement thus executed; that solemn undertaking, to which, in a degree that I have indicated, the United States Government was a party; that contract was repudiated in August, 1925, almost two years before the expiration of its terms, by the Pittsburgh Coal Co., of the State of Pennsylvania; and that repudiation and violation of the solemn agreement thus made by the Pittsburgh Coal Co. was the beginning, sir, of the terrible warfare that since has continued in the State of Pennsylvania and was the primary cause of the conditions that beggar description and that horrify every disinterested, humane individual that exist to-day in that State.

I start, therefore—and those who are interested in this resolution start—in a résumé of what has transpired in Pennsylvania, with a repudiation and a violation of a contract by the Pittsburgh Coal Co. That is the primary cause. One of the contributing, continuing causes I will indicate to you in just a moment.

That there may be no doubt about the primary cause, I read to you an interview which Mr. Vice President Lesher, of the Pittsburgh Coal Co., published in a very remarkable series of articles in the New York Daily News by Mr. Lowell Limpus—an interview which I take to be entirely true, for there has been no denial whatsoever of it either by the gentleman concerned or by any representative or officer of the Pittsburgh Coal Co.

In that interview, published in the New York Daily News December 29, 1927, Vice President Lesher says:

> We signed the Jacksonville scale contract; yes. But there's an ethical and an economical view of it. Ethically, I'll admit we were perhaps bound, even though our lawyers said they saw a way out. But economically we couldn't live up to it. It meant bankruptcy on account of the competition with the nonunion mines of West Virginia. We had to terminate it.

I do not quarrel with the economic view that may be asserted by the Pittsburgh Coal Co. or any official of the Pennsylvania coal fields. I do not pretend to say that their view, so far as the making of money is concerned, is at all inaccurate; but I do quarrel with the view that says "ethically we are bound, but economically we finally reached the conclusion that we would violate our solemn obligation."

Mr. President, put the shoe on the other foot. I recall dimly an injunction of a Federal court that dealt not with a contract that had been repudiated or violated by a great, wealthy operator but with contracts that had been made and executed by nonunion men, providing that they would not enter the union when they undertook employment during a strike.

I recall the speedy justice, or injustice, whichever you desire to call it, with which an injunction was issued against the men who sought to have those nonunion men join a union, and the injunction was based upon the theory of the sanctity of contract, and that that sanctity, under all hazards, should be upheld.

If the sanctity of contract, sir, had been upheld by the Pittsburgh Coal Co. and those who were acting with it during the years that contract was to run, probably there would have been no such scenes as are witnessed to-day in the State of Pennsylvania, no such horrors, no such suffering, no such privation, no such hunger, no such want, no such cruelty. But the sanctity of contract was not to be observed when economically it was not profitable to observe it. So, in August, 1925, the Pittsburgh Coal Co. deliberately violated and repudiated its solemn written engagement, written under the supervision of the United States of America and the Government that presides at Washington.

Again, sir, what is the situation to-day as to these conditions? Who to-day is responsible for their continuance? There will be no denial on this floor, I venture, of what is actually happening in Pennsylvania. There will be no question as to who is right and who is wrong in the dispute. Into that I will not enter, except from the admitted documents, as I have done thus far.

There will be no dispute, there will be no controversy, about the want and the hunger, and about the suffering, that exist in Pennsylvania to-day. Who, I say, can be charged as contributing to a continuance of those conditions?

I hold in my hand a letter from the Department of Labor of this Government. That department tells of its efforts to bring about in some fashion a composition of the differences that existed in Pennsylvania of the efforts officially made at the instance of the President of the United States. The people who refused to meet even to discuss what might be done; those, sir, who declined to have anything to do with our Government asking that there should be some composition of the differences were the great coal operators of the State of Pennsylvania and the great operators alone.

Their reasons may have seemed good from their standpoint. Their reasons, sir, indeed, may be logically good. I do not care. There was the effort, under the supervision of our Government itself, to cure this situation, and these operators would not come half the way.

I read:

JANUARY 31, 1928.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This letter is in response to your telephonic inquiry for information relative to an invitation to a joint conference sent by me to representatives of the coal operators and officers of the miners' organization concerned in the existing strike situation in the bituminous-coal fields of central and western Pennsylvania, Ohio, and northern West Virginia.

A committee representing organized labor, including mine workers, visited the President on November 17 and made a request for the calling of a joint conference of operators and miners for the purpose of endeavoring to end the present strike. The request was referred by the President to the Secretary of Labor.

I gave the matter thorough consideration, going carefully into the various factors entering into the whole situation and advising with representatives of the department who had been keeping in close touch with events in the strike fields. It was then decided to issue a call for such conference.

On December 9 I sent notices to the coal operators and to officers of coal operators' associations, to national officers of the mine workers, as well as to representatives of the miners in the districts affected, calling a conference in the Department of Labor, Tuesday, December 13, 1927, for the purpose of discussing all phases of the bituminous coal situation, and particularly with reference to the difficulties in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and northern West Virginia. While the miners' representatives all accepted the invitation to attend the conference, the operators for the most part declined to attend. It is true that there was representation from each of the fields invited, but with a single exception there was no representation from the more important companies and coal operators' associations. This lack of attendance prevented any constructive action looking to a solution of the problems of the industry or to the adoption of any plan or plans that might be used as a start toward the reaching of a settlement of the existing strike.

The joint conference was adjourned on the afternoon of the first day's session, but a committee of operators and miners was requested to remain. In view of the comparatively small annual tonnage represented at the conference and by the committee members it was evident no real progress could be made, and after two days the committee adjourned subject to call.

We in the department diligently sought some method by which this strike might be settled, but the failure of the great bulk of the operators or of any of the operators' association officials to attend made it impossible to make any real progress toward the solution of the problem separating the mine workers and operators in these districts.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES J. DAVIS,
Secretary of Labor.

We start, therefore, in the discussion of this question, first, with the fact that the inception of the difficulty was the violation and repudiation of the Jacksonville agreement solemnly made by the coal operators, violated and repudiated by them; and, secondly, that when the United States Government intervened and endeavored to effect a compromise, these same coal operators who had violated and repudiated their solemn contract refused to meet and refused to deal in any fashion concerning the subject. Thus we may leave, with a prima facie showing at least, the situation concerning the inception of the difficulty and the contributing cause to the continuance of the sad conditions existing in Pennsylvania.

Now, as to these conditions, I rest not upon any prejudiced view. I do not seek from any partisan in this matter to relate the conditions to this body. I turn to those who have been disinterested investigators in the last month or two, and who, investigating for the sole purpose of ascertaining the truth, have written their stories in various newspapers of this land.

Mr. Lowell Limpus I had the opportunity of talking to for a very brief period. He told me, what I assume to be the truth, that he was in reality a conservative, and that he had gone into the coal fields at the instance of the Chicago Tribune and the New York Daily News for the purpose of ascertaining the facts, and prejudiced, if prejudiced at all, against the workers and the stories that had been related concerning their conditions. But a brief period showed him a state of things that aroused every feeling of humanity that he or any other man could possess. So I read from his summing up of his month's investigation, appearing in the New York Daily News on December 27, 1927. He says:

I have just returned from a visit to hell in Pennsylvania. I have seen horrible things there; things which I almost hesitate to enumerate and describe. I can scarcely expect my story to be believed. I did not believe it myself, when the situation was first outlined to me. Then I went into the soft-coal camps of western and central Pennsylvania and saw for myself.

For nearly a month Herbert J. McCory, of the News staff, and I made the rounds of the strike-cursed towns. Many times it seemed impossible to think that we were in modern, civilized America.

We saw thousands of women and children literally starving to death. We found hundreds of destitute families living in crudely constructed, bare board shacks. They had been evicted from their homes by the coal companies. We unearthed a system of despotic tyranny reminiscent of Czar-ridden Siberia at its worst. We found police brutality and industrial slavery. We discovered the weirdest flock of injunctions that ever emanated from American temples of justice.

And while you may think this language is expressive, one of these injunctions, as I proceed, I shall read to you; read probably without comment. The lawyers in this body may, without my speaking concerning the subject at all, understand something of what is happening at our very doors.

Oh, Mr. President, we can meet, and we can sob, and we can weep salty tears over the fate of peoples in the Balkans; we can resolute day after day and day after day to outlaw war; our women can gather by the thousands in conference in the city of Washington and pass resolutions, and with a strange mental strabismus we look across the oceans and tell countries beyond what to do. But are we so futile and so forgetful, are we so thoughtless in this day that is ours, in making money, that we can not at our very door, and right here at the boundary line, practically, of our District, understand that there is real warfare, babes dying and mothers straving, every horror of bloody strife? Can not the United States Government, or the Senate, or this Congress turn aside for a moment from contemplating the plight of peoples abroad to alleviating the suffering and remedying the wrongs of those at home?

I continue to read for just an instant from Mr. Limpus's summing up:

We unearthed evidence of terrorism and counterterrorism; of mob beatings and near lynchings; of dishonesty, graft, and heartlessness.

We located machine guns and tear-gas bombs, prepared to back up the ready rifles that wait to crush any rebellion of hunger-crazed men. And near by—

This is the cry that should come to the Senate and to the Congress and to this people; this is the reason I am standing here, my residence 3,000 miles from the scene, asking that there should be action, and speedy action.

And near by we heard the children of those men, striking miners, crying for food in empty kitchens.

That is the story that is written by every investigator who has gone into these coal fields, not by one alone but by every one.

The New York Evening World has recently had an investigator in that territory, Mr. Basil Manly, able, active, honest journalist, and he writes in exactly the same fashion and concerning the same things as does Mr. Limpus. In Mr. Manly's article of January 26 in the New York Evening World we find this:

PITTSBURGH, January 26.—Here in the heart of the bituminous-coal fields of the Nation, in a territory covering a large part of three great States, half a million men, women, and children are matching their capacity to go without adequate food, clothing, and shelter against the ability of the coal corporations to pass dividends and avoid bankruptcy.

With the thermometer hovering around zero while this is being written, a hundred thousand striking miners' families in the coal fields of central and western Pennsylvania, northern West Virginia, and Ohio are living on an average allowance of $3 a week or less from the union treasury.

In the Pittsburgh district, the center of the contest, the standard amount allotted is $1 a week for each adult and 35 cents for each child. In the outlying districts, where the struggle is less intense, the allowance is even smaller.

MANY WAIT EVICTION

A few of the striking miners are living in their own homes, bought and paid for during the period of war prosperity. Some are still living in company houses, with bonds of $750 per family posted to guarantee rent, while they await the day when the coal company will no longer tolerate their presence and start eviction proceedings. In many of the coal camps in the Pittsburgh district, however, the striking miners and their families have been evicted from the company property and forced to find shelter wherever they could.

Sometimes they have been driven out to make room for strikebreakers, but in a large number of cases there has been no such excuse. Thousands of miners with their wives and children have been evicted from camps where no attempt is being made to operate. The union's offer to post bond to cover rent has been refused; families have been driven out by the sheriff and his deputies in the dead of winter, and every door and window in the houses has been boarded up as in a deserted village. This makes for bitterness. A man who has lived 5, 10, even 20 years in a company house can not easily accept the logic of a situation which makes the corporation evict when it has no use for the vacant houses. But this is industrial war and there is no quarter.

More than 12,000 of these evicted persons in the Pittsburgh district alone are already living in barracks hastily built by the union out of unmatched boards and tar paper to care for the families who had no other shelter. And every day new barracks are being constructed to meet the new evictions. Located usually on neutral property across the road from the company town they stand confronting the company houses filled with strikebreakers or with every door and window boarded up. The very sight helps to increase the friction.

One room, split in two by a rough board partition, is the standard rule in these miners' barracks for each evicted family regardless of size. There may be three children. There may be seven. All must be crowded into this one room. No provisions are made for the single men. They can shift for themselves.

There is no race suicide—little, if any, birth control—among the miners. Five, six, seven, and eight children are common. Here, therefore, is the typical situation we find in these barrack rooms into which the evicted families in their desperation have crowded. In front of the dividing partition is the cook stove which furnishes heat for the room and fire to cook the food whenever there is anything to cook. Near the one window is the small table at which the family, in relays, can eat. Two chairs, with perhaps a sewing machine or some other prized article, complete the furnishing of the "living room." Behind the partition is the "sleeping room." Here every inch of space is covered with some kind of bed—a double bed for the man and wife, into which one or more of the babies are crowded, with cots, cribs, and pallets for the older boys and girls.

NO LACK OF VENTILATION

Privacy? No. Overcrowded? Yes. But there is no lack of ventilation. With the temperature below freezing and a 30-mile wind howling down the valleys and across the hillsides, there is warmth and a measure of comfort in snuggling up close as the cold air rushes in through the unmatched boards.

The union furnishes coal, usually dug by the strikers themselves from some neighboring hillside mine on a royalty basis; but the $3-a-week allowance from the union must furnish food, clothing, and other necessaries. For a family of five this means a little less than 9 cents per person per day. It is less than 3 cents per meal. Think of what you can buy for 3 cents. The menu must be simple and monotonous—bread and beans, bread and more beans, with occasionally a hunk of soup meat that can be cooked with plenty of water, potatoes, and seasoning to give a little variety to the bread and beans. There is no milk for the children, even for the babies, except what they are able to get from their mother's breast.

The children are hungry and underfed. And the mothers, who turn aside from the table in order that their children may have a little more, are even hungrier and more undernourished. That is why the Clergymen's Fund for Miners' Relief of Pittsburgh, representing all denominations, has just issued the following statement after an intensive investigation of all the adjacent camps:

That statement by the clergyman of Pittsburgh I have before me, and it indicates in some small way what is the condition in these fields. But another investigator as well, Miss Fannie Hurst, in the Hearst papers, speaks of these things, as follows:

Regardless of who is right and who is wrong in the issues at stake, this uncivilized spectacle of families evicted from their homes and living like dogs among slops in kennels opposite the very thresholds of their vacant homes is wrong.

CHILDREN GO HUNGRY

Children are hungry and sore-eyed in these kennels. Mothers have not the milk for their wretched babies.

The civilization which countenances the wretchedness that exists along the hems of this fine city becomes a horror.

The Congress that permits this wretchedness at its very doors, when it weeps its tears over what happens across the ocean, is far from fearlessly doing its duty, and is not deserving the confidence of the people who sent it here.

I read to you now from the clergymen of the city of Pittsburgh, clergymen representing every sect and every denomination. Signed, I believe, is this letter by substantially every minister in the city. At any rate, signed it is by a very large number. This is an appeal to charity by these clergymen:

We are appealing to you on behalf of the suffering people whose need is desperate and whose plight is deplorable, the families of coal miners, especially their women and children. There have been many families found, by the personal inquiry and visitation of our experienced social workers, to be really destitute. Children are going half naked and babies are starving for milk.

This is rich Pennsylvania to-day. I do not say it is the fault of one class or the fault of another. That is not a part of my purpose in speaking to you here. I do say that on the evidence before us here, of the clergymen of the city of Pittsburgh, there are hundreds of families who have not enough clothing and not enough to eat. O God, what an indictment in the face of the prosperity that we prate about in our political speeches! What an indictment it is of our futility and slothfulness and of those of us who, forgetful of all else, have the delusion that when we close the door of a winter evening all the world is warm.

This is the testimony of the men who, investigating because they represent Divine Providence, decline to take sides in the controversy except to minister to the suffering and the want and the privation and the horror, and every clergyman of every denomination unites in Pittsburgh in begging for aid because there are women and children without clothes and without enough to eat.

Children are going half naked—

and babes are starving for milk.

Just think of it! Just think of it! In this magnificent Commonwealth just beyond us here babes are starving for milk because, forsooth, their parents may be in industrial warfare with great power and with great wealth.

It is these that I want to relieve and it is this sort of thing that we here, exerting the power that is ours legislatively and otherwise, can relieve. It is a question only of whether or not we have the courage to relieve it in the teeth and in the face of the millions that are doing the deeds.

I read from this letter of the clergymen just another sentence or two:

Bad enough at present, the situation grows worse, and the wretched harvest of malnutrition and exposure will be reached in the months to come. Some miners' families can get along without assistance. We ask no help for them. Careful investigation continues as fast as our limited staff permits, and the completed story is obviously going to be appalling.

I put in evidence this entire communication without reading the remainder of it, with the names of the clergymen, 40 in number, I think, who have signed it. I ask that the whole of it may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The communication is as follows:

[Fund administered by Experienced Social Workers Old South School, Ross and Diamond Streets, Pittsburgh, Pa. Telephone Atlantic 5485]

CLERGYMEN FUND FOR MINERS' RELIEF,
January 19, 1928.

DEAR FRIEND: We are appealing to you on behalf of suffering people whose need is desperate and whose plight is deplorable, the families of coal miners, especially their women and children.

There have been many families found, by the personal inquiry and visitation of our experienced social workers, to be really destitute. By actual contact with these people, housed not only in temporary barracks but in all sorts of makeshift shelters, in 18 mining communities out of 70 or more in the county 482 families have already been found who have not nearly enough to eat and to wear. Children are going half naked and babies are starving for milk. Bad enough at present, the situation grows worse, and the wretched harvest of malnutrition and exposure will be reached in the months to come. Some miners' families can get along without assistance. We ask no help for them.

Careful investigation continues as fast as our limited staff permits, and the completed story is obviously going to be appalling.

If you have not already done so, will you not urge your people to give generously to this cause? If possible, take a public offering next Sunday, or as early as you can. All checks and money should be paid to Mr. Harry G. Samson, treasurer, 537 Neville Street, Pittsburgh.

Please bear in mind three things: First, that the relief so far provided by all other organizations and interested persons has not been at all adequate. Second, that the response to our first appeal has been very small, amounting to less than $1,000, perhaps because the appeal was issued just at the close of the holiday season and has not been followed up. Third, that the work of relief is being conducted by trained and experienced social workers from the established social agencies of the city and county. No indiscriminate "charity" is dispensed. No spasmodic "basket" relief is countenanced. No money is handled by the families who are helped. The needs of each family are studied and budgeted. Where necessary, credit is provided at local stores. Continuous relief, so long as the need requires, is the purpose. This mode of procedure is guaranteed by the trained personnel of the central relief committee. Relief is limited to Allegheny County.

We take no side in any controversy in the coal industry, but we do attempt to speak for those who can not speak for themselves, and we do appeal for generous funds in the name of our common humanity. Please do your best.

Mr. JOHNSON. I read now from the letter of Miss Allen, a social worker engaged in the Sunday schools of Pittsburgh, and I read it as indicative of the conditions which exist in that territory. It is addressed to Mr. Ellis Searles, Raleigh Hotel, Washington, D. C., and reads as follows:

MY DEAR MR. SEARLES: The Young Woman's Bible Class of the Beechview Methodist Episcopal Church think you might be interested in an account of our activities among the destitute in the mining sections near this city, as we were the first to give outside organized relief in mines 2, 3, and Coverdale and Horning. The class made an investigation on December 2. We found large families of bright children, who were without shoes and stockings, without sufficient food or clothing. Conditions almost unbelievable exist in America. We entered the home of one union miner, where nine children were as above described; but the home, the mother, and the children were noticeably clean, and the small children were ill from lack of nourishment. We told the mine leader who went with us that our effort must be independent of the controversy. Our motive would be to relieve suffering wherever we found it, working absolutely upon a humanitarian basis. Mr. Manuel Wood, union mine leader at mine 2, impressed the committee as being a fair, honest man, whom the children loved, took us in the home of a nonunion miner who was working every day, where we found greater destitution than in the other homes. We told the little children, who seemed frightened, that we loved them because God loved them and would return with food and clothing. At Coverdale we found the first babe born in the barracks the night before without any clothing, the wind howling through the crevices between the boards. We returned to Beechview with sad hearts but a firm determination to do what we could in a small way. We opened a receiving station, advertised the immediate need. It seems the heavens opened, and in less than three weeks we had distributed 1,000 pairs of shoes and stockings, every other article of clothing in large quantities. The quality of most of it denoted sacrifice on the part of contributors.

Just note that. The quality of the clothing that was given to these Sunday school workers denoted sacrifice on the part of the contributors—the poor aiding the poor.

We secured the distribution of one pint of milk per day in 50 homes where there were children 1 year old and under. We distributed 500 baskets filled with substantial groceries and a generous Christmas treat for 1,200 children, nearly all the candy being donated. Four hundred dollars in cash sent to us without solicitation, with which we bought meat and flour; other groceries mostly donated. We went to the mines with each distribution and our experience gave us a much higher regard for the miner. We found instances of self-sacrifice such as we had never seen. For instance, one man said to another, "Here, John, you have 10 children and harder times than I have. You take my basket."

A union miner went out at our request and brought in five children from the nonunion home of which I told you. We gave them sandwiches and little cakes taken from our lunch and fitted them all out from the clothing we had taken out. I wish you could have seen their faces when they left the room, especially little Johnny, 4 years old, who held his old ragged clothes in a paper bag, which also contained good underwear, dressed in a brown velvet suit, good overcoat, shoes and stockings, and a red woolen cap with a tassel on it, all of which fitted him as if made for him. When he looked at us and said "Goodbye," we felt amply rewarded for all our hard work.

Going on to Coverdale we were happy to supply the first born in the barracks with abundant new outfit, which brought tears of joy to the mother.

I apologize for this tedious account of our activity by so few in such a short time. It is to say that the great heart of the people is touched and the sympathy of the people is expressed in a greater degree than upon any previous demand. The coal industry being a public service, surely the Government will come to the rescue of these people, who are honest and industrious and must not be allowed to perish.

The most important factor of all is the effect of these conditions upon the physical, intellectual, and spiritual life of the children, who are the citizens of to-morrow. America must not fail in the name of Him who said: "As ye did it unto the least of these, My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

Very sincerely,

IDA L. ALLEN,
Teacher and Treasurer of Mine Relief Committee.
Mrs. H. G. SCHROEDER,
Chairman Committee.

So is the story told all along the line. I have not time to read all that I have before me; I can not, indeed, read the editorials that recently have been published; but here I should like to place in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the editorial appearing on December 31, 1927, in the New York News, which is entitled "Hell in Pennsylvania," and, in addition to that and following it, an editorial appearing in the Evening World of New York on January 28, 1828, which is entitled "An American tragedy."

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From New York News of December 31, 1927]

HELL IN PENNSYLVANIA

That is no sensational catchline, no windy epithet, which the News investigators apply to the situation in the Pennsylvania coal-strike area. Eighty-five thousand striking miners, their wives and families, are arrayed against the operators.

A strike is a strike, and a certain amount of hardship and rough work goes with every strike.

This Pennsylvania conflict, though, combines the worst features of Passaic, West Virginia, and Colorado. It has gone on for six months. Coal and iron police, commissioned by the State but paid by the coal companies, terrorize whole counties. Families are kicked out of company shacks for nonpayment of rent. Children slowly starve. The Red Cross refuses to go into the district—though the Legion, "Y," and Salvation Army show no such reluctance to aid strikers.

All this is hell, if anything on earth is.

What is to blame? Overproduction of coal? Competition among the operators? Too many coal miners for the amount of coal which the industry can sell?

In most American industries employers and employed work together with less and less friction.

Can't this rotten spot in the industrial system be cauterized, cut out, sterilized? One of the operators told the News men that he hated himself for his treatment of the strikers and that he believed the whole affair to be wrong and unjust.

That is a beginning. He can not be the only operator who privately holds this opinion. Why not a getting together of coal operators the country over to install decency and justice in the coal fields?

[From the Evening World, Saturday, January 28, 1928]

AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY

Because of the far-reaching importance of the struggle now in process in the bituminous coal fields of Pennsylvania, no one should miss the vivid and carefully written articles by Basil Manly in the Evening World. He is a conscientious and an honest investigator, in whose reliability men like President Wilson and William Howard Taft have had implicit confidence.

These articles explain not only the tragedy of the struggle in process but indicate clearly the purpose. The clear intent is to wreck the organization of the miners and reduce them to the condition of men forced to take as wages, for a precarious work, whatever the mine owners see fit to pay, and to work under whatever conditions the owners may determine. The success of such a program, connived in by Government and accepted by the public, would be to make radicals of men who are only asking for such wages and working conditions as will make possible the proper care of their families and the education of their children.

In this work of smashing the miners' organization are engaged some of the most powerful capitalistic organizations in America, the Mellon and the Rockefeller interests. This may go far to explain the indifference of the Government.

Aside from the merits of this struggle, there is something to be said of the methods. There are many thousands of women and children who are subjected to suffering. Should the companies decide, as they likely will, to resort to evictions, this means tragedy to which a Nation of humane people can not remain indifferent. There are differences between legal and moral rights.

In Mr. Manly's article of Friday last we have the story of the private army of armed men described as resorting to Cossack methods which can not in decency and justice be longer ignored. There is nothing new about these private armies. They have operated with impunity for years, not only in the coal fields of Pennsylvania but in those of West Virginia, where their methods have been denounced by official investigating committees of legislatures and Congresses. And yet they abide. These armies represent private greed and private vengeance. They are manned to a considerable extent by irresponsible people. And they are intolerable reminders of feudalism. Private property must be protected, of course, but that is the duty of the State, not of individuals using their own judgment.

We commend the Manly articles to readers as illuminating explanations of just what is going on in a hidden corner of this country.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I received this morning from a place called Saltillo, in Pennsylvania—I do not know where it is—a letter from a Baptist preacher, who says:

DEAR SENATOR JOHNSON: We are addressing you in regard to the proposed congressional investigation into the condition of the miners in central and western Pennsylvania and Ohio and West Virginia.

We wish to assure you that the people in our district, in the central Pennsylvania district for whom we are writing, are profoundly grateful for what you have done and are about to do in their behalf.

The conditions are unbelievable; it beggars all description the misery now prevailing in these fields; after one has done all he can to describe it, "the half has not been told."

Wholesale evictions in midwinter from the coal company houses, with no alternative but rough, wooden shacks, with hardly any food and scarce fuel, terrorism and counterterrorism, beatings and clubbings by the coal and iron cops, with no protection from the sheriff and many times the courts, these men have no recourse.

Hell is enlarging itself in Pennsylvania; the pot is boiling here, and when it boils over there is sure to be bloodshed.

Enlargement must come from some place soon, and they think they see their day coming in what you are contemplating.

We are unable to get the desired and needed help from the Red Cross, into which organization these men have paid thousands of dollars. Our own county officials ignore these things, and some of our men have been unlawfully held in jail.

This petition is written in behalf of 17,000 citizens.

Fraternally,

GEORGE HINE,
Pastor Baptist Church, Saltillo, Pa.

I could follow, sir, interminably with the stories that have been sent me, but I content myself with one or two excerpts from Mr. Limpus's tale of what is transpiring in the district. He writes under date of December 28, 1927:

A typical instance—and not an exaggerated one—was encountered in the flimsy barracks which house the evicted strikers at the edge of the town. (Incidentally, we saw 10 of these structures there, each housing three families and three sheltering two families each.)

In one the noon meal was in progress. A young American mother with three babes, aged, respectively, 4, 3, and 1. Those children were hungry. The mother had exactly three soda crackers for that meal. She had soaked them in a plate of weak tea, * * * and each child was getting one soaked cracker, fed to it with a spoon. The mother—nothing. That is Rossiter.

I pass by the stories of brutalities, because I recognize that violence and brutality may exist upon both sides of a strike, and with them I do not care to deal to-day. They are related in the tale that I have just indicated to you as appearing in the New York News. I read from the story of Mr. Limpus, January 1:

There can be no doubt of the utter misery of the strikers' families. In town after town we found their pitiable barracks, each with its quota of destitute. Families of four were each given a single room in the flimsy board barracks, chicken-coop-like in construction.

Everywhere barracks were tenanted by misery.

Under date of January 3, 1928—here is the nub of the whole question, or what ought to be for men like ourselves—he states:

THE CHILDREN CONSTITUTE THE TRAGEDY OF THE PENNSYLVANIA COAL STRIKE

Saddest of all is the plight of the 650 youngsters in the barracks at Russellton. It is the town of child martyrs. Dozens of sad-eyed, pinch-faced, ragged little urchins surround the visitor at every step. They are pitiful, appealing, hungry little waifs. They drag out a wretched existence almost within sound of the roaring foundries of the city of Pittsburgh.

Mr. President, I have been handed a telegram which was sent by the representative of the United Mine Workers of America, at Brownsville, Pa., to Mr. George Lewis, who at present represents the miners in Washington. I do not assume to say that the facts are as may be related, but I am advised that they can be substantiated. However, as a statement of a party interested, I read as of date of January 7, this telegram:

The Vesta Coal Co. has a gang of gunmen evicting the coal miners from their houses at its No. 6 mine. These women and children have no shelter. I appealed to General Manager Joe Edwards to stay evictions until Monday, when we would have barracks sufficiently erected to shelter these people. I asked in the name of humanity not to put these women and children on the roadside these cold nights, and Sunday he answered, "To hell with humanity." He hoped they would "freeze and rot." These people have been in the employ of that company for more than 10 years.

The facts as related to me in regard to the Vesta region are that there was an agreement that a few days' grace should be given in the matter of evictions there during the coldest part of the winter, but that agreement was violated and the evictions, nevertheless, took place. So much, sir, for the conditions existing in Pennsylvania. None, I take it, will deny them.

I come now to another phase of the argument which has been presented in this matter by those who are interested in it, and will quote a word or two that is said by the mine workers with regard to the railroads and the effect of wages that are endeavored to be paid there. These miners claim:

When the present freight-rate structure of the country was established by the Interstate Commerce Commission the large railroads told the commission they were paying from $2.20 to $2.40 a ton for their locomotive coal, and that this fact should be taken into consideration by the commission in rate making. Freight rates were based upon that price for coal. Now, however, these same railroads have hammered down the price of coal until they are arbitrarily refusing to pay more than $1.60 to $1.75 a ton for coal, thus reducing their own operating cost, but they are still collecting the same rates for hauling freight and passengers that they charged when they paid $2.20 to $2.40 for coal. Coal companies can not pay decent, living wages to their miners and sell their coal at $1.60 a ton.

Again, these miners assert—

During the years when the Pittsburgh Coal Co. operated its mines with union miners and paid the union scale of wages, its average cost of production of coal was $1.89 per ton. Since it repudiated its agreement with the United Mine Workers of America and employed strike breakers its production cost has been $3.78 per ton. These figures are taken from the reports of the Pittsburgh Coal Co. A similar situation exists with reference to other companies that followed the lead of the Pittsburgh Coal Co., under the lash of the Pennsylvania Railroad, the New York Central, and other interstate railroad companies that are parties to this conspiracy.

The Pittsburgh Coal Co. has made—

So these mine workers assert—

The Pittsburgh Coal Co. has made three wage reductions since it repudiated its contract and adopted a nonunion wage-cutting policy. The last of these was on January 10, 1928. The minimum wage now paid is $3.30 a day for outside labor and the maximum is $5.05 for inside labor.

When the Jacksonville agreement was in effect and the maximum wage rate was $7.50 a day the mine workers were employed an average of only 160 days a year. This gave them a total annual income of about $1,200 per man. After deducting an average of $150 a year for the cost of powder, tools, and supplies the net earnings for the year were about $1,050 per man.

When these coal companies instituted their wage-cutting policy they represented to their employees that reduced wages would enable them to sell more coal and give their employees steady employment. But the fact is their mines are now operating only half time or less, even under their low-wage policy. This proves that cheap wages will not solve the problem of the coal industry.

There is a singular situation in Pennsylvania in reference to what are called coal or iron police. These coal and iron police have been described to me in a very interesting and a very important letter written to me, when I asked for facts concerning the conditions in Pennsylvania, by ex-Governor Gifford Pinchot; and he describes these police—shall I say with greater severity? At any rate, he describes them with an accuracy, sir, that is far, far greater in the mere statement of the fact than all the adjectives that have been used by coal miners against that State police.

Mr. Pinchot writes me, under date of January 26, 1928:

In reply to your letter of January 25, asking about the past and present situation in the soft-coal fields of Pennsylvania I am very glad, indeed, to make the following statement, which you are entirely at liberty to use in any way you may see fit.

In strikes and suspensions in the mines before I took office as Governor of Pennsylvania in 1923 the State took the side of the employer as a matter of course. It gave the employer the whole police power of the State to use in substantially any way he chose to use it. It commissioned as special police officers, known as coal and iron police and authorized to exercise the police power of the State, any men the employer chose to name, including in countless cases thugs and gunmen of the most depraved and despicable type.

These men were not protectors of peace but inciters to violence, for their interest was to bring about disorders in order to prolong their own employment. Consequently they used violence to provoke violence, so that they might be needed to repress it.

Within 10 days after taking office I learned that my predecessor, during the last two years of his term, had issued some 6,000 commissions as private policemen to men named by the companies.

These commissions gave the men who held them the right to use the police powers of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. They were issued in every case, so far as I could learn, without investigation of the character or record of the men who were authorized to exercise the police power of the State. The names were submitted by the companies and the commissions were issued without inquiry or question. These men were paid by the companies. There were more than twenty times as many of them as there were of the State police. At times, in addition, numbers of other men, also named and paid by the companies, were sworn in as deputy sheriffs. As such these men were beyond even the governor's control. In many cases sheriffs were paid a commission by the companies of so much per day for each of such deputies. The usual commission was $1 a day for each deputy.

Think of this traffic in law officers! It seems incredible, and it was because the thing seemed to me incredible that I wrote to the ex-Governor of Pennsylvania to ascertain what really were the facts. Governor Pinchot shows this incredible situation has actually existed, and not only that but his reforms of the wrong have been practically undone.

His letter proceeds:

Immediate study of the records of the men commissioned as private policemen by my predecessor resulted in eliminating gunmen, thugs, felons, professional trouble makers, and other undesirables to the extent of two-thirds of the whole number so appointed, and in a complete change of the method of appointment.

Instead of nearly 6,000 promiscuous and largely criminal characters that held commissions as private policemen when I went into office there were 2,000 reasonably decent officers when I left, and the State had made a thorough investigation of every one of them.

The result was that the very numerous abuses committed by these private officers, which had become so common as to be almost customary, ceased altogether. In spite of two great strikes in the anthracite region, and almost continuous strikes in the bituminous region, there was scarcely the slightest disorder in either field during my four years, and what there was could have occurred equally well if the mines had been working full time.

Numerous reports of happenings in the bituminous strike regions of central and western Pennsylvania which have reached me since I left office (if, as I believe, they rest upon a basis of fact) make it clear that the policy of justice to both sides has been discarded and that the policy of using the power of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to break strikes has again been put into effect.

Unless these reports are false the authority of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is being now, and has been for a year, employed to break the present bituminous strike; many gunmen and other bad characters have reappeared in the strike regions bearing the commissions of the State and exercising its powers as coal and iron police, and numerous assaults upon men, women, and children have been committed by men especially commissioned to keep the peace and enforce the law.

On several occasions I have been informed by officials of the United Mine Workers of America that the present administration in Pennsylvania has refused to give them the names of these private policemen, on the plea that the names of men intrusted with the police power of the Commonwealth did not constitute a public record. To keep secret the names of policemen is a new thing in my experience.

I am informed also that the United Mine Workers of America are prepared to supply proof, in the form of approximately 200 affidavits and by the testimony of witnesses, of the commission of numerous assaults upon peaceable striking coal miners, and of the injury of men, women, and children from such assaults.

I may add there, sir, by way of digression, that I have exactly 218 affidavits of that character. I have refrained, however, from going into the question of violence that has been committed by one side or the other in this controversy. I refrain because these things need not be demonstrated in order to permit a resolution to be adopted and a full and a complete investigation to be had.

I recognize what a strike is, and I recognize what may come out of that strike; but I do not recognize that there is any strike on the face of the earth or any industrial dispute which authorizes the police power of a State to be unfairly or unjustly operated and maintained and paid for by private individuals for private purposes, and that police power to do exactly as private gain and private profit and private individuals may direct.

While I am thoroughly aware—

of the ease with which charges can be made, especially in the heat of a bitter industrial conflict, I am convinced that the evidence with which I have been made acquainted is entirely sufficient to justify or even to require an investigation of the facts, such as is provided for in your resolution.

I inclose herewith copy of an article which appeared in the New Republic of October 12, 1927, describing an attack made upon miners and their families peaceably assembled, although in technical violation of a proclamation of the sheriff. If the facts alleged in that article are false, they ought to be disproved. If they are true, something ought to be done about them.

During my term of office a certain number of evictions of striking miners and their families were carried out by operators in western Pennsylvania in spite of repeated protests on my part. But the evictions which took place in my time were unimportant compared with the wholesale evictions, amounting, I am told, to 12,000 families, which have taken place since.

These evictions, whether or not they are technically justified under the law, lead to the severest hardships for women, children, and elderly and sick persons, and are the direct cause of many deaths which would not otherwise take place. The Pittsburgh Coal Co., the largest soft-coal company in America, controlled by the Mellons, is responsible for a large percentage of them.

The executive committee of the clergymen's fund for miners' relief, representing ministers of 10 Protestant denominations, and the Roman Catholic, Greek Orthodox, and Jewish churches, including three bishops, said in an appeal printed on January 20, 1928:

"We are appealing to you on behalf of the suffering people whose need is desperate and whose plight is deplorable, the families of coal miners, especially their women and children. * * *

"Children are going half-naked and babies are starving for milk. Bad enough at present, the situation grows worse, and the wretched harvest of malnutrition and exposure will be reaped in the months to come."

Those parts of central and western Pennsylvania which depend on the soft-coal industry are in a very serious condition. The prosperity of many of them is ruined, and the suffering of the miners is reflected in widespread hardships throughout whole communities.

Personally I believe that your resolution opens the way to a public service of the first order. The Pittsburgh Press, the largest and most influential journal in the soft-coal regions of Pennsylvania, said editorially on January 19, 1928:

"At the time Senator JOHNSON, of California, introduced a resolution for investigation of the mine situation, * * * Senator WATSON, chairman of the committee to which the resolution was referred, said it might be weeks before his committee could reach its consideration. Now, certainly, there is reason enough for a special committee to dig into the tangle in the mine zone and reveal the underlying causes of the trouble which has lasted for months.

"Pittsburgh has lived close to the mine strike, and this very familiarity has tended to blind the majority of citizens to its import. They have passed it over as the orthodox and to-be-expected fight between miners and operators in an industry which has for years conducted its affairs with all the earmarks of civil war. It has become a Balkanized threat to industrial contentment, constantly in a state of unrest, and having its deleterious effects upon other business. Usually this bad effect has been discounted, and we have made the best of the situation, just as a family tries its hardest to ignore the unpleasantness caused by a bad boy.

"But if these latest charges of the miners are correct, if there is a widespread combination of powerful corporations in and out side of the mine industry to depress the standard of living, to lower wages, to curtail purchasing power, to reduce men and women to a level where they and their children will not have the means of social improvement, a pass has been reached which is not sectional, not the affair of any one neighborhood, or of any one group of workers.

"A blow is struck at the prosperity of the country through such methods. Less purchasing power means less buying, therefore smaller production in all lines of industry, and on around the circle to an increase of unemployment in manufactories which have no direct connection with coal. That is an economic-humanitarian danger which can not be escaped. Good business sense, if not good moral sense, demands that it be faced and that the facts be bared.

"It may be that legislation will not cure the ills of coal. But the Senate owes it to the whole country, not alone Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia, to dig to the roots now, to determine if these charges of the miners are true; and if so, to plainly label those corporations which are attempting to hammer back social and economic progress.

"A special committee should be named if necessary. It is time our own Members of Congress were facing their responsibilities."

If, in addition to the reasons for a Senate investigation given by the press, it is true, as alleged, that the power of government is being used against the miners, then the situation is serious. It is not within the proper functions of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, or of any State, to take sides in any individual dispute.

The official or the administration which uses or winks at the use of the power of the State to coerce either labor or capital during an industrial dispute may think he is the friend of the side he favors, and so may the favored party. But they are both dead wrong. Justice is as much in the interest of the decent employer as it is of the decent employee, and injustice in the long run is fully as dangerous to the side that is unduly favored as it is to the side that is unfairly oppressed. The first step in assuring justice is to get at the facts.

Sincerely yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

I refer, sir, very, very briefly to a report that was made not so many years ago by what was termed the United States Coal Commission, headed by John Hays Hammond, in relation to this coal and iron police. There it was said, in reporting in 1923 to the President and Congress, this:

The commission can not too strongly condemn the custom of permitting either operators or miners to furnish deputy sheriffs, policemen, or other public officials not paid out of the public treasury. That State and local government has not risen to the level of the average idea of justice in America which has not both the will and the power to preserve the life and the property of its citizens.

I ask at this point that I may print the second of the articles of Basil Manly, appearing in the New York World January 27, without the necessity of wholly reading it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York World, January 27, 1928]

COAL AND IRON POLICE LIKENED TO COSSACKS IN THEIR BRUTALITY—TROOPERS EMPLOYED BY PENNSYLVANIA OPERATORS CITED IN MANY CASES OF VIOLENCE—WOMEN VICTIMS—NO REASON KNOWN FOR EXISTENCE OF GUARD NOW, INVESTIGATOR BELIEVES CONGRESS BOARD WILL FIND

By Basil Manly, special investigator for The Evening World

(Mr. Manly was director of investigation for President Wilson's Industrial Relations Commission and joint chairman with William Howard Taft of the War Labor Board. This is the second of a series of articles.)

PITTSBURGH, January 27.—When the congressional committee on the bituminous-coal strike provided for in the resolution of Senator HIRAM W. JOHNSON, Republican, of California, begins its hearings of the charges and countercharges of strikers' violence and police brutality, it will inevitably be led to center its investigation on the coal and iron police of Pennsylvania.

The committee will find that in those communities controlled by coal companies which have relied upon the Pennsylvania constabulary, popularly known as the "State troopers," to protect their properties there has been a minimum of friction and violence.

On the other hand, it will find that where the coal companies, acting under the antiquated law which permits them to employ men at the company's expense, without any State examination of their records and qualifications, and equip them with police uniforms, clubs, and riot guns, there has been endless bitterness and brutality.

In the one case the State pays its constabulary and holds its officers responsible. They look to the public treasury for their wages and, within reasonable limits, at least as far as this particular controversy is concerned, maintain a neutral attitude and seek merely to preserve order and enforce the law.

OTHER POLICE BLAMED

In the other case the coal and iron police are paid by the coal companies themselves and, with or without justification from the officials, appear to believe that it is their duty to harass the strikers as much as possible. Exercising under the law all the power and authority conferred upon a police officer of Philadelphia, they are in a position to make arrests upon little or no provocation and to wield their clubs and riot sticks as freely as they choose.

The committee will also find, as the writer has found, that it is impossible to sift out the facts in the hundreds of cases of alleged violence and brutality, supported by affidavits and depositions, which will be brought before it by the operators and striking miners.

The operators will cite numerous cases of assaults on strike breakers, discoveries of bombs and infernal machines on company property, explosions on the public highways which wrecked pay cars, and mysterious fires alleged to have been set in company houses in the dead of night. These charges, with the exception of the assault charges, which are not altogether denied by the union, will be supported almost exclusively by circumstantial evidence which no committee will ever be able to unravel.

The operators blame every fire, every property destruction that takes place anywhere in the strike zone on the union. The strikers reply that many of them have originated from natural causes or accidents and that it is not unknown for detectives and mine guards to plant bombs and provoke acts of violence in order to create a reason for their continued employment.

HARD TO FIX BLAME

So, likewise, when the committee begins its examination of the charges made by the strikers of police brutality, it will find them supported chiefly by the testimony of prejudiced witnesses and as vehemently denied by equally prejudiced witnesses on the other side. It will be difficult to fix responsibility.

The committee can, however, perform a great public service if it will probe to the very bottom the organization, personnel, functions, and activities of the Pennsylvania coal and iron police. This organization, which has been responsible for a large part of the friction, bitterness, and violence in every great industrial dispute in this State during the past generation, has been more or less strongly condemned by almost every investigating committee that has encountered it, but it has never been subjected to a searching investigation.

It has been shown by official inquiries that individual members of the coal and iron police have criminal records; that they are in part recruited from the men who have been discharged from the Pennsylvania constabulary for cause; and that they are irresponsible and virtually uncontrolled. But there has never been an investigation that took the lid off the entire system of private employment of police officers and let the people of Pennsylvania and the Nation see the startling abuses that are inevitable under such a plan.

It is possible that when the law providing for the coal and iron police was enacted more than 30 years ago there was a reasonable basis for their existence. At that time no State undertook to police its entire area and it was perhaps not unnatural to provide that the coal and iron companies, located largely in isolated communities, should be given authority to employ and commission men to protect their properties. To-day, however, the system is opposed by its critics as a survival of a condition of industrial feudalism which should not be tolerated in any civilized community.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am indebted to the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] for something that he told me yesterday, and which he said I might repeat, concerning evictions in Ohio, the action of a judge there, and the action of the Governor of the State of Ohio. They have trouble in Ohio in their coal mines. There is a strike there. There is destitution and there is want in the coal fields of that territory. Evictions are attempted in that territory, just as they are attempted in the State of Pennsylvania. The difference is that a judge in the State of Ohio, when before him came the cases for the eviction of men who have no other homes, when he realized that children's lives were at stake, and that the delicate were likely to suffer by such eviction, he, regretting that the law required him to enter a decree, yet made it effective only on the 1st day of May, 1928, in order that the weather should not be so inclement and the suffering should not be so great.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] described to me yesterday the action of the Governor of the State of Ohio, who was appealed to during the strike in the State of Ohio. "Ah, yes," said he, "I will send the State constabulary of Ohio into these coal fields," and he sent them there, but sent them with their arms loaded with loaves of bread and food for women and for children, for people who were in destitution and in want. What a difference and what a contrast here, sir! May I speak my unheeded word of praise for the Governor of the State of Ohio, who, when he finds destitution and hunger and want and starvation, sends to the destitute food and clothing instead of bayonets and rifles and bullets. I am delighted that I can pay this tribute to the State of the Senator from Ohio, and repeat that he united with me in saying that his governor had done something that had won the respect and regard, the love and affection, of all who think first of human kind.

There is another aspect of this thing, too. I hasten and will occupy but a moment more.

Injunctions have been issued in this territory about which I have been speaking; injunctions, sir, that are, as I read them, the most remarkable injunctions that were ever issued in all our history. I have respect for the courts of this land, and I yield to no man who has practiced law in the long period that I have in a greater regard or respect for the courts. But I give these courts but a sorry tribute, I pay to my profession but a shabby compliment when I stand idly by and see a fundamental right of American citizens taken from them by injunction or by other processes.

I read, sir, the provisions of just one injunction. I invite the attention of men who are lawyers upon this floor to the wording of this document.

In the case of Clearfield Bituminous Coal Corporation versus Phillips on the 8th day of November, 1927, among other things, the defendants were prohibited—listen, please, you who have practiced this noble profession of ours:

> The men are prohibited from congregating on the Magyar Presbyterian Church lot or any other lot, lots, place, or places, at the time the employees of the plaintiff enter the mine and at the time the employees of the plaintiff come out of the mine, from singing song or songs in hearing of the employees of the plaintiff, of a threatening or a hostile nature.

The defendant who heads the list of defendants is the pastor of the Magyar Presbyterian Church. It happens, too, that he is a miner, and being a miner, of course, relieves those who issue injunctions of this sort from any of the peculiar conventions that might obtain if dealing alone with a minister of God.

Do you know the hymns they were singing, Mr. President? They sing Nearer My God to Thee and Onward, Christian Soldiers. I heard great audiences in 1912 sing the latter song, and sing it with a fervor that touched all those either indulging in the melody or sitting within the sound of those great audiences.

They sing The Union Forever, and as I read the story of how it was enjoined in Pennsylvania, that men and women should not sing The Union Forever, I remembered my very, very early days. I came, sir, of people who were intensely Union in their sympathies. I was born just at the close of the Civil War. The songs that I first heard in the household that was ours were songs that were sung during the Civil War, and one of the first songs that I learned to lisp was the song The Union Forever.

In Pennsylvania, by injunction, the singing of that song is prohibited. In Pennsylvania, by injunction, is prohibited the singing of hymns that have been the uplifting hymns of all the ages since Christianity became its civilizing force. In Pennsylvania, sir, we shall not congregate in the Magyar Presbyterian Church lot or in any other lot, because, forsooth, some man sitting upon a dais, upon a bench, shall say that when we sing, we sing in threatening or in hostile aspect.

That is not all there is to this remarkable injunction. Next, Mr. President, they are prohibited from saying or doing anything to cause the men now working to quit, or to cause men seeking work to refrain from so doing.

Next is this:

> From distributing pecuniary contributions in furtherance of the conspiracy to keep men from employment or seeking employment with the plaintiff.

Construed, that simply means that they shall not distribute their pitiful sums to their fellows who are in want, and that they shall be restrained from utilizing their own money, collected from the poor, collected from those who are little able to pay it, to relieve suffering among those of their fellows who need it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I wanted to ask the Senator if he would give me a reference to the court by which that injunction was issued, and the name of the case.

Mr. JOHNSON. I gave it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I did not catch it.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is the case of the Clearfield Bituminous Coal Corporation against Phillips, and the injunction was issued on November 8, 1927. Is there an Indiana County in Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. It was in Indiana County, Pa. I can give the Senator the whole injunction.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That will be sufficient.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have the injunction before me, and I have been speaking literally from its text. So much for what has here been presented.

Of course, to justify an investigation under a resolution such as I have offered, there ought to be no more required than a mere prima facie case. Heavens! Is not a prima facie case made here? Here there is more than a prima facie case. It is not a question of whether the facts may be controverted in the future or not. The question, after all, is, Do the conditions exist that are asserted to exist in this territory, and if they do exist, should we not, as best we can, go to the root of the evil and determine whether or not there can be a remedy for those conditions?

It seems that some place, with some men, somewhere, there rests an obligation to do something in this coal strike. Some place, sir, on this earth, some place in this Government, there must be the power sufficient to alleviate the conditions that we find existing in the State of Pennsylvania to-day. Futile are we, worthless, indeed, is the power that has been intrusted to the Government of the United States, if in this day, 1928, in a civilization that we boast is a civilization such as the world never before has seen, and a civilization of which we claim to be proud—worthless are we and futile is our position and our power if we can not delve into a situation such as this presented there and do something for human beings.

I do not speak here for a union at all. I am not appealing here, indeed, for the one side or the other of an industrial dispute. I recognize the differences that may exist among men upon this floor. I have my opinion, my strong opinion, in respect of what has transpired and where the fault lies, and that opinion I do not hesitate to express; but I am not here pleading now for a union or for union labor. They have to learn the lesson that all of us have learned in the past who have stood upon our own two feet; they have to learn the lesson that they have to fight and fight and fight and fight to maintain the progress they have made in days gone by. When union labor becomes timid, when in its prosperity it becomes flabby, then there is an end of the proud position that it has won in recent years, and there is a return to industrial slavery in this land.

I plead no cause of theirs. They need no such feeble voice as mine. I do plead, sir, another cause; I do plead the cause of women who are weak, of mothers who have not milk for their babes, of babes who come into the world in shacks where the wind blows and howls, and snow comes in upon the suffering mother and newborn babe. I plead for this investigation, and I ask it for this one reason alone—I plead for it because of humanity. Humanity demands it.

Ah, what difference does it make that the power and the wealth of Pennsylvania and other States may be upon the other side? Here are human beings at stake. For once in our history let us rise above the cry of materialism and prosperity, the desire to make more profit out of government and more profit out of that which is dug from the earth itself. Let us rise above it, and let us respond to-day, in the passage of this resolution, to the cry of stricken humanity.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I realize that the honorable Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] is entitled to the floor at 2 o'clock on Senate bill 1181, but if it be agreeable to him I will ask that the unfinished business be laid aside so that we may continue with the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1181) authorizing an appropriation to be expended under the provisions of section 7 of the act of March 1, 1911, entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," as amended.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, out of courtesy to the distinguished and industrious Senator from Wyoming, I am willing to ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the appropriation bill which he has in charge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the morning hour having entirely expired, I have no opportunity at this time to make any statement about the condition in the coal regions in Pennsylvania. I shall take the first opportunity to do so.

I might say, in a word, that no one can exaggerate the plight in which the entire industry stands at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that, having the floor now on the bill which is officially before the Senate, he has the right under the rules to take all of the time he sees fit. I hope he will embrace the opportunity.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I realize that, and I have another reason for not wanting to take the time now. That is that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who has just finished speaking, has called us to a meeting at this hour, 2 o'clock, of the Committee on Immigration, of which he is chairman, to determine whether American labor is to be protected by the exclusion of the great swarm of immigrants who are coming in from Mexico. I think I can do more for the cause of the man who works in America by going to that meeting and making my speech to-morrow.

I want to say now that throughout the bituminous-coal regions, not only of Pennsylvania but of Ohio and northern West Virginia, there exists at this moment the most intense suffering on the part of practically all who are in that industry, union and nonunion, operator and miner. At the present time, for what reasons I do not need to stop to argue now, the markets of those mines are denied them. The price of their products is so low that it is practically impossible for operator and miner to exist. There are more miners than there is any chance of employment for, even without the strike. There are more mines than there is any possibility of business for, strike or no strike.

The same conditions that have been so often described with eloquence here about the predicament of the farmer obtain with infinitely greater force throughout the bituminous-coal regions. It is our greatest industry. People think that Pennsylvania is prominent as a manufacturing State, but our greatest industry is the mining of coal from those abundant beds that Heaven gave us. And yet to-day I think it is literally true that no one is prospering, mine owner or mine worker, and that no one can prosper under the conditions which now exist. When we talk of the farm problem, Mr. President, we ought to think also of the coal problem, because there the greatest industry save agriculture is in a similar plight, and yet it is very seldom that any of us stop to think about it.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with his usual eloquence has drawn forceful attention to the terrible conditions that exist in these impoverished miner-strikers' villages. People are living there under conditions in which no American ought to live. There must be, as he said, some relief for it.

But let us not jump to conclusions about causes until we have had time to go into it. The people in Pennsylvania think, as those same people who are suffering think, that a large part of it is our fault, because we permit competitive regions to flourish while Pennsylvania can not. Perhaps it is partly our fault. I shall not stop to argue that now. Many men ascribe many causes, but the thing that wrings our hearts and that must wring everybody's heart is the sum total of the human suffering in which people are living there to-day.

I am going to vote for the Senator's resolution. All I ask is that whatever inquiry be made shall be a fair inquiry and a thorough one. I believe that if the resolution passes, the committee will give it a fair and thorough investigation and will consider those other questions at which I have just hinted. It is a great industry. Hundreds of thousands of people are affected by it, and we ought not to act superficially in trying to settle its problems. But by the same token we ought not to delay in our effort to get to the bottom of the problem. Let us remember it is not an easy task. Four years ago we had a coal commission authorized by Congress. A lot of experts were appointed to study the question. They filed a report of many volumes, of thousands of pages, to the Congress and to the administration that created them, and yet I think it is safe to say that very few Members of the Senate or House of Representatives ever could get the time to study what that commission reported. It is all right to make the investigation, but ears must be open to hear the reports. If it falls on deaf ears, nothing will be done, no matter how good the investigation is.

Governor Fisher of Pennsylvania, who has succeeded Governor Pinchot at the head of our State, I am informed is making an immediate and thorough investigation into the charges of misbehavior by Pennsylvania State police. He assures me that in a very short time he will have completed that investigation. I do not want the Senate to think that the governor has been indifferent to the nature of the charges that have been made regarding the Pennsylvania State Constabulary. We are very proud of that force in Pennsylvania, but if they have been guilty of any such thing as has been indicated by the Senator from California we are going to put an end to such a condition.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is a vast difference between the State troops and the coal and iron police. It happened, and these articles all show the same facts, sir, that with the State troops who are regularly employed there is little difficulty.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I thought the Senator referred to the State troopers.

Mr. JOHNSON. No. They get along with the troopers fairly well, and the troopers get along with them fairly well. It is the coal and iron police, privately employed and privately paid, that are given the sanction of the State, wherein the brutality occurs.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then let me say a word about that. If there has been brutality there, that must be stopped, too. But do not let us reproach the State for the system, because it is a system that is applied throughout the United States, and Europe, too, for that matter, in the matter of railway police and mill police. There has to be somebody authorized to police those great works, just as we have the railroad policed here by officers paid by the railroad companies. I dare say that is true in California as well. But whoever they are and whoever employed them and whoever pays them, their behavior has got to be as correct as that which the Senator has said the State police have observed.

Another thing I ought to say and then I am through, and that is that Secretary Davis, of the Department of Labor, deserves some recognition for the very sincere and earnest efforts which he made to bring the parties together and get the strike settled. I think I owe it to him to say that every effort that one in his position could exert has been exerted and that he has done everything in his power. I believe that is generally recognized in Pennsylvania.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, bad as the situation is, I confess it is amusing to me to see Senators on the other side of the aisle begin to realize there is something wrong with the coal business. All through the session year before last and last year I pleaded with the Senate that something might be done; that some legislative action might be taken to meet the situation. I did not get any aid across the aisle at that time. I am glad the eloquent Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has raised his voice, because he has presented, in so much more forceful way than I have been able to do through these two or three years, the terrible situation in the coal industry.

The Senator from Pennsylvania has spoken of the efforts of the Secretary of Labor. I think the Secretary is to be commended, but the reason he could not do any more was because, largely through the influence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Congress failed to pass a bill which would have made it possible for the President to appoint an emergency coal board to deal with a situation like this.

The Senator is touched now, and with all deference to him as an individual, I observe that his attitude to-day is very different than his attitude was two years ago, when we were striving to correct a condition of affairs like this which then existed in the anthracite region. He was not helping then.

Mr. President, there can be no excuse for the cruelties and the barbarities and the un-Christian acts and the un-American acts in the mining regions of Pennsylvania. I am willing to go as far as the Senator from Pennsylvania in saying that we have a chronic condition with which we must deal. We have; but that chronic state of affairs is no excuse for the action of the police and those who are in control of the police in dispossessing those people, throwing them out of comfortable homes owned by the coal operators, throwing them into the streets, not even waiting for them to finish the barracks which the coal miners were building to receive their families.

There is a situation to-day, within half a day's journey of this Capitol, the equal of which has rarely occurred in Armenia or anywhere else on the face of the earth. I am glad the eloquent Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has given us a picture of it. It is true that there is a situation which must be dealt with.

The Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from California have both referred to the report of the Coal Commission. How many Senators have read it? How many know what recommendations were made? How many know that those commissioners worked week after week and month after month to solve the coal problem and then presented a program of relief? How many Senators have read it?

For two years, during two sessions of the Congress, I stood upon this floor and begged Senators to read that report, the Hammond report. If any Senator will take the first of those several volumes of the Hammond report and read it and master it he will be able to deal intelligently with the proposition.

It is true the Senator from Pennsylvania said that we have a chronic disability and the country must face it. Those of us who are here and who are sympathetic with the present-day sufferings must face it. The labor unions must face it. The operators must face it.

We have in this country 250,000 more miners than we need, a quarter of a million more miners than we need. We have probably three or four thousand more mines than we need. During the war, when there was a demand for coal, everybody who had coal land opened a mine, and everybody who opened a mine called for cars. There was a demand for car priority to those mines. As a result of this we opened mine after mine until thousands more than our country will ever use—at least in this generation—were opened. As a result of it thousands and thousands of men were brought into this industry to become miners, and now we have a quarter of a million more than we need of them. The mines in Pennsylvania can not employ them. I am not blaming the mine owners of Pennsylvania for not employing these men. They can not do it. It is not for that I blame them.

There is an excess of coal now. In spite of the fact that 250,000 miners are out of work, we put out last year more bituminous coal than ever before, showing that we have all the miners we need now in employment. Then, in addition, Mr. President, we have a quarter of a million more. What are we going to do with them? What is to be done with them? How are they to be directed into other industries and other occupations? We have a great problem to face.

For myself I am satisfied that there must be very radical legislation. I do not believe it is possible to solve the bituminous coal problem until we repeal the antitrust laws and put under strict regulation the owner of the mines. It is not an easy thing. We can not, because our sympathies are excited, solve this problem. An investigation must go far beyond the barbarities, the cruelties, and the unheard of wickedness of those in control in Pennsylvania. We must go back to the primary trouble; we must go back to the chronic ailment; and that can not be cured in a minute. There is an investigation demanded, and it must be had.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. NEELY. The able Senator from New York has asked, What shall we do with 250,000 supernumerary coal miners? Will he not answer this question?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not know what we are going to do with them, but somebody must find out. The bill which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] fought so valiantly through both sessions of the last Congress did not have in it a thing that any mine owner needed to worry about. It provided merely, among other things, that in such an emergency as now confronts us the President of the United States should ask Charles E. Hughes, Newton D. Baker, and two or three other well-known citizens who stand first in the thought of the American people——

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in my opinion, no coal operator or coal miner in West Virginia wants Newton D. Baker or Mr. Hughes or anybody else clothed with Federal authority further to regulate the coal industry of that State. The Interstate Commerce Commission packed by this administration has already indirectly regulated that great industry of West Virginia to the verge of bankruptcy. We therefore oppose every suggestion of additional Federal interference with the legitimate business of the greatest coal-producing State in the world.

Mr. COPELAND. Well, Mr. President, there is just one other thing that West Virginia will submit to, and that is bankruptcy of her mines. That is what she will submit to, and that is what she is on the way to.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the coal operators of West Virginia have not submitted to it. They have simply suffered it because a packed Interstate Commerce Commission has created for Pennsylvania a monopoly of the soft-coal business of the Northwest and by outrageous discrimination excluded the coal operators of my State from the northwestern markets.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from West Virginia stands on his feet and makes a speech and says, "We will not do this," or "We will not do that," and then, in a few minutes, if the debate becomes sufficiently hot, the Senator from Pennsylvania will get up and will show how the Senator from West Virginia put it over the Interstate Commerce Commission; and he will make a threat directed to the President that the next time there is a vacancy on the Interstate Commerce Commission, if he shall not appoint a man who will stand by the mines of Pennsylvania, God help the President! That is what will happen.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if the constituents of the Senator from Pennsylvania who are interested in coal know the meaning of gratitude, they will unstintingly support him for reelection. For no other person could have rendered them greater service or West Virginia greater disservice.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to say, not in defense of the Senator from Pennsylvania, but of the Senator from West Virginia, that, because of his advocacy and defense of the coal industry, if the State of West Virginia should fail to send the Senator from West Virginia back to the Senate for life, to endow him with all this world's goods, to give him a Rolls-Royce automobile and a grand piano, it would be a very short-sighted and ungrateful State.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from New York, but I regret to say that a majority of coal operators in West Virginia vote the straight Republican ticket, just as they do in every other State in the Union.

Mr. COPELAND. My observation of coal operators is that they vote the Republican ticket, and that they not only vote the Republican ticket but they are the chief contributors to the Republican campaign fund. However, the owners of mines in West Virginia will make a notable exception when it comes to the return of the Senator from West Virginia. They will be for him 100 per cent; and there will not be any doubt of his reelection, unless they are suffering from ingratitude to the *n*th degree.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, for once the Senator is mistaken. The coal operators of West Virginia, about 90 per cent of whom are Republican, will probably believe that my reward for having endeavored to protect their industry—the greatest industry of my State—should be found in my clear conscience, which is the result of having done my duty to the best of my ability.

Mr. COPELAND. Because, Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia is 99 per cent of the time right, and because he is a distinguished Democrat, I want to see him come back to the Senate.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator from West Virginia has any trouble in his State with the coal operators, will he not please ask the senior Senator from New York to visit West Virginia and make a speech to the mine owners of that State?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New York now. Because there is always plenty of trouble in my State when a Democrat runs for office. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. I say seriously, Mr. President, that I hope the Senator from West Virginia will be returned. He has been an ornament to the Senate, although he is wrong on the coal question.

Mr. President, there is pending in the Committee on Education and Labor the bill which I tried so hard at both sessions of the Sixty-ninth Congress to have passed, seeking to deal with such acute symptoms as we have in Pennsylvania to-day. There is pending there also another bill which I believe has the germ, at least, of an enactment which would solve the coal problem.

However, let us face the fact that we have too many coal mines and too many coal miners. The bituminous-coal business is practically bankrupt, and unless there can be found some way to solve the problem the fuel situation will become one of our national problems. It must be solved.

I am in hearty sympathy with the resolution presented by the Senator from California. If out of it comes an honest-to-goodness study of the situation, not with a view to fixing responsibility for the barbarous things which have occurred, for there is no difficulty about doing that——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Before the Senator from New York finishes his speech I hope he will not fail to inquire of some Senator on the other side of the Chamber where is the prosperity of which the majority party have long boasted. Since the beginning of the present session we have had pointed out to us the dire distress among the farming interests; next we were informed that the shipping interests had collapsed; and to-day we are informed by the Republican side, from the Senators in whose States this industry is located, that the coal-mining industry is bankrupt. I hope before the session adjourns some Senator on the other side will indicate some industry which is actually and really prosperous.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts has heard of what has been called "profitless" prosperity.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have heard that sometimes people even make profits in bankruptcy.

Mr. COPELAND. The cotton mills in New England are prosperous! The textile industry is prosperous!

Mr. CARAWAY. Their's is a "profitless" prosperity.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The prosperity of the textile industry, which we have not flaunted here, is as the Senator from Arkansas suggests, of the "profitless" character.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. Of course, the whole country is on the verge of depression; there is only one way to prevent it, and, of course, the Senator from Massachusetts and I agree as to that.

Mr. President, I do not think I want to say anything more now except to thank the Senator from California for bringing to the attention of the country the sufferings of the coal miners in Pennsylvania. It is outrageous that in a community that we could reach in an hour by airplane from here, women and children are starving; they have not even a fraction of the necessities of life. Mr. President, how can we fail to take every necessary step to bring about a correction of that condition? I hope that the resolution of the Senator from California may prevail.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that it may be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] the other day introduced a bill which was a verbatim copy of a bill introduced and pending in the other House, known as the Madden bill, which seeks to dispose of the governmental property at Muscle Shoals in Alabama. The Senate bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and that committee has held a hearing. The passage of the bill known in the House as the Madden bill was advocated there by Mr. Gray, the Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Ever since the cyanamide proposition has been before Congress—and it is the cyanamide proposition which the American Farm Bureau through its representative is advocating and that is provided for in the Willis and the Madden bills—I have been contending, as have others—and I think, at least to my satisfaction, it has been practically demonstrated—that that bill seeking to dispose of Muscle Shoals is the worst measure that has ever been proposed to the American Congress since we have had the question before us, which has been for nearly 10 years.

It is contended by those who advocate the passage of that bill that nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals can be operated and utilized for the purpose of making fertilizer and cheapening the price of fertilizer to the American farmer. It is contended by those who oppose the proposition that the cyanamide process which nitrate plant No. 2 utilizes is practically out of date; that you can not manufacture fertilizer with that method and cheapen the product below what it can be bought for now on the market in the regular course of business.

Connected with the cyanamide process advocated by the Farm Bureau is an elaborate plan contained in this bill for the building of several dams on the Tennessee River and some of its tributaries. It is provided that the Government shall furnish the money, and that when the dams are built they shall be turned over to the Cyanamid Co. and another corporation named in the bill.

We who have opposed it have said that we doubted the good faith of the Cyanamid Co., and that as a matter of fact what they were trying to do at Muscle Shoals was to get the power, not only that developed there now, but additional power paid for by the Government, for their own private use.

I am not going into a discussion of the merits of the bill, except to say that that was the contention on one side.

It was contended on the other side, particularly by Mr. Gray, the Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, that nitrate plant No. 2 can make fertilizer cheaper than it can be made by any other method or any other system; and he has been pretending to the farmers of America that the reason why he is interested in this proposition and advocating the passage of this law is because, and solely because, he wants to get cheap fertilizer to the farmer. Therefore at this hearing, where Mr. Gray testified, I proposed to him that I would offer and support an amendment to the resolution that I then had pending before the committee regarding Muscle Shoals which would provide that nitrate plant No. 2, the cyanamide plant at Muscle Shoals, should be leased to the Cyanamid Co. or to the American Farm Bureau Federation, or both of them, without any rental charge whatever, for a term of 50 years; that they should have it free of any rent, free of any taxes, and that they should only be required to keep it in first-class condition during the term of the lease, and that they should also agree that they would manufacture fertilizer for the American farmer to the capacity of that plant during the entire term of the lease.

It seemed to me that if they were acting in good faith, Mr. Gray would jump at that opportunity. He made some objection to it, but took the matter under consideration, and later on wrote a letter to the chairman of the Agricultural Committee, which I have here and which I am going to read to the Senate.

This letter is directed to Hon. CHARLES L. MCNARY, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

> You will recall that in the course of my testimony before your committee on Saturday, January 28, on behalf of the American Farm Bureau Federation in favor of the Willis-Madden bill for the lease of Muscle Shoals, Senator NORRIS made the following proposal:
> "Will the American Cyanamid Co. or the American Farm Bureau Federation, or both, accept a lease free of charge, of nitrate plant No. 2, conditioned only that you shall exclusively, and up to its capacity during the term of the lease, make fertilizer for the American farmer?
> "You can do it when you please, not limited by any 8 per cent profit.
> "The Secretary of War, who is operating that plant, shall give you the first right to the power and you shall say to him at the beginning of the lease how much power you shall have.
> "You shall have the first right to get the power, all you want, at cost plus 4 per cent interest on the Government's investment in the power-producing facilities."
> The American Farm Bureau Federation is in most hearty accord with the proposal to utilize the Muscle Shoals power at cost for the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 for the manufacture of fertilizer, and we would be glad to have Senator NORRIS join us in securing such an arrangement. That is what is provided for in the Willis-Madden bill which our organization has indorsed and is supporting. The free use of nitrate plant No. 2 has been a feature of every proposal to lease this property.

Let me say there by way of parenthesis that it is contended, and I believe properly so, by those who are opposed to the Willis-Madden bill that it is only a power scheme in disguise, and that it provides, we believe, for the appropriation of public funds to the amount of more than $75,000,000 in the development of other dams and other works to be paid for by the Government and turned over to the Cyanamid Co., advocated by this farm bureau representative, with a rental that in reality, when figured out, amounts to about 2½ per cent on the investment of the Government. We contend that it is the greatest gift of power and subsidy on the part of the Government that has ever been known in the civilized world; but that, of course, is denied by those people. They claim that it is only a proposition to make cheap fertilizer for the farmer.

Let me continue reading the letter:

> This proposal, however, would strike out the 8 per cent limitation on fertilizer profits. For years this has been a fundamental principle with us in any lease for Muscle Shoals, and we can not agree to such a repudiation. There is no fertilizer shortage at present prices. We seek a greater supply at less cost and without profit-limitation Muscle Shoals loses its value as a regulator of fertilizer prices.

It is true that in the proposition I had made to Mr. Gray I had said nothing about the limitation of profit. In fact, I had said there was no limitation. The bid that the Cyanamid Co. make for Muscle Shoals provides that they shall make not more than 8 per cent profit on their fertilizer operations. They can make a thousand per cent on their other operations, but on the fertilizer operations the profit was limited to 8 per cent. I am delighted to comply with the request of Mr. Gray—this Farm Bureau Federation representative who is working for this great corporation instead of the farmers—I am delighted to comply with his request and to put in the 8 per cent limitation. I thought that was something in their favor. I should be delighted to make it 4 per cent if they would accept it that way, but we would find them kicking at once; so, in the amendment that I am going to read before I get through to the joint resolution that I have introduced, I am going to have an 8 per cent limitation. So the objection that Mr. Gray makes in that letter has entirely disappeared, because I am going to put in this limitation; and, as I will show further, that is one of the two objections that he makes to the proposition, so that objection is met.

He goes on:

> To accept this proposal would also be an indorsement of the policy of Government operation of power plants.

That is the only other objection he makes.

> When our organization was first formed in November, 1919, we went on record against this policy in the following resolution:
> "We are opposed to the Government ownership of public utilities."
> In one form or another this policy has been repeated at annual meetings ever since, and we who represent the farm bureau in Washington have neither the authority nor the desire to repudiate the principles for which our federation stands, regardless of whether the bidder would accept the above proposal or not.

Mr. President, that objection, the only other one he makes, is not well founded. My proposition to him is, "We will lease nitrate plant No. 2 to you for nothing." It is not Government operation. They are going to operate it. We are going to lease it to them, if my proposition is accepted, free of charge, and we are going to furnish power at cost to operate it if they want it. If they want to use any other power, they are perfectly free to make their own power or to buy it anywhere they please.

So Mr. Gray's objection that he is opposed to Government operation does not lie, because we are going to let him operate the plant. All he has to do is to make fertilizer, and that is the only thing he has ever wanted to make, according to his pretensions. If he is acting in good faith and it is for the love of the farmer that these men want nitrate plant No. 2 operated, if they love the farmer and can make so much money in supplying the farmer with cheap fertilizer, here is their opportunity, which this Farm Bureau Federation representative turns down because of two reasons: One is, he is opposed to Government operation, which is not true; they are going to operate it themselves if they take it. Second, because there is no 8 per cent limit on profits that they would make, and I put that in; so both his objections are met.

Mr. President, in a few moments I will send to the clerk's desk a proposed amendment to the resolution. It complies with both of the objections of this farmer representative. If he is honest in looking after the farmer instead of a big corporation interested only in a lot of power at Government expense, instead of turning it down and finding an excuse to avoid it, he would be accepting it; or, if his client, the Cyanamid Co., would refuse to do it, he would repudiate them at the beginning, and say, "I will not go with you any longer. I represent the farmers and not the Cyanamid Co." So when this is offered, when it is proposed, as it already has been, before the committee, he is smoked out, and can get any benefit out of it that he may see fit.

I will offer this amendment and ask that it be printed and lie on the table, because the joint resolution to which it will be offered will soon be actually reported to the Senate from the committee. It provides as follows, adding this to the joint resolution:

Whereas it is claimed by the American Cyanamid Co. and the American Farm Bureau Federation that fertilizer can be economically manufactured at said nitrate plant No. 2; and that, by the use of said nitrate plant No. 2 for that purpose, the price of fertilizer can be materially reduced to the farmers: Therefore be it further

Resolved, That at any time within 30 days after the enactment of this resolution, upon complying with the conditions hereinafter set forth, by the said American Cyanamid Co. and the said American Farm Bureau Federation, or by either of them, the Secretary of War shall lease said nitrate plant No. 2 to the said American Cyanamid Co. and the said American Farm Bureau Federation, or to either one of them applying therefor, for a term to be named by the lessee, not exceeding 50 years, upon the following conditions, to wit:

First. The said nitrate plant No. 2 shall be leased free of any rental or charge.

Second. The lessee shall covenant to keep said property in first-class condition during the entire term of said lease.

Third. The lessee shall covenant to operate said plant to its full capacity, exclusively and continuously, in the production and manufacture of fertilizer for the American farmer.

Fourth. That the profits of the lessee shall be limited to 8 per cent.

SEC. 2. If the lessee so desires, the Secretary of War shall include in said lease the Waco quarry now owned by the Government and heretofore operated by the Government in connection with the said nitrate plant No. 2; and, if the said Waco quarry is included in the lease, the lessee shall be required to pay for all limestone removed from said quarry, a royalty to be stated in the lease which shall not exceed 5 cents per ton.

I might say, by way of parenthesis, that if nitrate plant No. 2 is operated, it will be necessary to use a large amount of lime. The Government of the United States owns a limestone quarry, bought for the purpose of using the limestone in the operation of plant No. 2, and therefore I have provided that we will give them the nitrate plant No. 2 for nothing, and if they want to get limestone from the Government, they can get it for 5 cents a ton. That is certainly cheap enough.

I have said nothing about power. They lease that great plant, which cost the Government somewhere between sixty and seventy million dollars, for nothing; but I have said nothing as yet about power. They have a right under the lease, if they want to, to get power at any place on earth they like.

If they do not want to get power from the Government, they can buy power from the Alabama Power Co., which has a wire running right into the plant. If they do not want to patronize the Government of the United States because the property is owned by the Government, if they want to patronize private initiative and private corporations, there is their opportunity to patronize a representative of the Water Power Trust, namely the Alabama Power Co. So it is not made compulsory that they shall get power from the Government.

SEC. 3. If desired by the lessee, the Secretary of War shall agree in said lease to supply the lessee with all the power which said lessee may need in the operation of said nitrate plant No. 2, and in such case the lessee shall notify the Secretary of War, in writing, at the time of entering into said lease, how much of said power the said lessee desires to use, and the said lessee shall be required to give to the Secretary of War a good and sufficient bond to be approved by the Secretary of War, conditioned upon the payment to the Secretary of War, during the term of said lease, for the power so segregated and set apart for the lessee, and also for the prompt compliance with all other conditions named in said lease. Such power shall be supplied to the lessee at cost and, in arriving at the cost, due consideration shall be given to maintenance, depreciation, and operation plus 4 per cent interest upon the actual investment of the Government of the United States in the facilities used in the supplying of such power.

Mr. President, if Mr. Gray is in earnest, and if he is in reality the representative of the farmers, and if it is true that they are interested only in getting cheap fertilizer, and if they are also telling the truth to the farmer when they say that they can get it out of nitrate plant No. 2, here is their glorious opportunity to get the plant for nothing, to get power, if they want it, at cost, to get limestone at 5 cents a ton, without paying any rental for the machinery or the plant they operate.

If they can get power at any less cost, then they are privileged to do so; but God knows, the Senate knows, the American Farm Bureau Federation representative knows, that here is an opportunity to get power at a cost less than any that has been offered, as far as I know, anywhere else in the United States, and inasmuch as he stated in his letter that I had not put a limitation on the profit, he said it was a repudiation; that the American Farm Bureau Federation did not want anybody to make more than 8 per cent, I thought, as long as I was giving it to Mr. Gray and the Farm Bureau themselves, they probably would not want to make any percentage; that they would be satisfied with 1 per cent, and that it would be an insult to them to say, "We are going to give you this plant to make just as much as you please, to make fertilizer, but you must not make more than 8 per cent." I thought they might be insulted. But since they want to have themselves limited so that they will not make so much money, I am very glad indeed to put that provision in. Hence, there is no repudiation of the principle that he has been advocating all these years.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Does not the Senator think that in section 2 he had better put a provision that the royalty on the limestone shall not exceed 5 cents per ton? He has provided that it shall not be less than 5 cents per ton.

Mr. NORRIS. I will accept any suggestion of that kind. I am willing to make it absolute, to say that it shall be 5 cents per ton. I see the point the Senator makes. I have no objection to making it absolute, at 5 cents per ton. If they have any other suggestion about an amendment that is not material, I will accept it. If I have not crossed a "t," I hope Mr. Gray will not come back and say, "There is a grammatical error here, and we can not accept anything that has not good grammar in it." If he will suggest the correction, I am willing to make it. I am acting in good faith. If he can make fertilizer with plant No. 2, without paying any rental for the plant, and cheapen it to the American farmer, I would be delighted to have him do it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to say just a word in regard to the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

As most Senators here know, I supported the Ford bid for Muscle Shoals, and after that bid was withdrawn I supported the bid of the American Cyanamid Co. Nothing has come from that. No action has been taken on any of these measures by both branches of Congress.

I do not like in its entirety the Willis-Madden bill, as it is called, which contains the bid of the American Cyanamid Co. I do like some of the features in it. It provides for the production of fertilizer and for the continuation of the improvements on the Tennessee River. It contemplates the building of more dams, which would in time complete navigation on the Tennessee River.

I would accept a bid like that in preference to putting the Government into business up there. I am in favor of private ownership and operation of these enterprises. I do not want to put the Government in business anywhere if I can help it.

I must admit that the Senator from Nebraska has offered the fairest proposition that has come before me in connection with Government operation, and to-day when his measure was reported out favorably I offered as a substitute for it the Willis bill, stating that I was not entirely satisfied with the provisions of that bill, but that I wanted to get it on the floor of the Senate so that we could thrash it out here, improve it, and perfect it. But the committee almost unanimously supported the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska, and reported it to the Senate. Then the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and myself gave notice that we would try to amend his resolution, if it seemed to be the judgment of the Senate that that course should be taken, and his resolution should be passed.

I am exceedingly anxious to have action taken at this session of Congress on this subject. Something ought to be done with Muscle Shoals. Whatever course is taken, I am going to do my best to tie into the measure that is passed here one specific thing—that is, that a part of that power shall be used continuously for the manufacture of fertilizer for the farmers of the country.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think I ought to say just a word more. As I said before, it was not my intention to discuss the so-called Willis-Madden bill. If it should become material in the course of the consideration of this measure to take it up and consider it, I shall try my best to analyze it completely. I am not trying to do that now. I mentioned it only in a very brief way.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I take it for granted that the Senator is not going to discuss that bill unless he wants to hold an inquest.

Mr. NORRIS. If I discuss it, it will be with the intention of providing a subject for an inquest.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is already dead.

Mr. NORRIS. That is one reason why I have not felt justified in taking up the time of the Senate in discussing it.

IMMIGRATION AND NATIONAL ORIGINS

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a few nights ago the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] delivered a very notable address on the subject of "Immigration and the National Origins" in Continental Memorial Hall in Washington. I ask unanimous consent to have it published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator REED. Mr. President, we have heard a lot recently about flood control. I want to talk about another kind of flood control, the control of that flood of human immigration which for a time bade fair to overwhelm not only New England and the Mississippi Valley but the whole of the United States.

It is hard for us to realize, we of the twentieth century, that in the first 250 years after Columbus came there were only 80,000 immigrants to the territory that is now called United States. It is hard for us to realize that even during the famine in Ireland and the political upset in Germany that caused the great migrations of the middle of the last century, the decade that preceded the Civil War, that even then we received only about 3,000,000 immigrants, because in our lifetime the flood has come so much more rapidly.

Do you know that, beginning with 1890 and running down ceaselessly until the World War interrupted it, we took over 17,000,000 aliens into this country, and the moment the armistice came and it became possible for men to migrate here, again we took in 5,000,000 before we put up the bars in 1924; 22,500,000, almost a quarter of the present population of the United States, born outside the United States and most of them in countries in which there is not to-day even a semblance of self-government.

Is it a wonder that thoughtful men began to feel that if that process continued the bulk of the population in America would cease to know how to govern itself? Is it a wonder that people began to tremble for the preservation of what we know as American standards, American conceptions of right living conditions and right civic conditions? It is only when we think of these portentous figures that we realize what the problem was.

On the first day of this year there were 1,500,000 applicants for admission to the United States registered with our European consulates. Imagine the effect upon American life if we were suddenly to permit this tremendous migration from Yugoslavia, Greece, and the countries surrounding the Mediterranean, from Russia, Hungary, and all the countries in which this throng of applicants reside. And remember that they would inevitably be followed by other millions at a rate so rapid that the United States would soon lose its American identity and become a polyglot of transported European cultures and institutions.

We have no need for any such immigration. America is doing its own work well to-day. Can you inflict any greater injury upon the American who works with his hands than to introduce the competition of a million and a half new workers, who come here to look for jobs, and come inevitably to take jobs from American citizens?

In 1924 these considerations bred an almost universal demand that the bars be put up and that the system of regulation be adopted to throttle down that inflow of persons into the United States. We had a tariff law that kept out pretty effectively the products of that pauperized labor, but we had no similar system for keeping out the pauperized laborer himself, and America demanded that one should be erected. It was done in the law of 1924, which limited the aggregate immigration to 160,000 persons a year, plus a few close relatives of people already here and naturalized.

While it is obvious to all thinking men that adherence to our policy of restricting immigration is essential to the welfare of our working men and women, particularly now when jobs seem to be fewer and unemployment begins to worry us, nevertheless the friends of that policy must give thought to the criticism that we have so enforced the policy as to create unnecessary hardship; that we have separated families; and that we have caused needless suffering. This is not a necessary result of restricting immigration. We can still have that policy intact while giving preference within the quotas to relatives of persons already in this country. Much of the cruelty of the first temporary quota law has been ended by our present system of examining immigrants before they leave their homelands. We ought now, in all justice, to try to end this other type of suffering and to permit the reunion of families wherever possible. I intend to take steps in the Senate at the present session to accomplish this.

In the preparation of the law of 1924 the most difficult question was to determine how to apportion the quota among all of this great throng of applicants who want to get into it.

There was the suggestion that we apportion this number of 160,000 among the different nations of Europe in accordance with the number of their foreign born who were here already. That was easy to do, because our census always shows the number of foreign born from each of these different countries, and as a stop-gap that method was agreed on, so that up until this year the quotas are divided in proportion to the number of foreign born of the different nationalities in this country at the time of a particular census.

Well, the trouble with that obviously is that it ignores everybody who was born in this country. The native-born American was utterly ignored, although the foreign-born person, who might not even be naturalized, found his reflection in that quota. It was very much resented by that large majority of our citizens who were born in the country, and who said they had at least an equal right to be represented and reflected in these quotas.

So came the last suggestion, known as the national-origins provision, which was adopted by Congress, and which seemed wholly fair to every element of our complex population, native born and foreign born, and which the Census Bureau said could be easily and equitably put into operation. It provided a division of the quotas according to the national origins of the whole population and was originally designed to take effect last July 1.

But just before the last Congress met there arose a body of protests against the application of that system merely on the ground that its application would cut down the quota of this or that country, although in fact it discriminates against none, but gives to each element in our population here its fair quota based upon its numbers now here by birth and descent.

When the 1924 act was passed Congress was well aware of the fact that the 1890 foreign-born basis necessarily discriminated to the advantage of certain countries, particularly Germany and Ireland, which happened to be at the peak of their immigration at the time of that particular census. Germany to-day is getting a quota of 51,227, far larger than any other quota country, and, in fact, nearly one-third of the total quota immigration, although according to the report of the National Origins Quota Board she is entitled, on the basis of German stock in the United States to-day, to less than one-sixth of the quota immigration. Likewise, the Irish Free State, with a quota of 28,567, more than one-sixth of the total immigration, by the findings of the same board, is actually entitled to 13,862, or about one-eleventh. On the other hand, the present joint quota for England, Scotland, Wales, and north Ireland, of 34,007, is entirely unfair to that portion of our American stock which is derived from these sources and which constitutes about one-half of our total white population. This half comprises not only descendents of our American population at the time of the revolution, 90 per cent of which, according to the Census Bureau estimate, was of English and Scotch origin, but also the descendents of the large immigration subsequent to the revolution from the same sources.

It is indefensible that there should be discrimination in our immigration laws against this basic American stock, which speaks our language, has the same capacity for self-government, presents no problem of assimilation, and to which have belonged the founders of our Nation and most of its great leaders down to the present day.

But there is such discrimination in the present 1890 quotas—intended by Congress only as temporary. That it is both unwise and unjust is now recognized by patriotic organizations all over the country. Many of these are represented at this meeting to-day, and have gone on record as opposed to repeal of the national-origins provision.

As an instance, let me cite a statement issued by the California Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, under date of October 15, 1927. It reads, in part:

"The national origins plan is the only basis that the United States has ever had for an immigration quota which did not discriminate against the colonial stock Americans—the people who gave us our law, our language, our political institutions; the people who fought the Revolution, wrote the Constitution, gave us our bill of rights, developed the continent, and founded the Nation; the people who gave us our Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, and Hamilton, our Emerson, our Lowell, and our Hawthorne; the people who to-day constitute about 50 per cent of the white population of the country."

If the national-origins provision should be repealed, it would weaken and undermine the whole structure of the act of 1924, leaving it without any real principle for apportioning the quotas. This would be the first step toward letting down the bars to a flood of immigration that would be limited only by the number of steamships available to bring people to this country.

The opponents of the national-origins provisions, I am convinced, comprise at least only a militant minority of our citizens. But it is the old story of a closely organized, ever alert minority imposing its will upon an apathetic majority. The problem of those of us who look ahead for the interests of the United States is to arouse the great mass of the people to the menace which confronts their country in these efforts to weaken our restrictive immigration policy.

I wish I could appeal to those men who think of America as their country only, and who do not couple their loyalty with any other nation in any other continent. I wish that they could be aroused to a sense of the menace that is apparent now in the Congress of the United States. Those who are endeavoring to break down the national-origins provision are in fact threatening the destruction of the whole system of restriction adopted by Congress in 1924 after careful deliberation.

Somebody owns this country. Either we own it, or they do; and we got here first. We must realize that the America of the future, the America of our grandchildren, can not exist in the form in which America stands to-day unless we keep America for the Americans and suffice ourselves with the adequate population we have here to-day. We have tasks enough without introducing vast groups who are alien to our language, alien to our political institutions, alien to our habits of life, alien to everything we hold dear, and, if we depart from that system, then I think that more than in any other way we will jeopardize that America for our grandchildren.

INVESTIGATION OF COAL FIELDS OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a series of articles by Mr. Basil M. Manly on the coal situation in Pennsylvania, which were printed in the Milwaukee Journal. Mr. Manly was a joint chairman of the War Labor Board with Chief Justice Taft.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THOUSANDS FAMISHED IN COAL-STRIKE AREA—ENDURANCE OF MINERS' FLESH PITTED AGAINST THE STAYING POWER OF OPERATORS' BANK ACCOUNTS—9 CENTS A DAY FOR FOOD PER PERSON IN MANY FAMILIES

PITTSBURGH, PA.—Here in the heart of the bituminous coal fields of the Nation, in a territory covering a large part of three great States, half a million men, women, and children are matching their capacity to go without adequate food, clothing, and shelter against the ability of the coal corporations to pass dividends and avoid bankruptcy. The endurance of the miners' flesh is pitted against the staying power of the operators' bank accounts.

With the thermometer hovering around zero while this is being written, a hundred thousand striking miners' families in the coal fields of central and western Pennsylvania, northern West Virginia, and Ohio are living on an average allowance of $3 a week or less from the union treasury. In the Pittsburgh district, the center of the contest, the standard amount allotted is $1 a week for each adult and 35 cents for each child. In the outlying districts, where the struggle is less intense, the allowance is even smaller.

A FEW OWN HOMES

A few of the striking miners are living in their own homes bought and paid for during the period of war prosperity. Some are still living in company houses, with bonds of $750 a family posted to guarantee rent, while they await the day when the coal company will no longer tolerate their presence and start eviction proceedings. In many of the coal camps in the Pittsburgh district, however, the striking miners and their families have been evicted from the company property and forced to find shelter wherever they could. Sometimes they have been driven out to make room for strike breakers, but in a large number of cases there has been no such excuse. Thousands of miners with their wives and children have been evicted from camps where no attempt is being made to operate. The union's offer to post bond to cover rent has been refused; families have been driven out by the sheriff and his deputies in the dead of winter and every door and window in the houses has been boarded up as in a deserted village.

This makes for bitterness. A man who has lived 5, 10, even 20 years in a company house can not easily accept the logic of a situation which makes the corporation evict when it has no use for the vacant room. But this is industrial war and there is no quarter.

12,000 LIVE IN BARRACKS

More than 12,000 of these evicted persons in the Pittsburgh district alone are already living in barracks hastily built by the union out of unmatched boards and tar paper. Every day new barracks are being constructed. Located usually on neutral property across the road from the mining town they stand confronting the company houses filled with strike breakers or with every door and window boarded up. The very sight helps to increase the friction.

One room, split in two by a rough board partition, is the standard rule in these miners' barracks for each evicted family regardless of size. There may be three children. There may be seven. All must be crowded into this one room. No provisions are made for the single men. They can shift for themselves.

NO RACE SUICIDE

There is no race suicide—little, if any, birth control—among the miners; 5, 6, 7, and 8 children are common. Here, therefore, is the typical situation we find in these barrack rooms, into which the evicted families in their desperation have crowded. In front of the dividing partition is the cook stove, which provides heat for the room and fire to cook the food, whenever there is anything to cook. Near the one window is the small table at which the family, in relays, can eat. Two chairs, with perhaps a sewing machine or some other prized article, completes the furnishing of the "living room." Behind the partitions is the "sleeping room." Here every inch of space is covered with some kind of bed—a doubled bed for the man and wife, into which one or more of the babies are crowded, with cots, cribs, and pallets for the older boys and girls.

Privacy? No. Overcrowded? Yes. But there is no lack of ventilation. With the temperature below freezing and a 30-mile wind howling down the valleys and across the hillsides, there is warmth and a measure of comfort in snuggling up close as the cold air rushes in through the unmatched boards.

UNION PROVIDES COAL

The union provides coal, usually dug by the strikers themselves from some neighboring hillside mine on a royalty basis; but the $3 a week allowance from the union must furnish food, clothing, and other necessaries. For a family of five this means a little less than 9 cents per person per day. It is less than 3 cents a meal. Think of what you can buy for 3 cents. The menu must be simple and monotonous—bread and beans, bread and more beans, with occasionally a hunk of soup meat that can be cooked with plenty of water, potatoes, and seasoning to give a little variety to the bread and beans. There is no milk for the children, even for the babies, except what they are able to get from their mother's breast.

The children are hungry and underfed. And the mothers, who turn aside from the table in order that their children may have a little more, are even hungrier and more undernourished.

CLERGYMEN ASK FUNDS

That is why the clergymen's fund for miners' relief of Pittsburgh, representing all denominations, has just issued the following statement after an intensive investigation of all the adjacent camps:

"We are appealing to you on behalf of the suffering people whose need is desperate and whose plight is deplorable, the families of coal miners, especially their women and children. There have been many families found, by the personal inquiry and visitation of our experienced social workers, to be really destitute. Children are going half naked and babies are starving for milk. Bad enough at present, the situation grows worse, and the wretched harvest of malnutrition and exposure will be reaped in the months to come. Careful investigation continues as fast as our limited staff permits, and the completed story is obviously appalling. We take no side in any controversy in the coal industry, but we do attempt to speak for those who can not speak for themselves, and we do appeal for generous funds in the name of our common humanity."

And yet, amid all this destitution and suffering, there is among the miners a stubborn determination to carry on, to stick for the preservation of the union wage scale, not only among the men but also among the women and older children. The miners' slogan is still—

"No compromise!"

CONTRACT IS BROKEN

This strike started so long ago that all except the active participants have forgotten its origin and motive. Nearly four years ago the operators in the union fields, acting it is alleged under some Government pressure exerted through Secretaries Hoover and Davis, signed what has now become famous as the Jacksonville agreement, providing for the payment of a basic wage of $7.50 a day, to continue until April, 1927. In less than six months the Consolidation Coal Co., alleged by the miners to be controlled by the Rockefellers, broke its contract and attempted to operate nonunion, claiming that they could not otherwise compete with the nonunion operators of West Virginia and Kentucky, who had cut their basic wage to $5 or less per day. A year later the Pittsburgh Coal Co., the largest producer in the United States, alleged by the United Mine Workers to be under the domination of the Mellon interests, likewise broke its agreement and served notice that it would thereafter fix its own scale. The basic wage was cut $2.50 per day and the 20,000 employees of this company struck. They have now been out of work for 29 months.

In spite of the breaking away of these two large companies, the union managed to hold in line substantially all those who had agreements until April 1, 1927, the end of the contract period. Then it was met by a concerted movement on the part of practically all the operators in the large producing districts demanding a revision of the scale downward to the nonunion level. The operators, from their standpoint, make out a strong case for such a revision. Faced by a wage scale in Kentucky and West Virginia averaging about 30 per cent lower than that provided in the Jacksonville agreement, they were obviously up against a ruinous competition unless the superior efficiency of the union miners and the favorable location of their properties gave them offsets which would neutralize this advantage.

The union in the conference at Miami argued strenuously that they could substantially overcome this disadvantage, and some of the operators agreed with them. But as a body the coal companies refused to renew the agreement and the union called its members out on strike.

PLAN TO BREAK UNION

To-day, however, this difference over the wage scale has been almost forgotten. The union alleges and submits a considerable amount of supporting evidence which has not been denied that the operators, under the influence or coercion of the Mellon interests, exerted through railroads, banks, and industrial corporations are now engaged in a movement to destroy the United Mine Workers' organization. It is charged, and some specific instances are cited, that these railroads, banks, and industrial corporations have served notice on operators who were willing to accept the union scale that they would not finance them or purchase from them if they should enter into contracts with the union.

This is the basis upon which the miners justify their stubborn resistance and their willingness to see their families suffer hunger and cold. They believe they are fighting for a fundamental principle in defense of which almost any sacrifice is justified.

And their wives, who are as a rule more aggressive and more expressive than the men, back them up in this determination with the declaration phrased in the words of little Mrs. Shako of Russelton:

"As long as we have a bite to eat and a bit of fire to keep us warm, we will fight on. And when the warm weather of the springtime comes, we will start all over again."

COAL AND IRON POLICE NOT SUBJECT TO PUBLIC—MINING COMPANIES ARE EMPLOYING THEIR OWN MEN, WHO HAVE SOMETIMES BEEN DISCHARGED FROM STATE FORCE FOR ASSAULT, VIOLENCE, OR BRUTALITY

PITTSBURGH, PA.—When the congressional committee on the bituminous coal strike, provided for in the resolution of Senator HIRAM W. JOHNSON, Republican of California, begins its hearings of the charges and countercharges of strikers' violence and police brutality it will inevitably be led to center its investigation on the peculiar institution known as the coal and iron police of Pennsylvania.

The committee will find that in those communities controlled by coal companies which have relied upon the Pennsylvania constabulary, popularly known as the "State troopers," to protect their properties there has been a minimum of friction and violence. On the other hand, it will find that where the coal companies, acting under the antiquated law which permits them to employ men at the company's expense, without any State examination of their records and qualifications, and equip them with police uniforms, clubs, and riot guns, there has been endless bitterness and brutality.

In the one case the State pays its constabulary and holds its officers responsible. They look to the public treasury for their wages and within reasonable limits, at least as far as this particular controversy is concerned, maintain a neutral attitude and seek merely to preserve order and enforce the law.

PRIVATE POLICE HARASS STRIKERS

In the other case the coal and iron police are paid by the coal companies themselves, and, with or without justification from the officials, appear to believe that it is their duty to harass the strikers as much as possible. Exercising under the law all the power and authority conferred upon a police officer of Philadelphia, they are in a position to make arrests upon little or no provocation and to wield their clubs and riot sticks as freely as they choose.

The committee will also find, as the writer has found, that it is impossible to sift out the facts in the hundreds of cases of alleged violence and brutality, supported by affidavits and depositions, which will be brought before it by the operators and striking miners.

The operators will cite numerous cases of assaults on strikebreakers, discoveries of bombs and infernal machines on company property, explosions on the public highways which wrecked pay cars, and mysterious fires alleged to have been set in company houses in the dead of night. These charges, with the exception of the assault charges, which are not altogether denied by the union, will be supported almost exclusively by circumstantial evidence which no committee will ever be able to unravel.

The operators blame every fire, every property destruction, that takes place anywhere in the strike zone on the union. The strikers reply that many of them have originated from natural causes or accidents and that it is not unknown for detectives and mine guards to plant bombs and provoke acts of violence in order to create a reason for their continued employment.

DIFFICULT TO FIX BLAME

So likewise, when the committee begins its examination of the charges made by the strikers of police brutality, it will find them supported chiefly by the testimony of prejudiced witnesses and as vehemently denied by equally prejudiced witnesses on the other side. It will be difficult to fix responsibility.

The committee can, however, perform a great public service if it will probe to the very bottom the organization, personnel, functions, and activities of the Pennsylvania coal and iron police. This organization which has been responsible for a large part of the friction, bitterness, and violence in every great industrial dispute in this State during the last generation, has been more or less strongly condemned by almost every investigating committeee that has encountered it, but it has never been subjected to a searching investigation.

It has been shown by official inquiries that individual members of the coal and iron police have criminal records, that they are in part recruited from the men who have been discharged from the Pennsylvania constabulary for cause, and that they are irresponsible and virtually uncontrolled. But there has never been an investigation that took the lid off the entire system of private employment of police officers and let the people of Pennsylvania and the Nation see the startling abuses that are inevitable under such a plan.

ABUSES OF PRIVATE POLICE

It is possible that when the law provided for the coal and iron police was enacted more than 30 years ago, there was a reasonable basis for their existence. At that time no State undertook to police its entire area, and it was perhaps not unnatural to provide that the coal and iron companies, located largely in isolated communities, should be given authority to employ and commission men to protect their properties. To-day, however, the system is a survival of a condition of industrial feudalism which should not be tolerated in any civilized community.

This is not merely a conclusion of the writer as a result of this investigation. It is the deliberate judgment of the United States coal commission, headed by John Hays Hammond, one of the Nation's greatest mining engineers, and composed entirely of conservative citizens who can not be suspected of prejudice in favor of the miners. That commission, reporting in 1923 to the President and Congress, declared:

"The commission can not too strongly condemn the custom of permitting either operators or miners to furnish deputy sheriffs, policemen, or other public officials not paid out of the public treasury. That State and local government has not risen to the level of the average idea of justice in America which has not both the will and power to preserve the life and property of its citizens."

While the United States coal commission thus strongly condemned the system of empowering private parties to provide for the policing of industry, it took no effective steps to bring about the repeal of the legislation which legalizes it. The coal and iron police therefore flourish in Pennsylvania and have their counterparts under different names in the fields of West Virginia and other States.

STRIKERS HATE MERCENARIES

In order to understand the bitterness of the strikers and their families against these mercenaries of industrial war, it is sufficient to cite two incidents which have occurred since the writer arrived in the coal fields and which have been investigated with the greatest possible care.

On January 14 a group of strike breakers, employed by the Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Corporation, were passing the strikers' barracks at Broughton, Pa., under the escort of half a dozen coal and iron police. A group of the strikers' children began to jeer them as they passed, calling "scabs, scabs, dirty scabs." One of the strike breakers fired two shots in the direction of the children. Mrs. Clarissa Englert, wife of one of the strikers, heard the shots. Knowing that two of her youngsters were in the group, she rushed madly from the barracks to protect her children, and added her imprecations to those of the boys and girls, who were now running away, terror stricken.

Perhaps in her rage the crazed mother may have rushed blindly at the policemen and the strike breakers, as is claimed in their behalf. In any event she was roughly seized, handcuffed, and dragged screaming toward police headquarters, protesting to the officers that she was about to become a mother, and that such treatment was likely to have serious consequences. To-day the unborn child is dead and the mother lies in her bed in the miserable barracks with her wrists swollen and bruised from the pressure of the handcuffs as she was dragged along.

BEAT INNOCENT MAN

Two days later, on the evening of January 16, the little community at Coverdale, Pa., was quiet when suddenly an automobile containing Sergt. Newbille Miller and other coal and iron police came down the Bethel Road. Sergeant Miller had just been released from the Allegheny County jail, where he had been held for three days on an assault charge. Apparently thirsting for revenge, the police pulled their automobile up by the roadside and, according to the complainants, started making arrests indiscriminately.

Andy Karback, a middle-aged striker, was some 50 feet off the road on his own property preparing to rebuild a little shoemaking shop which had been mysteriously burned some time ago. Suddenly and without provocation, according to the citizens of the town, Miller and his men started toward Karback and began to beat him with their riot sticks. He was knocked down unconscious, and five days after the assault still lay in his bed moaning with pain from a great gash in his head and with his arms and shoulders covered with bruises where the blows from the heavy hickory riot sticks fell.

After beating Karback, the complainants charge, Sergeant Miller and his associates, who had now been joined by other coal and iron police, turned the corner and started toward the barracks occupied by the striking miners. Here they again opened hostilities. A dog standing beside its mistress 30 feet from the road was shot dead with a riot gun; and at least two of the slugs struck, without seriously injuring, little Stanley Kiechel, 2 years old, who was being held in his father's arms on the edge of the crowd.

16 "POLICE" ARRESTED

Sixteen of the coal and iron police concerned in this affair are now under bonds totaling $16,000 on charges of rioting, and Sergeant Miller, against whom were issued three additional warrants charging felonious assault, assault and battery, and wanton discharge of firearms, is a fugitive from justice. The justice who issued the warrants, Squire Charles W. Linepensel, of Bethel, Pa., happened to be present and saw what happened.

When the writer called on George F. Osler, vice president of the corporation employing the coal and iron police concerned in these two affairs, to get his side of the story, he was indignant that warrants for their arrest should have been issued. According to his version, Sergeant Miller and his men were merely engaged in protecting the employees of the company when they were assaulted by the strikers. "And this other case," said Mr. Osler, "this case of Mrs. Englert, that they say was beaten up by the coal and iron police, do you know what she did? Why, she bit a policeman!"

Perhaps she did; but if so, according to witnesses, it was while she was being dragged, handcuffed, to police headquarters after she had rushed out of her home to protect her children, at whom she believed shots were being fired.

Thirty years ago the Pennsylvania coal and iron police may have had a legitimate function, but to-day all impartial and official investigators agree that it is an outworn institution that should be abolished in favor of a system under which the State and the municipalities assume the entire responsibility for enforcing law and preserving the public peace.

GUARDS IN MELLON MINES HINDER PROHIBITION MEN—SECRETARY OF TREASURY IS HEAD OF DRY ENFORCEMENT AND ALSO CONTROLS MINES WHERE BOOTLEGGING AND DOPE PEDDLING FLOURISH, ACCORDING TO CHARGE OF WORKERS

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The petition of Philip Murray, vice president of the United Mine Workers, is now filed with the United States Prohibition Bureau at Washington. It demands a clean-up of vice, bootlegging, and dope peddling alleged to exist in the mining camps of the Pittsburgh Coal Co. It is virtually a demand that Andrew W. Mellon should look to his own back yard.

As Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon is supreme head of the enforcement of prohibition laws as well as of the Harrison Antinarcotic Act. Both are administered by his department. He is also, according to well-informed authorities in Pittsburgh financial circles, the largest individual stockholder and the dominant force of the Pittsburgh Coal Co., against which the United Mine Workers have been striking for more than 30 months.

As the stockholders' list of the Pittsburgh Coal Co. has never been made public, there is no way of verifying this except through an official investigation. This would require the production of the company's financial records. It appears certain, however, that the Mellon family control the corporation. R. B. Mellon, a brother, is a member of the board of directors and the Union Trust Co., a Mellon bank, holds more than $10,000,000 of its securities.

ASKS INVESTIGATION

"If the prohibition officials at Washington would order an honest and thorough investigation of the mining camps of the Pittsburgh Coal Co.," Murray declared, "they would find that bootlegging and drug peddling are being openly carried on with the knowledge of the coal and iron police employed by this corporation. We have positive evidence of such a traffic being carried on at the Pittsburgh Coal Co.'s camps at Moon Run and Carnegie.

"We also know not only from our own people but from deputy sheriffs and officials that bootlegging and dope peddling flourish at the Pittsburgh Coal Co.'s mine, Bontour No. 9, near McDonald, Pa.; at Bontour No. 2, near Bridgeville; at the Worden mine, near Scott Haven; at the Ocean Mine No. 5, near Smithdale; and at the Crescent No. 4, near California, Pa.

"At several of these mining camps there have been raids by deputy sheriffs who have caught the bootleggers redhanded, and at others attempts of officials to enforce the law and stop the traffic in illicit liquor and drugs have been blocked by coal and iron police, who have refused to permit the camps to be entered even by officers of the law.

OFFICIALS DO NOT HELP

"This wholesale traffic in liquor and drugs," continued Murray, "could not be carried on if the officials of Mr. Mellon's own company, the Pittsburgh Coal Co., were determined to stop it. Every one of these camps is guarded by coal and iron police employed and completely controlled by that corporation. No one can enter one of these camps at any hour of the day or night without the consent of these police unless he carries a pass signed by an officer of the company.

"Nor can it be claimed that the large amounts of liquor that we know are being sold in these camps have been smuggled in. It must either be taken in by the truckload or manufactured on the premises.

"It may be that the cocaine and other drugs that are being sold in these camps principally to the negro strike breakers are smuggled in, because they can be put up in small packages that are easily concealed in the clothing; but the large-scale sale of whisky and alcohol can be carried on only with the knowledge and consent of the coal and iron police. And they would not dare tolerate this open traffic if they had orders from the company officials that it must be stopped."

COMPANY POLICE INTERFERE

Murray's charge that coal and iron police have prevented officials engaged in the enforcement of the prohibition law from entering the camps was confirmed by District Attorney Samuel H. Gardner, who declared that on several occasions constables engaged in the investigation of the liquor traffic had been held up by company police. The Pittsburgh Coal Co. declined to comment on the charges.

In further support of his charges of wholesale bootlegging in and around the mining camps of this general territory, Murray cited the arrest last week of Joseph A. Meagher, vice president of the Ohio Coal Operators' Association, and eight associates by the Federal prohibition administrator, John D. Pennington, of Pittsburgh, on charges of illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors. Meagher and one of his associates, Harry Gee, a West Virginia millionaire, have been released on bonds of $5,000 each.

The significance of these arrests, according to Murray, lies in the fact that Meagher and a number of those arrested with him, particularly Nick J. Hanna, of Pittsburgh, are engaged in the business of supplying labor to the coal companies against which the United Mine Workers are now on strike. Harry Gee, the West Virginian, has also been a director of the "open-shop" organization of which Meagher was manager for many years. It is Murray's opinion that further investigation may show that these men had a large part in the control of the bootlegging which is said to flourish in the mining camps to which they furnished labor.

LABOR, LIQUOR SUPPLIED

Meagher, who is a member of the industrial group of the Republican executive committee, is said to have been in charge of the strike-breaking activities of the United States Steel Corporation during the great steel strike of 1920. He is also alleged to operate detective agencies through which men are recruited for the Pennsylvania coal and iron police. Through these various channels which brought him into close contact with the coal industry throughout this section, Meagher unquestionably had exceptional facilities to reach the mining camps which are closed to everyone else.

Murray, who as international vice president of the miners' union filed the charges in Washington against the Pittsburgh Coal Co. and other corporations in this district, declares that he intends to press them vigorously.

"If we can not get a prompt and thorough investigation of this situation through Mr. Mellon's department," Murray stated, "we are going to carry our charges to Congress. With the large majority of prohibitionists that is said to exist in both the House and Senate, there should be an active interest in the wholesale violation of the Volstead Act and the antinarcotic laws which have been permitted to grow up here in the heart of the coal fields.

"This sale of illicit liquor and drugs is responsible for a large part of the violence that has occurred in the strike zone. There have been almost 100 murders in the coal camps of the Pittsburgh district since this situation was permitted to develop, and it is easy to trace a majority of them to bad liquor. Drunken brawls in these camps are of common occurrence. Fights and assaults by drunken men and women have ceased to attract more than passing attention.

"We are interested in this bootlegging situation in the coal camps, not as reformers, but as labor leaders striving to conduct a strike involving nearly 750,000 men, women, and children with the minimum of friction and violence. This outrageous situation must be cleaned up, and we shall not rest until it is done."

COMMUNISTS GAINING CONVERTS IN EASTERN COAL STRIKE AREA—COLD, HUNGER, AID TO REDS—UNION LOST AUTHORITY TO PREVENT ACTS OF VIOLENCE

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The attempts of the communists, working through the Trade Union Educational League and the camouflaged Pennsylvania-Ohio-Colorado Miners' Relief Committee, to sow the seeds of their doctrines among the 100,000 striking miners in the bituminous-coal fields are regarded by many operators and union officials as constituting a definite menace.

Up to the present this strike in the coal fields of central and western Pennsylvania, Ohio, and northern West Virginia has been free from large-scale violence. There have been clashes between strikers and strike breakers and strikers and coal and iron police, but no lives have been lost and few have been seriously injured. The officials of the United Mine Workers in charge of the strike, under the direction of Philip Murray, international vice president, have issued repeated statements to their organizers and to the rank and file of the striking miners cautioning them against the use of violence. So far these warnings have been reasonably effective.

REDS NOW BUSY

The radical communists, avowed advocates of revolutionary action, are now busy in every district of the coal fields, and in spite of the efforts of the United Mine Workers' officials are unquestionably making some progress. For the present those who are directing this propaganda are directing their efforts to reaching the rank and file and are not attempting to test their strength by seeking to assert control except in a few isolated local unions.

The coal-strike situation provides an ideal planting ground for the seeds of communism. Here are more than 100,000 miners, all of whom have been on strike for more than nine months, while thousands have been out for more than two years. They and their families are hungry and cold. The international treasury of the United Mine Workers, as well as the funds of the State and local organizations, have been depleted by the unusual duration of the strike. It has therefore been necessary to reduce the allowances paid out of the union funds to maintain the families of the strikers so low that it is now insufficient to cover even the cost of food. In the Pittsburgh district it is less than 9 cents a person a day, and in some of the outlying districts it is less than 2 cents.

INJUNCTIONS ARE FACTOR

Finally there is the condition of practically complete inaction on the part of the strikers prescribed by the injunctions which have been issued by the State and Federal courts. Except for the maintenance of three pickets at the posts fixed by court order, the miners are prohibited from engaging in any of the activities commonly used to preserve the morale and enthusiasm of men on strike. They can not parade. They can not congregate in numbers on or near any highway leading to the coal company's property. They can not even hold union meetings, because most of the union halls have been converted into barracks to house the evicted strikers, and it is too cold to hold such meetings in the open.

Under these conditions of suffering, inaction, and deadly monotony, it is easy for the clever communist propagandists to sow their seeds of dissatisfaction and unrest and gain converts to their program of revolutionary action. Bringing promises of material relief in the form of food and clothing, it is easy for them to secure a hearing among the strikers.

TACTICS ARE SIMPLE

Their tactics are simple. They criticize what they call the "do nothing" policy of the union leaders whose hands have been tied by the drastic provisions of the court injunctions. They charge diversion of funds by the union officials. "Millions of dollars," they say, "have been paid into the international union treasury in dues and assessments. Hundreds of thousands have been contributed by other labor unions to aid the strike. Where are these millions to-day? Have you got them? Why are they giving you only $3 a week to buy food for your hungry families? Ask your president, John L. Lewis. Ask Philip Murray. Ask any of your union officials. They know where this money went, and they don't dare to tell you."

After thus attempting to undermine the confidence of the strikers in their leaders the communist propagandists urge militant action "to bring the bosses to their knees and force a speedy settlement." They do not tell the strikers that the only result of such "militant action" would be to bring in the State or Federal troops and further reduce the possibilities of a reasonable settlement.

BORE FROM WITHIN

This insidious propaganda is being disseminated by the communists through three main channels. First, the Trade Union Educational League, founded by William Z. Foster with the aid and comfort of the Third Internationale at Moscow. A Pittsburgh branch of the league was organized on January 16 under the direction of Jack Johnstone, national organizer. It is also active in other districts. The second channel of propaganda is the so-called Pennsylvania-Ohio-Colorado miners' relief committee with national headquarters at 799 Broadway, New York. Behind the charitable camouflage of this organization the propagandists are working actively. Third, and perhaps most effective of all, are the communists within the ranks of the miners union itself. In spite of the clauses in the union's constitution and by-laws prohibiting any communist or I. W. W. from holding a union card, they are there. Working under cover they carry out the traditional communist tactics of "boring from within" and doing everything possible to discredit the regular trade-union officials.

COLORADO IS EXAMPLE

The dangerous possibilities of this situation are to be seen in the strike now being conducted in the Colorado coal fields under I. W. W. leadership where half a dozen have been killed and a score seriously injured.

Philip Murray, international vice president of the United Mine Workers, who is in charge of strike headquarters at Pittsburgh, when questioned about the activities of the communists, said:

"The disruptive tactics of the communists who are now becoming active in this district are not new. They are encountered by the United Mine Workers in every strike. The union has been fighting the growth of revolutionary radicalism as manifested by the I. W. W.'s and communists for 20 years and we shall continue to do so. I do not believe they have made any substantial headway among the union miners. What may happen, however, if the operators continue indefinitely to refuse to enter into negotiations for the settlement of this strike, no one can foretell."

OPERATOR IS CONCERNED

More definite concern about the situation was expressed by one of the operators, who refused to permit his name to be used but who is generally regarded as fair-minded and farsighted. "Some of my friends among the operators," he said, "are viewing the growing activities of the communists in this district with some degree of satisfaction. They know that their disruptive activities are causing the union officials much trouble and diverting their attention from the effective conduct of the strike. They believe also that the communists' silly charges that Lewis, Murray, and other officials are grafting on the union funds are being believed by some of the rank and file and destroying their confidence in their leaders. They feel that in a sense this is industrial war and that propaganda from any source that weakens the enemy's morale is justified.

"That may be true for the moment, but in the long run I think their judgment is bad. Chickens will come home to roost.

"If I had my way," he continued, "the operators would assist the union in checking the dangerous activities of the communists. There are only a handful of them to-day, but with a hundred thousand miners on strike and almost as many more idle as a result of the depression in other industries, they will grow like weeds. They are a menace not only to the union and the operators, but to the entire community and the sooner we are rid of them the better."

COAL INDUSTRY NEEDS A MORGAN AND FORD—ANTIQUATED WAYS, COMPETITION, AND OVERPRODUCTION HANDICAPS

PITTSBURGH, PA.—What the bituminous coal industry needs is a Pierpont Morgan to eliminate its crazy, cutthroat competition and a Henry Ford to take it in hand and make it productively sound and efficient.

This is the general opinion of the operators, miners, union officials, and technical experts.

Here is the Nation's basic industry, in which more than 100,000 miners are now on strike, in which no company, large or small, is assured of making even a reasonable profit, year in and year out, and in which the consumers are confronted by wildly fluctuating prices—low when they don't want coal, high when they do.

WORK NEVER STEADY

Paying a high wage scale—$7.50 a day for labor in the union fields before the strike—it never operated steadily enough to give its workers enough to support a family in health and reasonable comfort. Charging domestic consumers an excessive price for coal, the mines operated so irregularly that profits were largely eaten up by fixed charges and maintenance costs. Failing to profit by the lessons of the great mechanical advances in every other American industry, a majority of companies, unwilling to risk large capital investments, have continued to use the methods and equipment of a generation ago.

The twin curses of the industry are overdevelopment and cutthroat competition. If all the mines in the United States were operated at full capacity throughout the year, they would produce nearly 50 per cent more coal than the Nation can consume. So every operator is so hungry for business that he is ready to cut prices in slack periods below cost of production and depend on making up his losses by charging excessive prices whenever there is a heavy demand.

RAILROADS BOOST PRODUCTION

The desire of the railroads for traffic also makes for overdevelopment. They encourage opening of new mines where none are needed in order to insure themselves a large coal traffic.

The competition is so keen, labor officials insist, that wage reductions will not solve the problem even for operators in union fields. If the union should accept a cut to $5 a day, according to this view, nonunion fields will drop their basic wage to $4, and so on down the scale.

The operators insist that they can not continue to pay the Jacksonville scale of $7.50 a day and compete with the nonunion operators, who pay $5 or less.

The present deadlock in the bituminous coal fields has already cost the union miners more than $100,000,000 in wages and the coal corporations probably half that in lost profits and extra depreciation. And this is merely the culmination of similar losses in previous years as a result of strikes and irregular operation.

DISASTER MODIFIES VIEWS

These disastrous experiences have wrought a great change in the attitude of both the union and the operators but have not produced a meeting of minds on any constructive solution.

"There will be no stability in the bituminous coal industry," declares Philip Murray, vice president of the Mine Workers' Union, "until there are revolutionary changes in the very structure of the industry. At the Miami conference last spring, we proposed a joint committee of miners and operators and experts to study the situation and prescribe a remedy. But our proposal was rejected without discussion. We stand ready to renew this conference not only to settle this immediate dispute on the wage question, but also to work out a constructive solution for the problem of the industry."

"As far as we are concerned," J. D. A. Morrow, president of the Pittsburgh Coal Co., declared to the writer, "there is no strike and no problems that we are not rapidly solving."

DONE WITH UNION

"We are done with the union. We would not sign a contract with the United Mine Workers, no matter what wage reductions they might propose to accept," continued Mr. Morrow, who, at the age of 46, has had a spectacular rise from statistician in a Government bureau 12 years ago to the head of the largest coal-producing company in the United States.

"Since we broke with the union we have equipped our plants with modern machinery, trained a new force of men to work with up-to-date methods, and now can give 300 days' work a year to every man on our pay roll. With our new methods of mining and preparation we are really manufacturing coal for special purposes. This gives us a market several times as wide as we had before the strike. We anticipate no further difficulties."

"Why did you find it necessary to cut wages the first of this month?" the writer inquired.

WILL FORCE CHANGES

"That was a readjustment," Morrow answered. "We substituted a nonunion scale, in which men are paid according to their ability and industry, for a union scale, in which they are paid substantially a flat rate. The least skilled workers are cut some $2.50 a day below the union scale but the skilled men can earn more."

Here we have the biggest coal corporation equipping and organizing its plants for modern mass production of coal. This, added to the existent competition from the nonunion fields of Kentucky and West Virginia, means disaster to operators in the union fields unless they can reorganize to meet it.

An opportunity for such a reorganization appears to be provided by the bill introduced in Congress by Senator COPELAND and Representative JACOBSTEIN, both Democrats from New York, apparently with some aid and comfort from Secretary of Labor James J. Davis. This provides for repeal of the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts as applied to the bituminous-coal industry to permit the creation of cooperative associations for the marketing of coal.

This measure has not yet received the formal indorsement of either the operators or the miners. Both are, however, inclined to consider it favorably.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics," on page 26, line 8, after the name "District of Columbia," to insert "and not to exceed $5,000 may be expended for the development and procurement of a design for a wind tunnel suitable for research on full-sized airplanes," so as to make the paragraph read:

For scientific research, technical investigations, and special reports in the field of aeronautics, including the necessary laboratory and technical assistants; contracts for personal services in the making of special investigations and in the preparation of special reports; traveling expenses of members and employees; including not to exceed $500 for expenses, except membership fees, of attendance upon meetings of technical and professional societies; office supplies and other miscellaneous expenses, including technical periodicals and books of reference; equipment, maintenance, and operation of the Langley Memorial Aeronautical Laboratory; purchase, maintenance, operation, and exchange of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; personal services in the field and in the District of Columbia; in all, $587,000, of which amount not to exceed $72,560 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia and not to exceed $5,000 may be expended for the development and procurement of a design of a wind tunnel suitable for research on full-sized airplanes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement of the investigations for the conduct of the full-scale wind tunnel, which has been received by the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

INVESTIGATIONS FOR CONDUCT IN FULL-SCALE WIND TUNNEL

REQUESTED BY ARMY AND NAVY

Effect of various forms of cowling on performance and engine operation of air-cooled pursuit airplane.

Design factors for metal propellers.

Determination of moment coefficients and hinge moment coefficients for different tail surfaces.

Determination of aileron hinge moments versus rolling moments for various types of ailerons and wings.

Investigation of wing flutter.

Study of control at low speeds, involving the use of flaps, slots, and spoilers.

Investigation of the Handley Page automatic slot.

Study of aerodynamic and cooling effect of wing radiators for development of high-speed airplanes.

SUGGESTED BY INDUSTRY

Effect of cowling and fuselage shape on the resistance and cooling characteristics of air-cooled engines.

INCLUDED IN PROGRAM RECOMMENDED BY REPRESENTATIVES OF GOVERNMENT AGENCIES INTERESTED

Tests of wooden VE-7 propellers.

Effect on propeller-blade deflections of the distribution of the sections along the radius (sweepback, rake, etc.).

Investigation of effect of fuselage interference on propeller characteristics.

Investigation of effect of high-tip speeds.

Investigation of propeller-blade sections.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital," on page 27, line 8, after the word "employees," to insert "at rates of pay approved by the director, not exceeding current rates for similar employment in the District of Columbia," so as to make the paragraph read:

For general expenses in connection with the maintenance, care, improvement, protection, operation, repair, cleaning, heating, and lighting of the Washington Monument and grounds; the Lincoln Memorial and reflecting pool; the house where Abraham Lincoln died; grounds surrounding executive departments; and public buildings in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction of the office of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, including the installation of an electric elevator in the Winder Building, not to exceed $10,000; per diem employees at rates of pay approved by the director, not exceeding current rates for similar employment in the District of Columbia; rent of buildings in the District of Columbia; city directories; contingent expenses; traveling expenses and car fare not exceeding $300; communication service; professional, scientific, technical, and law books; periodicals and reference books; blank books and forms; photographs; maps; leather and rubber articles and gas masks for the protection of public property and employees; not exceeding $7,000 for uniforms for employees; the maintenance, repair, exchange, storage, and operation of not to exceed one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; the purchase, maintenance, and repair of equipment and fixtures; $857,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 24, to strike out:

A plot of ground comprising not to exceed 42,000 square feet in the southwest corner of square No. 3530, being a portion of the site of the McKinley High School and the Langley Junior High School, is hereby made available for one of the bathing pools authorized by the act approved May 4, 1926.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any further committee amendments?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, a member of the committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], has been authorized to offer another amendment, which is in order at this time.

Mr. JONES. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 36, strike out lines 6 and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For the reconditioning of the steamships Mount Vernon and Monticello at a total cost not in excess of $12,000,000, not to exceed $10,000,000 is made available from the construction loan fund and shall be reimbursed to such fund with interest at such rate and within such period as the board may determine, but not exceeding 10 years after the date of commission of such reconditioned vessels: Provided, That neither of said steamships shall be sold for less than the cost of reconditioning, less a deduction of 5 per cent per annum for depreciation from the date of completion of such reconditioning to the date of sale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that the clerks be authorized to correct all totals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 34, line 4, where the amount fixed is $13,400,000, I move to insert before the semicolon the following proviso:

Provided, That $1,400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for reconditioning and operating 10 ships for carrying coal to foreign ports.

Mr. WARREN. I understand this item has been covered by the amendment just adopted.

Mr. JONES. No; that is another matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 36, line 5, after the word "commission," insert a new paragraph to read as follows:

No part of the funds of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation shall be available for the maintenance of a sea service bureau.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, is not this new legislation?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No. The object of it is to do away with the sea service bureau which is now being maintained by the Shipping Board. I can explain, if the Senator desires, I think very briefly, the object which I have in view in offering the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I would like to have the Senator from Wisconsin make the explanation. I believe the amendment he is offering is out of order, but I should like to hear his explanation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am fully aware of the object of the amendment; but it is clearly legislation. I want to say to the Senator that I am absolutely in sympathy with the object of the amendment. I think it ought to become a law, but I think it ought to be offered as a separate bill amending the original act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is no provision in the law for the maintenance of the sea service bureau.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah make the point of order?

Mr. WARREN. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is overruled, the Chair being of the opinion that the amendment is in the nature of a limitation upon the appropriation and not legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I shall endeavor to explain the purpose of the amendment. As I said a moment ago, in reply to the Senator from Wyoming, there is no provision in the existing law for the sea service bureau. The sea service bureau was created during the war when there was a dearth of seamen and when it was necessary not only to recruit seamen, but also to train them. The sea service bureau was created for that purpose. I believe that in its inception the sea service bureau rendered a service in the emergency of the war, but it has since been maintained by the Shipping Board as a recruiting service for vessels operated by that board. There is no provision in law for its existence, and I am reliably informed that the private operators of ships do not avail themselves of the services of the bureau, the bureau, therefore, being maintained solely for the purpose of recruiting men for service on vessels operated by the board.

As the Senator from Connecticut no doubt knows, the provision of law providing for the shipping of men upon vessels is that they shall be shipped before the Navigation Commissioner set up under the Department of Commerce.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that it was particularly demonstrated on the floor of the House that they were opposed to the provision. It was once contained in the printed bill and was stricken out. The Senate committee stood by that action of the House, so that so far as the appropriation is concerned there is not a penny used for that purpose. Therefore it would seem that it would be better to place it somewhere in legislation by itself rather than in the appropriation bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. So far as my investigation has gone I believe that this is the only manner in which the expenditure of money can be reached because, as I said a moment ago, there is no provision in existing law for the maintenance of the sea service bureau. Therefore no bill could be offered to repeal the statute authorizing it. The point which I desire to make is that I believe the bureau is being maintained at an unnecessarily large expense. I am informed that it runs from $100,000 to $400,000 a year and that it is an unnecessary expense. It is a matter which was discussed in the House when the bill was before that body.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I still think it is not in order, but I shall withdraw my objection and let it go to conference and see what we may be able to do with it there, if the Senator wishes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am endeavoring to satisfy the curiosity of the Senator from Connecticut. I do not desire to detain the Senate long, but I would like to point out to the Senator from Connecticut that when this matter was under discussion in the House a similar amendment to this was offered by Representative DAVIS of Tennessee, and some little debate occurred on the floor by the offering of the amendment. Representative DAVIS served on the select committee of the House which investigated the Shipping Board. I should like to quote, for the information of the Senator, from a portion of the testimony before that select committee. Mr. DAVIS was questioning Mr. T. V. O'Connor, of the board:

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. O'Connor, you are the member of the Shipping Board who has jurisdiction over the sea service bureau, are you not?

Commissioner O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. As I understand, that was a bureau that was established during the war, primarily in order to train seamen to be placed upon the Shipping Board vessels that were being acquired and constructed?

Commissioner O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. At the present time, and for some two or three years past, the sea service bureau has amounted to only a recruiting or seamen's employment service, has it not?

Commissioner O'CONNOR. That is practically all; yes.

I also desire to bring to the attention of the Senator from Connecticut the fact that when Mr. Joseph E. Sheedy, the vice president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and director of operations in immediate charge of the sea service bureau, was on the stand before the committee, Mr. DAVIS asked:

Do you think that the [sea service] bureau performs a successful function?

Mr. SHEEDY. Frankly, I have never been able to find out.

Mr. President, it seems to me, in view of the fact that ample provision is made in the law and appropriations are provided for the shipping of men upon ships before the shipping commissioner, under the Department of Commerce, that this service of the sea service bureau is a duplication and a waste of money. I sincerely hope that the amendment will prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, after line 15, insert the following:

That the duties of the Bureau of Efficiency prescribed by law with reference to investigations in the executive departments and independent establishments of the Federal Government are hereby extended to include the municipal government of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, in line 4, page 34, reducing the appropriation $1,000,000. I move to strike out "$13,400,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$12,400,000."

Mr. JONES. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York proposes an amendment on page 34, line 4, reducing the appropriation by the sum of $1,000,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am seeking to save a million dollars to the people of the United States.

Now, let me explain the significance of this provision.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I understand it is for the purpose of furnishing cheap transportation for coal, thereby possibly relieving to some extent a situation which has been depicted to the Senate for several hours to-day.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, my purpose in proposing this amendment is to call attention to the reason why this sum was raised a million dollars in the House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. The Senator apparently was not present when the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT] offered the amendment to the $13,400,000 appropriation, providing that $1,400,000 of that sum of money should be used for reconditioning a certain number of ships for carrying coal. The Senator from Kentucky offered the amendment, and it was agreed to, so that it leaves only $12,000,000, one may say, for the ordinary operations of the Shipping Board. The $1,400,000 additional was put on in the House of Representatives clearly for the very purpose of fitting out ships for carrying coal.

Mr. COPELAND. That is exactly what it was put on for in the House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES. That is what I say.

Mr. COPELAND. The additional $1,400,000 was put on the bill to do what? To fit out 10 ships owned by the Shipping Board to go into competition with ships privately owned and operated under the American flag, ships which have been sold to private operators by the Shipping Board. Is that the sort of Government this is? Do we coax people to enter the shipping business, beg them to take the ships, encourage them to take the ships by reducing the price, as has been pointed out here during the past two weeks, put those ships into private hands, and then, having done so, do we propose to take some more of our Shipping Board ships and have the Government of the United States go into competition with those private concerns? Now, what has the Senator to say to that?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is claimed that private interests have not the ships.

Mr. COPELAND. Who claims they have not the ships? Mr. President, the American Export line, running to the Mediterranean, has many ships, bought from the Shipping Board, which are operated at a loss. Are we going to act in such a way as to increase their deficit? Are we going to try to push them into bankruptcy by fitting some more Shipping Board ships, at a cost of $1,400,000, to compete with those privately operated ships? I think it is an outrage.

Why should not the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] get up and propose an amendment to this bill appropriating $2,000,000 to put Shipping Board ships in operation to carry the automobiles of Detroit to Europe in order that the freight may be saved?

Do Senators know how much it will cost us as a Nation to do this thing? It will cost $1.48 loss on every ton.

Are we going to give a bonus to the coal industry of this country by supplying these ships under these circumstances? I can not believe it is possible that the Senate is going to agree to any such outrageous proposition.

I move, Mr. President, that a million dollars be stricken from the appropriation. Let the people of this country save that amount of money. If it is desired to go into the business of giving a bonus to the coal people, very well; I will vote to give them a million dollars; but I am not going to vote $1,400,000 of the people's money to fit out ships to carry coal when there are privately operated ships under the American flag going to the same ports.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT] is very much interested in this matter. I myself have given it no consideration at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the amendment referred to is the amendment of my colleague the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT]. When this bill was before the House of Representatives an amendment was offered proposing to increase the appropriation carried in the original bill by $1,400,000. While the amendment itself did not stipulate that that sum should be expended to recondition ships for the exportation of coal, that was the purpose of it, and it was thoroughly understood at the time the amendment was agreed to in the House of Representatives that it was for that purpose. The amendment offered by my colleague simply stipulates that $1,400,000 shall be expended for that purpose. That was the original intention when the amendment was placed on the bill at the other end of the Capitol.

Now, I wish to say, in reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], that the coal industry not only of Kentucky, West Virginia, and Tennessee but of other parts of the United States has been very greatly depressed in the last few years. It is in a state of greater depression now in the section of the country from which I come than it has been in many years, if not at any time in the past. The Shipping Board has indicated its willingness to allocate certain ships that now are in use for the purpose of carrying coal to foreign countries, and thereby to that extent stimulating the coal industry not only in Kentucky, West Virginia, and Tennessee and Alabama, but in Pennsylvania and other States, where that industry is in the situation to which I have referred.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in a moment. While it may be true, as the Senator says, that there are ships privately owned capable of carrying this coal, they are not carrying it and they are not available for carrying it. It certainly is in the interest of the revival of a very substantial industry throughout the United States, which needs such revival, that this amendment should be agreed to, so that the Shipping Board may carry out what it has already said is its desire, to recondition these ships for the purpose of exporting coal. Now I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator from Kentucky believe in giving subsidies?

Mr. BARKLEY. As a general proposition I do not.

Mr. COPELAND. But if it so happens that the coal industry in the State of the Senator needs assistance, then there should be a subsidy?

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendment does not involve a subsidy for coal; there is no provision here that subsidizes coal. This provision does not give to any coal operator or any coal miner any money; it merely provides $1,400,000 for the purpose of putting ships in condition so that they may carry coal that is not subsidized. I do not think by any stretch of the imagination anybody can contend that this is a subsidy given the coal operators or the coal industry, any more than the conditioning of the other ships referred to in the debate which has preceded the debate on the pending bill may be regarded as a subsidy to any private industry in the United States, because those ships happen to carry wheat, or corn, or lumber, or furniture, or any other commodity that is sold to foreign countries.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I should be glad to yield.

Mr. NEELY. I ask the Senator from Kentucky if it is not a fact that all the coal interests ask, and all the representatives of the coal interests ask, is that this great industry be treated like the farming industry and all the other industries of the country that are now receiving benefits from the Government's operation of the merchant marine?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is absolutely true, and the amendment which is pending simply provides that $1,400,000 shall be used for the definite purpose intended by the House when it was put in the bill at the other end of the Capitol and for the purpose which is intended by the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I wish to call his attention to the fact that that is not the pending amendment at all. The amendment providing $1,400,000 for reconditioning certain ships has already been adopted. The amendment of the Senator from New York really has not the faintest relation to it, and he will have to change his amendment very much if he wishes to accomplish what he seeks to accomplish.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understood that the amendment of the Senator from New York was to strike out $1,000,000 of the $1,400,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senate should strike out $1,000,000, it would leave $12,400,000 for the Shipping Board, and the provision in regard to coal-carrying ships would be left intact if the amendment of the Senator from New York were adopted.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not so understand his amendment. If that is true, his amendment is different from the speech he made on it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment should be voted down.

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendment of the Senator from New York is one thing and his speech is another.

Mr. McKELLAR. Exactly.

Mr. COPELAND. The country will not fail to note the connection and the relationship; the country will know that the coal industry has gone into bankruptcy and it has come to Congress on its knees asking for a subsidy of $1,400,000.

Mr. President, the doctors in this country are having a terribly hard time. [Laughter.] Business has been very dull; the income of the medical profession has been greatly reduced; we are not making the money that we formerly made; we can not find a sufficient number of new patients; we can not charge them enough; and so I am going to propose pretty soon an amendment to this bill appropriating $1,400,000 to assist the poor, downtrodden doctors of this country. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if there is a surplus of doctors in the country and they need to be exported, I would not object to an appropriation which would bring about such a result. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I have adequate reasons to believe that a few of the medical profession are greatly increasing their profits by broadcasting addresses on the subject of health. Only yesterday my wife informed me that she had recently enjoyed an address on the subject of hygiene which the distinguished Senator and doctor from New York [Mr. COPELAND] delivered by radio.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. NEELY. The coal operators of Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Tennessee can not under this Pennsylvania-controlled administration broadcast anything for profit. Through fear of the malevolent Pennsylvania influence, a cowardly majority of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission have wickedly robbed the West Virginia coal operators of practically all of their lake cargo business, and pusillanimously created a coal monopoly in the Northwest for the operators of Pennsylvania.

The amendment of the Senator from New York is hostile to the coal business of the entire country. In the event of its adoption some commission might construe it to be an inhibition against conditioning ships to carry coal from West Virginia. So, let me urge all who are interested in seeing the coal industry of the Southern States survive, and all of our progressive friends from the Northwest who want to buy from West Virginia the cheapest and best coal in the world, to vote against the pending amendment.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, just a moment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from New York in all good feeling, that I hope his amendment will be killed.

Mr. COPELAND. I suppose the attitude of the Senator from Wyoming is much like that of the chap who puts a stone around the neck of a man and throws him in the water and says "I am sorry that you are going to drown."

Mr. President, of course I know that the amendment is going to be defeated; I am perfectly aware of that. Exactly the same votes and the same influences that have repeatedly defeated any constructive action seeking the regulation in the interest of society of the coal industry will defeat this amendment, but I will leave it to the country if it is not an indecent act to sell ships to citizens of the United States who, in good faith, have invested their money and are operating those ships at a loss—not at a profit—and now, in order to guarantee their failure and in order to subsidize the bankrupt soft-coal interests of the United States, calmly vote $1,400,000 of the people's money for the benefit of this industry that has had its fingers on the throats of the American people ever since I can remember.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. With the greatest of pleasure.

Mr. NEELY. Not for the benefit of the industry alone, but for the benefit of the consumers throughout the country; and, of course, the Senator from New York knows that the consumers of coal as greatly outnumber the producers as the patients of the country outnumber the doctors who minister to their relief.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I had not given up the floor. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was just going to say a word in reply to the distinguished Senator from New York. On yesterday he was seemingly willing to give away about $500,000,000 worth of ships. He is quibbling to-day over an appropriation of $1,000,000 to see that the coal industry has suitable ships to carry its coal to foreign countries. I am reminded of the old saying about the fellow who strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama may see some inconsistency in my attitude. I do not recognize that there is any. I am seeking to build up an American merchant marine to put the American flag on the seven seas, and I want it done by private citizens of the United States. That is what I have been fighting for for two weeks, and I am here to-day to continue that fight.

Here are lines that we have sold, lines that are in operation. Now, what are we seeking to do? Here are these ships that go from our ports, all of them—116 ships out of the Gulf, besides 150 out of other ports—going to every part of the world, carrying what? Carrying grain and citrus fruits and apples and manufactured articles, automobiles, and coal.

They are in the business of carrying coal, among other things. Now, because this poor, emaciated, skinny, dying industry, the soft-coal industry of this country, has not had wit enough to regulate itself and to make itself a real business—because if there is any industry in this world that has failed to show business sense, it is the coal industry——

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I am not going to yield to the Senator from West Virginia any more.

Mr. NEELY. Just once more.

Mr. COPELAND. No; not at all.

Mr. NEELY. I appeal to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. No, Mr. President.

Mr. NEELY. I appeal from the Senator to the Senator's good nature.

Mr. COPELAND. No, Mr. President. A little while ago I wanted to defend the medical profession, and the Senator would not let me. I am not going to yield now to have him defend these broken-down business men of the State of West Virginia. No; I can not yield, Mr. President.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator does me an injustice. I have never refused to yield to him.

Mr. COPELAND. Well, all right, Mr. President. What does the Senator want to say?

Mr. NEELY. Persistence has again proved the wisdom of the admonition: "If you don't at first succeed, try, try again." I thought the Senator's good nature would assert itself, and I am glad that it did.

Mr. COPELAND. It has, too often.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the object of my interruption was to say that I do not think that it becomes the senior Senator from New York, who is a distinguished Democrat, to make light of the prostrate, bleeding, and mangled remains of the great West Virginia coal industry that has been murdered by a Republican administration.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator for his appropriate remarks. It would have been a calamity if I had not yielded for this purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia does not mean to say that the Republican Party placed the coal in the earth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. With pleasure.

Mr. NEELY. May I answer that?

Mr. COPELAND. Of course.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, one of the most prosperous industries in the world was the coal industry under the Wilson administration.

Mr. SMOOT. During war times.

Mr. NEELY. Does not the Senator from Utah know that the war ended in 1918?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NEELY. Woodrow Wilson was President until the 4th of March, 1921. On the day that his successor was elected practically every coal miner in West Virginia was employed and receiving from $5 to $12 a day for his labor. Within six months after Mr. Harding entered the White House, fully a third of West Virginia's mines were shut down, and thousands of her miners were walking the streets begging for work or bread.

Mr. SMOOT. That all depends upon where the coal is produced. It is not because the coal is not consumed in the United States. The records will show that. Therefore, I will say to the Senator from West Virginia, as far as the overproduction of coal is concerned, that neither the party in power nor the former Democratic administration had anything whatever to do with it. It is a business proposition. The condition is exactly the same in my own State that it is in West Virginia. We produced coal there by the opening of I do not know how many coal mines during war time. If there had been no coal mines opened during the war, when that demand was made for it, there would not be the production of coal that there is in the United States to-day; and it was not on account of the Republican Party that they were opened.

It was on account of the war, and I do not know how many hundreds of coal mines are open that were not opened at that time, and that is the reason why there is an overproduction of coal.

I want to help the Senator get all the foreign markets that it is possible to get for coal, and I am for this amendment.

Mr. NEELY. Not the amendment of the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I mean the amendment that was offered here and already adopted. I do not propose to vote for the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. NEELY. Then I must not continue the debate with the able and accommodating Senator from Utah. I have nothing but flowers for my friends.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator cast a reflection here that was not altogether right, as I construed it, because it is not a question of the Republican Party or the Democratic Party; it is a question of the number of coal mines that have been opened in the United States, and the demand for coal in the United States is not sufficient to take the amount of coal that can be produced.

Mr. NEELY. I mean to be courteous to everyone, particularly to the distinguished senior Senator from Utah; but I hope that he will not expect me to apologize for what I have said about this administration. If he were to read what some of the Republican papers of West Virginia are saying about me he would consider my utterances as mild as the weasel words of a mollycoddle or the pious deliverances of one who had just come from church, to borrow a figure of speech from a wealthy Pennsylvanian who testified in the Vare case—and that is all that we shall borrow from Pennsylvania, even with her distinguished Senator's permission.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the Senator has been getting things without borrowing them from Pennsylvania.

Mr. NEELY. Yes; we have. We have been getting things "in the neck" ever since the Senator from Pennsylvania began to threaten to have the Interstate Commerce Commission abolished if they did not give his State a monopoly of the soft-coal business of the United States; and a majority of the commission have magnanimously and magnificently responded to the Senator's threat.

West Virginians hoped and thought for a long time that the commission had enough backbone and enough respect for their oath of office to act in conformity with the law of the land, and to ignore the threats made against them by the Senator from Pennsylvania in his speech at Uniontown, in the White Swan Hotel, two years ago. That speech was to the effect that Pennsylvania intended to exert enough pressure to obtain just what she wanted from the commission. We also hoped that the commission would resist the threat made by the Senator from Pennsylvania in another speech to the effect that if he had the power he would abolish the Federal Trade Commission in the morning, the Interstate Commerce Commission at noon, and the Tariff Commission at night.

I now share the Senator's desire for abolition, but wish for earlier action. I should like to abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission before breakfast, forget a majority of them before dinner, and celebrate the emancipation of the West Virginia coal industry from the commission's tyranny before supper.

We have learned a valuable lesson from the Senator from Pennsylvania. Henceforth we shall not defend the Interstate Commerce Commission when the Senator from Pennsylvania tries to abolish it. And if the commission should ever happen to do justice to any State other than Pennsylvania in deciding the Lake Cargo case the Senator from Pennsylvania will again instantly go on the warpath against the commission. When he next renews his attack we shall join him with "horse, foot, and dragoons."

To conclude my answer to the distinguished Senator from Utah, I take it that his remarks mean that there was no such market for coal a few months after Mr. Harding's administration began as there was during the last year of the Wilson administration, because the consumers of coal had lost their power to purchase. In other words, under Mr. Harding's administration the country soon began to suffer from the depression that a little later became so acute and disastrous that the first 18 months of Republican peace cost the American people more than the last 18 months of Democratic war.

Mr. President, I now surrender the floor to the eminent senior Senator from New York, and thank him sincerely for having so very graciously yielded to me.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just one moment?

Mr. COPELAND. I feel entirely all right about the Senator from West Virginia. He did not spoil the floor, and I may yield it to him again. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. NEELY. If it should again become necessary for me to help to "mop it up," I hope the Senator will not refuse to yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the Senate to-day has heard described the very terrible conditions that exist throughout the soft-coal regions of Pennsylvania and Ohio and northern West Virginia. I am wondering how those people, in a temperature of perhaps 10° above zero, trying to live on an average of 3 cents per day for each individual in the family of the miners, are going to receive the news that when the true condition of their life was told in the United States Senate the Senate proceeded to make it a political football and a subject of recrimination across the aisle as to whether one political party or another was responsible.

If it is possible to arouse the Senate to a realization of the awful conditions that confront that industry and every man in it and every woman and child that depends on it, whether their money be in the mines or whether they be there as workers in the mines, we ought to do it; but for heaven's sake do not let us just make a jest of it by playing politics.

Mr. COPELAND. Why did not the Senator talk that way two years ago, when the conditions were just exactly the same in the anthracite mines of Pennsylvania? He was not helping to get any action. He was not seeking then to do anything. He was not then asking for a bonus. He was not doing anything except obstructing action on the part of the Senate to do something that might at least be a gesture to these suffering people.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Exactly; because every man, woman, and child in the anthracite regions knew that the Senator's resolution would not bring them one penny of aid. All he proposed to do was to create another commission to allocate coal cars among the different mines, and we treated it with the respect it deserved, we thought, and that was, nothing.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator think that by this statement of what the Senator from New York was proposing he has fairly stated what the Senator was proposing?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I fairly stated the gist of it.

Mr. COPELAND. I think perhaps the Senator did fairly present what he thought was the gist of it, but he failed even to study the proposition, to know what its real purpose was.

Mr. President, I have no objection to the appropriation of this money if it could be hedged about in such a way as to protect privately operated ships under the American flag, if the Senator were willing to add a proviso to this text. Listen to this, you friends of mine who are seeking to make a raid on the Treasury and get a bonus for the soft-coal business.

Mr. President, I would like to proceed when I can get the attention of gentlemen from the soft-coal States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. COPELAND. I am willing to vote this subsidy to the coal business if you will add this proviso to the bill:

Provided, That before any Shipping Board ships are used for the export of American products the privately owned ship services shall be proffered the use of the Shipping Board ships for this purpose, under such terms as shall not exceed an expense to the Government of $1,400,000.

If you are genuine in the position you take, if you are honest in your desire to help American citizens and to keep the flag on the seas, you have a chance, by adding this amendment to the bill, to spend your $1,400,000, but first the Shipping Board shall say to these lines, "We will furnish you the ships, and will you give the service? But the total amount spent shall not exceed the $1,400,000."

Then, if these lines say, "No; we can not do it," or that they will not do it, if they are stubborn about it, or believe it to be a bad business venture, then I have nothing more to say, but that I am glad the soft-coal people got their bonus. But I am not willing that it shall be done without protecting the privately operated American steamship lines.

It is not fair to the privately operated lines of this country, when they are struggling to make their services succeed, that you should come here on the plea that here is a bankrupt industry and we want $1,400,000 of the people's money in order that it may be subsidized to this extent. Are you willing to have this proviso put on?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, is the Senator directing his question to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I am, in part.

Mr. NEELY. Then, I answer it "in whole," and say, no, we are not willing. We think that the $3,000,000,000 of high protective tariff that the people are paying to the private interests is enough. We believe that if the Government is going to pay for operating ships, it should operate them with its own agencies, and not make the people pay some private shipowner a subsidy for carrying our commerce. In other words, I am not in favor of private subsidies to anyone for any purpose. I am in favor of the United States Government protecting itself and its own. Further than this I shall not go.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia has said that he wants these Shipping Board ships operated through its own agents, and so do the agents. The agents of the Shipping Board last year collected from the Government of the United States between eight and nine million dollars in commissions, and of this $1,400,000 at least $800,000 will go in commissions to agents. So the Senator from West Virginia, if he wins in the contest, as of course he will, will have his full wish, because instead of helping these privately operated lines he will have gotten exactly what he wants done; he will have given $800,000 to the agents of the Shipping Board. That is what he is going to do.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I am not in favor of giving the Shipping Board money to waste in the employment of an excessive number of people. Instead of appointing the coal commission the Senator from New York suggests, it might be more appropriate to appoint an investigating committee to ascertain to what extent, if any, the Shipping Board has wasted money in paying salaries to unnecessary employees.

Mr. COPELAND. The saturnalia of extravagance referred to by the Senator from West Virginia will be increased to the extent of a contribution to the makings of that saturnalia of extravagance of $800,000, because at least a little more than half of the appropriation will go to pay the commission of agents of the Government lines.

I would like to say to the Republicans on the other side that if there is anything in the world that shows the stupidity of the Republican Party and its lack of leadership it is that they do not point to the Democrats on this side and ask, "When did you turn Republican?" Yesterday almost every Democrat here voted for centralization of power by the continuance of the Shipping Board forever.

If I know anything about the history of the Democratic Party, the founders will turn over in their graves when they find that the Democratic Party has gone into bureaucracy and the centralization of Federal power, putting here in Washington bodies, great commissions, and boards to operate the business of the Government. What is the matter with the Republicans? They never had such a chance before to tell the Democrats how they have wandered from the path of virtue.

Mr. SMOOT. We tried to do that yesterday.

Mr. COPELAND. I think that yesterday was almost the only time in his life the Senator from Utah was ever right.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. That was almost the only time. But he was so right yesterday that I am inclined to forgive him for all his past offenses.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, it seems to me the Democratic Party is to be congratulated on getting an idea for action once in a while.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think the Senator from Iowa is quite qualified to advise the Democratic Party, and certainly his own party would not take any advice from him. I do not know just what politics the Senator from Iowa possesses. Personally he is a charming man. I like him; I am for him. He is the best rifle shot in the world, and he is right on his human outlook on life; but when it comes to advising about politics I do not want any advice from the Senator from Iowa. He is not competent to speak on that subject. He can not qualify as an expert.

Now, Mr. President, I have said all I care to say, if I have said enough to let the country know that the bituminous coal industry of America, made up of these rock-ribbed, copper-lined, iron-bound Republicans, is getting down on its knees, begging for help and getting it from the Democrats. That is some achievement.

It is an outrage, and now, when the proposal is made to you that we will give you the ships and help this industry, bankrupt because of your own inefficiency, bankrupt because you have not had business sense enough to make it go, bankrupt because you have been so short-sighted you could not see beyond your noses, are you not decent enough and square enough and sportsmanlike enough to at least help these men who are operating ships under the American flag, trying to open markets of the world, willing to carry your coal to the uttermost parts of the earth?

Are you not willing to have at least a gentleman's agreement that before the Shipping Board shall put any more ships in commission and go into competition with these privately owned ships, at least they may have a chance to say to the Shipping Board, "All right; we will put two or three more ships on our line; we will furnish our agents; we will not charge the Government anything. Our loss will be so-and-so. If out of this $1,400,000 you will give us our proportion of the loss, we will do the work." Then there will be no harm done to these private concerns. The harm will be done to the agencies; they will not get the money.

Mr. President, that is fair, it is straightforward, it is sportsmanlike, it is decent. But, of course, I do not think there is the slightest chance in the world that you will be willing to do it. I am going to test the sentiment of the Senate, however. I will withdraw the amendment, if I may have consent to do so, in which I asked to reduce the amount by a million, and ask that a proviso be put at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT], reading as the clerk will indicate. I want to amend the bill as amended by adding at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky the proviso which I will ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky was adopted, and, without objection, that vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. COPELAND. Now I offer the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT], plus the proviso, which the clerk will read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the amendment heretofore agreed to, offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT], the Senator from New York proposes to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That before any Shipping Board ships are used for the export of American products the privately owned ship services shall be proffered the use of the Shipping Board ships for this purpose under such terms as shall not exceed an expense to the Government of $1,400,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Now I offer, as an amendment to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT], the proviso which the clerk will read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York has withdrawn his original amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. I withdraw the amendment wherein I asked a reduction of $1,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the amendment heretofore agreed to, as submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] proposes to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That before any Shipping Board ships are used for the export of American products the privately owned ship service shall be proffered the use of the Shipping Board ships for this purpose under such terms as shall not exceed an expense to the Government of $1,400,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question on agreeing to the proviso can be put without interfering with the Sackett amendment which has been adopted. The question, therefore, is on the amendment just offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I may first say that I have no surprise at all at the action of the Senate. I am prepared now to have the Senate take almost any action. It seems to me the Senate is determined to destroy our private merchant marine.

On page 36, lines 6 and 7, we find this language——

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, those lines have been stricken out and we have inserted a substitute agreed on in the committee. We adopted that provision which the committee agreed to for the reconditioning of those ships, to cost not to exceed $12,000,000, $10,000,000 of which should come from the loan-construction fund, and providing that they should not be sold at a smaller price than the cost, less depreciation at 5 per cent per annum from the date of reconditioning.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Washington if it is possible that the Senate this afternoon, in the five minutes that I was away from the Chamber, could have taken a step so vital as this without any debate?

Mr. JONES. The Senate certainly did.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to get before the Senate in some parliamentary way. Is a motion to reconsider debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion to reconsider is debatable.

Mr. COPELAND. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York——

Mr. COPELAND. Just a moment, Mr. President. I want to discuss that motion.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from New York is asking to strike out the $12,000,000 provision which came over from the House?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, we have passed over the entire bill and adopted all of the amendments submitted by the committee, although the motion of the Senator, I am sorry to say, is in order. Does the Senator wish to carry his motion into effect?

Mr. COPELAND. Did the Senator ask the question seriously?

Mr. President, this is what the Senate did and this is what I have moved to reconsider—this being the wording of the so-called Jones amendment submitted in behalf of the committee, inserting the following language:

> For the reconditioning of the steamships Mount Vernon and Monticello at a total cost not in excess of $12,000,000, not to exceed $10,000,000 is made available from the construction loan fund, and shall be reimbursed to such fund with interest at such rate and within such period as the board may determine, but not exceeding 10 years after the date of commission of such reconditioned vessels: Provided, That neither of said steamships shall be sold for less than the cost of reconditioning, less a deduction of 5 per cent per annum for depreciation from the date of completion of such reconditioning to the date of sale.

The reason why I am asking that this be reconsidered, not dreaming for a moment that it will be reconsidered, is in order that the RECORD may show what the Senate is undertaking to do. I want the RECORD to show what is going to be done, because I do not think the Senate knows what is going to be done if there was no debate on the subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask whether the amendment just read by the Senator from New York carries an appropriation in addition to that found on page 35, line 8, of $10,000,000, and also whether it modifies in any way the appropriation carried on page 33, lines 6 and 7, of $12,000,000.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will permit me, I will say that the $10,000,000 on page 35 has nothing to do with this proposition at all, and there has been no change made in that language. On page 36, lines 6 and 7 have been stricken out and an amendment inserted providing for the reconditioning of the two boats at not to exceed $12,000,000, not to exceed $10,000,000 of which shall come from the loan construction fund. That is substantially the difference between the House provision and the Senate provision.

Mr. KING. For what purpose is the $10,000,000 to be used which is carried in the appropriation found on page 35?

Mr. JONES. It is expressed very plainly in the language of the bill, which reads:

> To enable the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation to operate ships or lines of ships which have been or may be taken back from purchasers by reason of competition or other methods employed by foreign shipowners or operators there is hereby appropriated—

And so forth.

This provision was put in some two or three years ago to meet a possible cutting of rates on the part of foreign shipping, which would drive out of business persons operating ships purchased in the United States.

Mr. KING. Then there is the $13,400,000 found on page 34, the $10,000,000 and the $12,000,000, plus other amounts herein indicated, plus the amounts received from sales of ships or property in the hands of the Shipping Board, aggregating probably $40,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, that goes back into the Treasury. All money received for vessels sold goes back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator from Utah will not propose an amendment to the bill which will take away from the Shipping Board moneys to be used in operating ships which are to be taken back, because if we pass a few more bills and make a few more appropriations to run competing Government-owned lines with private lines, they will all be taken back.

Mr. KING. Of course, I understand that any amendment that might be offered by myself or the Senator from New York or other Senators entertaining our view as to the improvidence, inexpedience, and foolishness of the program which is proposed by our distinguished friends who supported the bill yesterday would be unavailing, and I shall offer none. I shall, before the bill passes, however, after the Senator from New York concludes his interesting and instructive address——

Mr. COPELAND. And convinces the Senate.

Mr. KING. Yes. I shall submit a few observations to the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let all those who do not desire to be informed leave the Chamber at once.

We count 25 or 30 years as a generation. Twenty-five or thirty years from now these seats will be occupied by a different group. It is sad to bring up that fact. Some of the seats will be vacant long before that time.

More than a generation ago the Germans built a ship. Away back at the beginning of this century, in 1901, I think it was, they built a boat, an 18,000-ton boat, a nice little boat, which would have made a fine yacht—that is, it would in those days—for a coal baron. They were rich then.

The Germans launched this boat, the Kronprinzessin Cecile. Time went on, and by reason of the vicissitudes of fate, if there is such a thing, this ship was in our port when the war came on. When we got into the war we took over this and several other boats. They were ours then and we changed the name of the Kronprinzessin Cecile to Agamemnon, changing the sex of the ship at the same time we did the name, I suppose. She was damaged by fire—or should I say "he" was damaged by fire? I am not sure about the sex of a ship with this name.

It is a ship built in 1901 and now what do we propose to do with it? We are going to put $6,000,000 of the people's money into that old hulk. I wonder if the Senator from Washington ever heard the story about the small boy who came home from school crying. His father said, "Willie, what is the matter?" He said, "I got licked and it is your fault." His father said, "How is it my fault?" The boy said, "You told me a million dollars is a hell of a lot of money and that is not the right answer." [Laughter.]

It is proposed to put $6,000,000 into an old hulk of a boat built in 1901. What would the Senator think about the owner of a Ford flivver of the vintage of 1901 who bought $6,000,000 worth of Rolls Royce body to put on his 1901 flivver? And yet, without one particle of consideration by this body it is proposed to vote $6,000,000 to refit that old ship and $6,000,000 more to refit another one built the next year.

Whoever heard of such idiocy? It is proposed to expend $12,000,000 of the people's money to recondition two ships that were built a generation ago. When those ships were built all these "grave and reverend signiors" were mere boys, but I have this to say to them: If we shall rebuild these ships the time when we throw them away will be so very brief that these "grave and reverend signiors" will not change a bit.

Do Senators know what happened in Germany? The Germans retained in their port the Hensa, a sister ship to the Kronprinzessin Cecile; they kept her; we did not get her; as time went on, she did not happen to burn out as did the Agamemnon, but she just grew old naturally. So the Germans decided that they would recondition her. They spent six or eight million dollars on the reconditioning of the Hensa, and at the end of two years they scrapped her because she was not any good.

The sum of $12,000,000 of the people's money is to be put into two old hulks. I will challenge the other side of the Chamber. I will vote $30,000,000 to build two new ships to replace these two old ships. I will vote for $40,000,000 to do it. The sum of $40,000,000 would build two decent ships; but it is now proposed to put $12,000,000 into two rotting hulks which are 27 years old. My brethren, it is silly beyond all words.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. KING. In order to show the superior wisdom of the British to that possessed by the Shipping Board and the American Senate, may I say that Lord Inchcape, who was connected with the Admiralty for a number of years following the World War, got rid of many of the ships of Great Britain, some of which were not nearly so old as the Agamemnon and the Mount Vernon, selling some of them at $25 and $30 a ton, because he knew that those old ships could survive but a few years and that it would be a complete waste of money to spend it in reconditioning them. He further knew that fast ships were needed; that a new style of ship architecture had been developed, as we have developed a new style of architectural building in the United States, which would supersede the old style. He felt that the Diesel engine would supersede the old motive power; so he got rid of scores of British ships and built new ships. Germany has also built new ships. So foreign ships are now carrying and will continue to carry the great bulk of the trans-Atlantic trade if not of the South American trade unless the United States shall pursue a wise policy, one entirely different from that indicated by the Senate on yesterday when it voted for the Jones shipping bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Utah. He states the situation as it is, and the position he takes is the position assumed by every experienced shipping man in the United States.

I hold in my hand a letter, which I received this morning, from a friend of mine in New York who is not in the shipping business at the present time; he is out of business and has no interest in it. He is merely a patriotic, American citizen. What does he say?—

> I am taking the liberty of writing you regarding this appropriation—

The one we are now asked to make—> thinking that perchance during the many details required upon other matters, some seeming facts pertaining to these ships had not come to your attention, and that it might be well for some good Democrats—> to investigate these conditions before $12,000,000 of public money is spent, perhaps needlessly.

> Both these ships are strictly passenger carriers, with absolutely no accommodations for cargo.

So the United States Senate, so solicitous of the passengers who may sail upon ships of the United States Lines, proposes to recondition a couple of ships for the accommodation of passengers. I am not interested in the accommodation of passengers. I want an American merchant marine to carry the products of our farms, orchards, gardens, and manufactures to the uttermost parts of the earth, and these ships, the Agamemnon and the Mount Vernon, or the Monticello and the Mount Vernon, as we now call them, are strictly passenger carriers with no accommodations for cargo. The letter continues:

> Can the United States make them pay with the passengers only, with the now restricted immigration laws in effect?
> These ships—

Let Senators who are advocating spending $12,000,000 of the people's money listen to this—

> These ships have always been excessive in the cost of operation and they are considered "white elephants" by their former owners, the North German Lloyd, and the cost of operation by that German organization was far below that of ours to-day.

Again:

> One official and three inspectors of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. stated to a prospective purchaser of one of these ships "that the ships did not warrant reconditioning and that a fair value 'as is' was as of junk and approximately $100,000."

And yet it is proposed to spend $12,000,000 of the people's money to recondition these ships.

Mr. President, do we not know how difficult it is to raise money by taxes? Last year Congress appropriated nearly $4,000,000,000; it put upon the backs of the taxpayers $4,000,000,000; the States put another billion dollars upon them; cities and other subdivisions of government put another $5,000,000,000 upon them, making $10,000,000,000 in taxes. The earnings of our people amounted to only $90,000,000,000. So one-ninth of all the money earned by the people of the United States goes for the payment of taxes.

And now, without any real discussion, without any consideration, without, in fact, any knowledge of why this money is to be expended, the Senate votes $12,000,000 to rehabilitate two broken-down old ships that will be out of commission in two or three years. I can not understand such procedure. I do not know that there is any use trying to understand it. The Senate has taken the bit in its teeth; it is going forward with this enterprise and has made a needless appropriation to-day of $13,400,000.

I wish I had so much money that a million dollars would not mean anything to me; but I say it is utterly wrong, it is a crime against our citizens to reach into their pockets for another raid like this involving $13,400,000.

What more can I say? No one listens; no one cares; but I will tell you, Mr. President, that some day the American people will say to the American Congress, "We are not going to stand such nonsense any longer." If the Democratic Party does not rise to its opportunities, if the Republican Party continues to violate its opportunities, there will come a new party, there will come a new group of people in the United States who will stop this outrageous raiding of the Treasury and this disregarding of the rights of the people. I think, Mr. President, that it is time we should stop and give consideration to these matters.

The poor are just as much taxpayers, whether or not their names are upon the tax rolls as are those who actually pay the taxes. Go into their homes and you will find them groaning everywhere because of the high prices charged; and yet every time we put $13,000,000 upon the tax rolls of this country it means that $4,000,000 will be paid by the people of my State; one-third of this amount will be paid by the people of New York. We are going to pay $4,000,000 of our money to recondition these ships. It is all very well for Senators who come from States where the tax assessment is small and where the amount of money paid in taxes is not great to advocate this measure, but they are putting upon the people of my State an unnecessary tax of $4,000,000. Keep on, and after a while the people of all the States will rise up in indignation against such a procedure.

Mr. President, I feel positively ashamed to detain the few Senators who are present, but when I think about the outrageous thing that we are undertaking to do to-day, that feeling of shame is overcome by one of great indignation that the Senate so inconsiderately, so thoughtlessly, so hastily, would appropriate such an enormous amount of the people's money. We might just as well take this money out on the ocean and sink it to the bottom of the sea, because, as I have said, it will not be more than two years before these ships will be out of commission and put on the scrap heap.

Mr. President, I have done the best I could to tell the people of the country what the situation is. It is an outrage upon them, and I hope and pray that Senators may see how wrong is this act and that they may retreat before it is too late.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to reconsider the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to say but a few words. I supposed that the Senate had so much confidence in the committee which recommended this amendment that it had no fear about the advisability of doing this thing.

The facts briefly are these, Mr. President:

We called the Shipping Board representative before the committee. The Senator from New York was there. I am not an expert. I do not pretend to be an expert. The chairman of the Shipping Board stated that the Shipping Board had called together the best shipping experts they could find in the country and had them examine the hulls of these two ships, and that these experts said that with the reconditioning of the hulls these ships would be good ships for from 10 to 15 years. There is great need of two additional ships on the North Atlantic line, and they stated that these two ships could be reconditioned in about 12 or 16 months.

They would like very much to have two new ships of the kind described by the Senator from New York. They said that it would take from three to four years to build those ships, but that the reconditioned ships would serve very well as a stop-gap for this situation; so they felt that it would be advisable to recondition them.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. In just a moment. They said that if they could get two new ships in three or four years, then these ships would be available for other service, like the intercoastal service, and could be used to very good advantage for 10 or 15 years. Under those circumstances the committee felt that they were justified in providing for the reconditioning of the two ships.

I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. Did the committee get information from the Shipping Board at the same time as to the approximate cost of a new ship of this class, built at this time?

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that the testimony either came from them or came from other sources that it would cost from twelve to fifteen million dollars a ship to get the sort of ship they ought to have on the North Atlantic Line; in other words, from twenty-five to thirty million dollars.

Mr. EDGE. For two new ships?

Mr. JONES. For two new ships.

Mr. EDGE. And that information, I presume, followed some investigation which showed that it would require at least from three to four years to build the ships?

Mr. JONES. That is what Chairman O'Connor said.

Mr. EDGE. If the Senator will let me say just a word——

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. EDGE. Personally, I should have preferred a larger appropriation for two new ships as a business proposition; but I am inclined to accept the judgment of the committee and of the board that they have investigated it, and the facts are undoubtedly as stated.

Mr. JONES. Those, briefly, are the facts that were presented to the committee. Personally, I certainly should like to see us have two new ships; but, as I understand, the need for additional ships on this line is very pressing.

Mr. EDGE. This is for the overseas service on the North Atlantic?

Mr. JONES. Yes; for the North Atlantic service from New York to Great Britain.

Briefly, Mr. President and Members of the Senate, these are the facts upon which the committee took the action that it did; and I hope the motion to reconsider will be voted down.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there is not any doubt at all, if we are to continue in the shipping business—and I assume, from the action taken yesterday, that that is to be the policy if the House agrees to it and the President signs the bill—that we need two more ships on the United States Lines. There is no question about that.

We should have a service given by those lines that would permit us to have mail sent out from New York every second day. We now have the Leviathan, which is a first-class ship, the only one we have. The other ships are very slow ships. The result of our present system of conducting the lines is that we have to give the mails to the British ships. We ought to have two more ships. That is the reason why a while ago I said to the Senator that I would join him in voting $30,000,000 or even $40,000,000 for the building of two brand-new ships.

I have, however, given a lot of study to this subject since I sat in the meeting of the subcommittee on this bill last week. I have given a lot of study to it and taken a lot of testimony; and I am convinced that these old ships are not fit to spend a dollar on. I would not spend a cent on them. If there is some parliamentary way by which this appropriation can be increased, or the Shipping Board can be authorized to take out of the loan fund thirty or forty million dollars, I will vote for it; but I could not vote to throw away $12,000,000 of the people's money for rebuilding these old hulls. Therefore, even if I am alone in it, I must vote as I have indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert, at the end of the bill, a new section to read as follows:

Water boundary, United States and Mexico: For an additional amount for the water boundary, United States and Mexico, including personal services, procurement of technical and scientific equipment, camp outfits, and the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and $1,200 for rent, $65,000 for the fiscal year 1929, to be immediately available (treaties of November 12, 1884, vol. 24, p. 1011; May 1, 1889, vol. 26, p. 1531, art. 2; act of February 24, 1927, vol. 44, pt. 2, p. 1185), $65,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask to have the estimate for the item read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The estimate will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 25, 1928.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of State for the fiscal year 1929, to be immediately available, for the water boundary, United States and Mexico, amounting to $65,000.

The details of this estimate and the necessity therefor are set forth in the letter of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget transmitted herewith, with whose comments and observations thereon I concur.

Respectfully,

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, January 25, 1928.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for your consideration a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of State for the fiscal year 1929, to be immediately available, amounting to $65,000.

Water boundary, United States and Mexico..... $65,000

The purpose of this estimate is to enable the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, to undertake surveys and the preparation of plans and estimates, having for their object the assembling of exact information which could form the basis of a final agreement with Mexico to overcome the difficulty resulting from the present shifting boundary line between the United States and Mexico from about 2 miles from El Paso, Tex., to the Box Canyon below Fort Quitman, Tex., a distance by the river of about 170 miles, involving an area of approximately 200 square miles of land directly adjacent to the river.

I recommend the transmission of this estimate to Congress.

Very respectfully,

H. M. LORD,
Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

The PRESIDENT.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will reread the amendment.

The Chief Clerk reread the amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement in explanation of the amendment. To show the importance of it, I wish to quote briefly from a letter from the Secretary of State to the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to say to the Senator that this bill contains no subject of that kind. It is entirely a different matter. The Senator's amendment, of course, could be offered to the Interior Department bill or to a deficiency bill without being a stranger and unrelated to everything that is in such bills.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, it was my idea that the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, was an independent entity, an independent office.

Mr. CURTIS. It is under the State Department.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have here the law creating the State Department, and there is no reference in it to the International Boundary Commission. The International Boundary Commission is an independent executive body.

Mr. CURTIS. The International Boundary Commission, as I understand, was carried in the appropriation bill providing appropriations for the State Department. I had charge of that bill for a number of years.

Mr. SHEPPARD. So it was; but that does not necessarily mean that it is not an independent office.

Mr. CURTIS. It is not taken care of in this bill. It is taken care of in the State Department bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. So it has been.

Mr. CURTIS. I would suggest to the Senator, in order not to begin to load up this bill and change the plan that has been worked on for years in order to get it perfect, that he delay offering his amendment and offer it to the first deficiency bill that comes over.

Mr. WARREN. That would be immediately available.

Mr. CURTIS. Of course, this is made immediately available, too; but that would carry out the plan that we worked for years to get the Congress to adopt, to have these bills take care of the subjects to which they apply.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand that it may be several months before there will be a deficiency bill, and I fear that any further delay will be fatal. Otherwise I would not offer this amendment now.

Mr. CURTIS. I am not the chairman of the committee, but I was told that there is one now in course of preparation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A deficiency bill now in course of preparation?

Mr. CURTIS. I understood so; on the House side. I would not be sure about that.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not want to assume what our conferees will do, but I think I am safe in saying that it will be very much more satisfactory to them to have the amendment in a bill to which it properly relates, rather than meet it as a stranger, as it is in this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me make the explanation, and then I shall ask the Chair to rule.

The letter to which I refer reads as follows:

The International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, proposes to undertake surveys and the preparation of plans and estimates, having for their object the assembling of exact information which could form the basis of a final agreement with Mexico to overcome the difficulty resulting from the present shifting of the channel of the Rio Grande which forms the boundary line between the United States and Mexico from about 2 miles above El Paso, Tex., to the Box Canyon below Fort Quitman, a distance by the river of about 170 miles, and involving an area of approximately 200 square miles of land directly adjacent to the river. In this area there exists over 3,000 acres of land now largely held by American citizens, over which there exist disputes as to ownership. Portions of this area located within the city limits of El Paso are highly valuable; and in the Chamizal case the United States, in the past 20 years of contention with Mexico over sovereignty, has expended over a quarter of a million dollars in an unsuccessful attempt to clear the national title. The city and county of El Paso have in the past few years expended in bond issues one-half of a million dollars in providing protective and drainage work on the unsuitable locations following the sharp bends in the river. Immigration, customs, and prohibition laws are difficult of enforcement, and land titles and values are affected by the shifting river and flood menace.

Mr. President, permit me to say that now for the first time in history the United States and Mexico, through commissioners acting under authority of their respective Governments, have reached an agreement in reference to the Chamizal zone. It is a tract of land on the American side of the Rio Grande, and yet Mexico has claimed title to it. It involves a part of the city of El Paso, and its value extends into the millions. Another tract of land farther down the river, the Cordova tract, is in largely the same position, although it is not within the city limits of El Paso, and is not so valuable.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. KING. Many years ago we set up a commission to determine the boundary between the United States and Mexico. My recollection is that there was a supplemental or an additional commission appointed. We have had commissions to determine the boundary between the United States and Canada, and the boundaries along the Great Lakes. I have been wondering what all those commissions have been doing all these years. I recall that one of my good friends, who has gone to his great reward, was for years a member of one of these commissions. I am afraid that the members of many of these commissions have treated their positions as sinecures; and I ask the Senator, for information, what these commissions have been doing for 40 or 50 years in determining the boundary between the United States and Mexico?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The commission which had jurisdiction of that Chamizal controversy reached a decision, which amounted to a deadlock, and the matter remained in that situation until an agreement was reached by commissioners authorized to take up the matter a few months ago, an agreement for the first time in our history. The survey authorized by the amendment I have offered will demonstrate whether the agreement which has been tentatively reached by the representatives of the two countries may be properly entered into by us. Delay may be fatal to the tentative agreement.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall not further object. The Senator had the matter before the committee and we advised him that we would like to see it put on in the proper place. I am sorry the Senator takes the view that it should go on this bill, but if he wishes to take the chance and put it on this bill, where it does not belong, I shall make no further objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 35, line 19, after the words "Attorney General of the United States," insert the words "and by the Senate of the United States."

Mr. KING. So that it will read how?

The CHIEF CLERK. So that it will read:

No part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used to pay the compensation of any attorney, regular or special, for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation unless the contract of employment has been approved by the Attorney General of the United States and the Senate of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall have to make a point of order against that amendment. It is not in order to place such an amendment on this bill. It is legislation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will yield, it seems to me that the object which the Senator is seeking can be accomplished and that the amendment by which he seeks to accomplish it will not be obnoxious to the rule. The Senator from Alabama has a perfect right, I submit, to place a limitation upon any appropriation, and if I rightly interpret the amendment just offered, and which has just been read, it is that no person shall be employed or appointed except his appointment be confirmed by the Senate.

If I understand the Senator from Alabama, he is seeking to prevent the appointment of employees by the Shipping Board, receiving these large salaries, unless the appointments shall receive the approval of the Senate. I suggest to the Senator that he can frame his amendment so as to provide that the appointments shall be subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, if that amendment is not in order, then this section as written is improper, because it provides that the employment must be approved by the Attorney General of the United States, and that is legislation. I add to that provision a clause that it shall also be approved by the Senate of the United States. To assert that we can provide that it shall be approved by the Attorney General and not that it shall be approved by the Senate would seem to me a rather strange construction.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I yield. I can state the reasons why I think it is proper.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator seek to have the contract of hiring approved by the Senate, or to have the appointments made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate?

Mr. BLACK. I want the appointments made by and with the consent of the Senate.

Mr. KING. I can see some objection, possibly, to placing in the hands of the Senate the right to approve a contract. There could be no objection to having the contract approved by Congress, but there would be not only no objection to providing but it seems to me it would be entirely proper to provide that the appointee receiving this large compensation should be confirmed by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to change the amendment so that it shall read as follows:

And said appointment shall be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. This does not provide for any appointment at all.

Mr. WARREN. That is entirely outside of the law, I think. The Senate has a right to confirm or not confirm, but I hardly think the Senate has a right to appoint, and I think that does not make the amendment in order at all.

Mr. BLACK. What is the objection?

Mr. WARREN. It is legislation.

Mr. BLACK. I thought this was all legislation.

Mr. WARREN. I do not object to the idea that the Senator is suggesting, if it can be accomplished in regular order, but the Committee on Appropriations is charged with protecting the bills it reports, under the rules, and to see that legislation does not creep into the appropriation bills, except by general consent, and even that has to be done in another way.

Mr. BLACK. At the last session of Congress a proviso was attached to an appropriation bill to the effect that no payment should be made to officers unless they were promoted in a manner set forth in that bill. My amendment seeks to provide that payment shall not be made to these attorneys unless their appointments are confirmed by the Senate. One of them is getting $15,000 a year, more than the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States receive. This man is passing on contracts from all over this Nation. I insist that the amendment is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me the purpose which the Senator from Alabama has in mind is a legitimate and a proper one, and if his amendment can be so phrased as to be freed from the objection that it is subjected to a point of order such as suggested by the able Senator from Wyoming, it should be added to the bill.

There is legislation in this bill. Whenever we provide, as this bill does provide, for the employment of a number of officers by the Shipping Board, that is legislation, and obviously the Senate and Congress may prescribe the limitations upon the number of employees, upon the salaries which the employees shall receive, and upon the manner of their appointment, and they can likewise prescribe, if they desire, that certain appointees shall receive their appointments only by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

It may be that the amendment as tendered is subject to some objection as to uncertainty, but certainly the point which the Senator from Alabama is attempting to make is quite proper, and an amendment which would carry that view into effect, I respectfully submit, is not subject to the point of order that it is new legislation or that it is improper upon an appropriation bill.

The authorities are numerous. If the Chair will look at the precedents he will find them mountain high to the effect that the Senate has the right by amendments upon appropriation bills to limit the use of appropriations or the character of the appropriations. I have many precedents in mind, but I shall not take the time of the Senate to challenge attention of the Chair to the same. This is an ordinary amendment to limit an appropriation, and that is not obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it seems to me that this amendment is in order, because the law now provides, as has been stated, that the Attorney General must approve the appointments of the Shipping Board. My colleague simply suggests that before a man serves in one of these positions, selected by the board and approved by the Attorney General of the United States, he must be confirmed by the Senate. I think it is an important amendment, and it ought to be on the bill.

The man to whom the Senator has referred draws $15,000 a year. He is drawing more than any United States Senator receives, more than any governor in the country that I know of receives, and it is a very important office. He passes on very important matters. It looks to me as if these men should not be picked out from the body of lawyers over the country without having the sanction of the Senate. It appears to me that we ought to put the amendment on the bill now. The Attorney General must pass on the appointees and approve them. Why not say that the Senate shall confirm them?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I would like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. As offered, the amendment provides for the insertion, on page 35, line 19, after the words "Attorney General of the United States" and before the period, of the words "and by the Senate of the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Alabama desires to perfect his amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I will ask the clerk to state the amendment as I have perfected it.

The CHIEF CLERK. As modified, the amendment reads:

Provided, That such attorney shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. That is the amendment which I offer.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have suggested to the Senator from Alabama that at the close of the amendment which he offers, which relates to the contract as well as to the appointment of the attorney, he add a proviso:

Provided, That the attorney shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama accept the amendment?

Mr. BLACK. I accept that amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not know that that would be subject to a point of order. This is a limitation that no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the payment of any compensation unless the contract of employment is approved. It is apparently proposed to change the law with reference to the selection of these attorneys and make them appointive officers. These attorneys are not appointive officers under the existing law. I think on that theory this goes further than a limitation and actually proposes to change the manner of the selection of these attorneys. That is changing the existing law. Therefore, I think the amendment is subject to a point of order that it is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am a very poor champion, perhaps, of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, but such as I am I enter the lists in behalf of his amendment.

It does seem to me that a proper construction of the amendment offered by the Senator is that it shall be a limitation upon the appropriation:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the payment of any attorney unless he shall be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate.

In other words, here is an appropriation of a very large sum which contemplates that attorneys shall be appointed. Obviously Congress has the right to say that any person drawing a part of this appropriation must be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. That is a limitation upon the appropriation.

May not Congress say, "We appropriate a million dollars for a certain purpose, a portion of which is to be used in the employment of attorneys; but we further provide that no person shall be employed as an attorney whose compensation shall exceed $10,000, unless he shall be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate"?

That may be called legislation, but it is legislation in the interest of a limitation upon an appropriation. Therefore I most respectfully insist that the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to say that I think the argument of the Senator from Utah sustains the point of order. The amendment is more than a limitation; it is an actual change of law. It affects the method of appointment of these attorneys for the Shipping Board, and instead of their being selected by contract to be approved by the Attorney General, as the law now provides, it does away with that law and provides that they must be nominated by the President and their nominations confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, evidently the law does not already provide that the contract shall be approved by the Attorney General, because this provision here brings in, evidently for the first time, the fact that the contract must be approved by the Attorney General of the United States.

It reads:

No part of the sums appropriated in this act shall be used to pay the compensation of any attorney, regular or special, for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation, unless the contract of employment has been approved by the Attorney General of the United States.

It is a limitation upon the power of the board, limiting it to its approval by the Attorney General. I simply add an additional safeguard which I insist, from my personal experience with the attorney for the Shipping Board, ought to be granted in this case, that before he is appointed he should be confirmed by the Senate of the United States.

This is an important position. That man passes upon claims from all over the Nation. He acts largely for the commission. I have found, in endeavoring to obtain anything from the commission, that they will not turn a hand until that special attorney shall have first approved their action. That being true, he is as important in actual and practical experience as the Shipping Board itself. According to my experience before the board, he is far more important than all the members of the Shipping Board when one attempts to obtain any relief for a citizen of the United States. I insist that this is a very material and very necessary and very much needed amendment.

Not only that, but all over the United States they have appointed special attorneys, when the district attorney, whom the Senate confirms, was there capable of performing the duty. If Senators will look at the expense accounts of the Shipping Board in the matter of the employment of attorneys, they will find it reaches an exorbitant and extravagant amount. They have been appointing attorneys on top of attorneys, capping the stone with a $15,000 man, when the highest paid Assistant Attorney General, according to the record, is only $10,000 a year, and yet they pay $15,000. I know of no place where it would be more appropriate, where we would draw money out of the Treasury to pay them, to say, "You can pay this man this amount of money, but before this is done he shall have his appointment ratified and confirmed by the Senate."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the amendment is out of order for another reason, in that it has not been submitted to a committee, it has not been considered by a committee, and it is plainly legislation. Therefore, under the rule of the Senate, if not for any other reason, I shall have to object as I have been doing. I insist upon the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair will say to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] that while it is true the paragraph on page 35 is in the nature of legislation, there is no rule against new legislation coming from the House in an appropriation bill. The rule of the Senate which applies is Rule XVI, paragraph 3:

No amendment which proposes general legislation—

The Chair will call the Senator's attention to the second word, "amendment."

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Therefore the Chair rules that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Wyoming want to proceed further to-night?

Mr. WARREN. I should be delighted to finish the bill to-night, but I do not wish to cut off anyone who properly has an amendment to propose. I understand, in addition to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] wishes to occupy some time and that he is physically somewhat indisposed this evening. Therefore I am willing to take a recess.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before the Senator from Kansas moves to take a recess, will he yield to me a moment?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION, SHIP ISLAND, MISS.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2594) transferring a portion of the lighthouse reservation, Ship Island, Miss., to the jurisdiction and control of the War Department.

This is a bill similar to one which passed the Senate during the last session of Congress but which did not pass the House. It is unanimously reported out by the Committee on Military Affairs and will take only a moment to consider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the lighthouse reservation, Ship Island, Miss., as the Secretary of Commerce deems unnecessary for lighthouse purposes is transferred to and made a part of Ship Island Military Reservation under the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of War. Such Ship Island Military Reservation, with the portion of the Ship Island lighthouse reservation hereby made a part of it, shall be reappraised and disposed of subject to all the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the use for permanent construction at military posts of the proceeds from the sale of surplus War Department real property, and authorizing the sale of certain military reservations, and for other purposes," approved March 12, 1926.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHIPMENT OF LIVE POULTRY

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar 41, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 42) to amend the act of May 29, 1884, as amended; the act of February 2, 1903; and the act of March 3, 1905, as amended. It is a measure which has been pending a long time. An identical joint resolution passed the House, and I ask that it may be considered at this time.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, let the joint resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that there be substituted for the Senate joint resolution——

Mr. MOSES. I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

NATIONAL ORIGINS CLAUSE, IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION LAW

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech made by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] before the American-Irish Historical Society in New York, and also to have printed following that speech a table showing the condition of immigration under the present law and under the national origins law.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the United States Daily, January 30, 1928]

NATIONAL ORIGINS OF AMERICANS DECLARED TO BE UNTRACEABLE—SENATOR SHIPSTEAD ASSERTS DATA IS NOT AVAILABLE AS BASIS FOR DETERMINATION OF ALIEN QUOTA UNDER IMMIGRATION LAW

A plea for the repeal of the national origins clause in the immigration restriction law, was made, on January 28, by Senator SHIPSTEAD (Republican), of Minnesota, in a speech delivered in New York City. Mr. SHIPSTEAD declared there is not sufficient data upon which to base national origins quotas and therefore legislative authority is delegated to members of the executive branch of the Government.

NOT ATTACK ON LAW

Mr. SHIPSTEAD'S speech follows in full text:

"The controversy over the national origins clause of the immigration act has been misrepresented so as to be made to appear a controversy over increasing or decreasing numerically the number of immigrants that can come to this country. This misrepresentation is very unfortunate because it gives a false statement of facts.

"The repeal of the national origins clause has nothing to do with the question of the number of people that shall be permitted to come here each year. The effort to repeal the national origins clause has been characterized as an attack upon the immigration law of 1924.

"It is nothing of the kind. It is, in fact, an effort to prevent the law from becoming ridiculous.

"My reason for asking for the elimination of the national-origin method to determine the quota of each country is that I find that we have not sufficient official or other data upon which to determine the quota of each country upon this basis, and that it would lead to discrimination between different nationalities, which is just what Congress diligently endeavored to avoid in passing the immigration act of 1924.

"I might say also that the reason I voted against the immigration law when it came back from the House and from the conference is because I began to have an inkling of where this would lead us. I have given considerable study to the matter since, and I have come to the conclusion that there is no basis upon which this can be reckoned to determine what is the national origin of the various groups.

"Therefore, the yardstick by which we measure under this provision is not based on anything about which we have exact information.

"The purpose of the national-origin plan is to divide all immigrants exactly in accordance with the national origin of our population. If this could be done, it might be an ideal plan.

"Paragraphs (b) and (c) of section 11 of the immigration act of 1924 reads as follows:

"'(b) The annual quota of any nationality for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1927, and for each year thereafter, shall be a number which bears the same ratio to 1,500,000 as the number of inhabitants in continental United States in 1920 having that national origin (ascertained as hereinafter provided in this section) bears to the number of inhabitants in continental United States in 1920, but the minimum quota of any nationality shall be 100.

"'(c) For the purpose of subdivision (b), national origin shall be ascertained by determining as nearly as may be, in respect of each geographical area which under section 12 is to be treated as a separate country (except the geographical areas specified in subdivision (c) of section 4), the number of inhabitants in continental United States in 1920 whose origin by birth or ancestry is attributable to such geographical area.

"'Such determination shall not be made by tracing the ancestors or descendants of particular individuals, but shall be based upon statistics of immigration and emigration, together with rates of increase of population as shown by successive decennial United States censuses and such other data as may be found to be reliable.'

MIGRATORY STATISTICS INADEQUATELY RECORDED

"It will be seen from the above that the most important element in this determination is 'statistics of immigration and emigration.' The next important element is 'rates of increase of population as shown by successive decennial United States censuses.'

"As reliable statistics of immigration and emigration are not in existence, the whole plan fails and leaves the determination to mere guesswork or conjecture. Dr. Edward McSweeney, former Assistant Commissioner of Immigration, has made a statement on that. He said:

"'In 1819 a law was passed making it necessary for the captains of all incoming ships bringing passengers to the United States to file a manifest of the passengers, but, except to give the number of the passengers to the Government, was never other than perfunctory and almost never used. These accumulated manifests were burned in the Ellis Island fire of 1896.

"'The first real attempt to gather immigration statistics was made after the Immigration Bureau was established in the early nineties.'

"So that brings us down to 1896. Considerable emphasis has been laid on the fact that a census was taken in the year 1790 and that this census can be used as a basis for determining the national origin of the inhabitants of the United States in that year; but this census is of no value for that purpose, because only names and ages were given in this census and no information can be secured as to nationality or national origin.

"In 1906 Congress passed a law providing that the Director of the Census be authorized and directed to publish in permanent form, by counties and minor subdivisions, the names of the families returned at the first census of the United States in 1790.

GOVERNMENTAL RECORDS DESTROYED BY BRITISH

"Speaking of the difficulties in this work, William S. Rositer, then chief clerk of the Census Bureau, stated in Outlook for December 29, 1906, page 1071, with reference to the correspondence between the Secretary of State and the marshals in the different districts who had charge of the census:

"'The break in official records is one of the marks of the teeth of the British lion. These papers and many others have been destroyed during the occupation of Washington in the War of 1812.'

"Several eminent scholars have written extensive articles for the magazines showing the futility of trying to arrive at the national origin of the white inhabitants of the United States, among which are mentioned Dr. Edward F. McSweeney, former assistant immigration commissioner at New York, and Dr. Roy L. Garis, professor of economics in Vanderbilt University. I quote from Doctor Garis's article in the Saturday Evening Post for October 10, 1925:

"'The national-origin plan means, therefore, that we must abandon practical methods and adopt something which we do not know anything or at best very little about.' (P. 233, Saturday Evening Post, October 10, 1925.)

ALLOCATIONS BASED ON INSUFFICIENT FACTS

"John B. Trevor, in his statement before the Senate Committee on Immigration, page 90, Senate hearings, 1924, stated:

"'It has been suggested that the adoption of the 1890 census in lieu of that of 1910 will accomplish an equitable apportionment between the emigration originating in northwestern Europe and in southern and eastern Europe, respectively. This principle has been embodied in the House committee bill now before Congress.

"'On the other hand, it is alleged that the selection of the census of 1890, as the basis for the computation of quotas, discriminates unjustly against immigration from what is called the newer sources of supply. Since the late arrivals are in all fairness not entitled to special privileges over those who have arrived at an earlier date and thereby contributed more to the advancement of the Nation, the obvious solution of the problem lies in the racial analysis of the population of the United States.

"'The difficulties of such a proceeding are obviously very great, and the results, owing to the lack of complete data compiled in the earlier decennial enumerations made by our Government, can therefore only approximate the truth.

"'Both the Director of the Census, Mr. Steuart, and Doctor Hill, first assistant, who appeared before the managers, declared that they would be obliged to adopt arbitrary methods to arrive at the proper basis upon which allocation will be based.'

"Commissioner General of Immigration Hull, in his annual report for 1925 (p. 29), states:

"'The bureau feels that the present method of ascertaining the quotas is far more satisfactory than the proposed determination by national origin, that it has the advantage of simplicity and certainty.

"'It is of the opinion that the proposed change will lead to great confusion and result in complexities, and accordingly it is recommended that the pertinent portions of section 11, providing for this revision of the quotas as they now stand, be rescinded.'"

In the Saturday Evening Post for October 10, 1925, Doctor Garis quotes Director Steuart as making a statement on June 24, 1925 (p. 233):

"'That there are no figures in existence which show completely the national origin of the population of the United States.'

"The Senate and House, during the first session of the Sixty-eighth Congress, expended a great deal of time on different immigration bills. But there were several other important features in addition to the quota limitations that had to be considered, and occupied a great deal of time. Of these I might mention the Japanese exclusion, alien seamen question, and nonquota immigrants.

"The necessity of passing a law during that session was very important, as the law then in effect would soon expire and we were threatened with being flooded with immigrants from many European countries.

LAW OF 1890 APPROVED AS SOUND LEGISLATION

"In a speech at the Hotel Astor, March 25, 1924, before the Economic Club, Henry H. Curran, commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island (see p. 5475, pt. 6, vol. 65, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD), stated:

"'If we drop the 1910 measure and take up the 1890 measures, we come, with a few minor differences in the case of individual nations, to a measure that almost exactly gives each part of Europe that to which it is entitled—no more and no less.

"'That is why I am for the 1890 measure. It helps us to become more homogeneous by sending to us every year a miniature or replica of that which we are already, according to original national stock.

"'The 1890 measure is the soundest, the healthiest, the fairest, and the best. I hope you will write to your Senators and Congressmen and tell them so.'

"I respectfully call your attention to the constitutional features of the national origin method. Congress had, no doubt, the power to adopt any arbitrary quota it may see fit and has the power to delegate to some commission or executive officers the power to determine the immigration quota of each country from facts and figures that may be established before such commission or officers.

"But when Congress attempts to confer upon a commission or executive officer of the Government the power to fix arbitrarily the quota for each country, has not Congress exceeded its powers in delegating to such board or officers a part of its legislative functions?

"The immigration act of 1924 provided that three years from the date of its passage should elapse before the 'national origins' clause should take effect. The law also provided that a committee, consisting of the Secretary of Commerce, Secretary of State, and Secretary of Labor, should employ experts to study the available census and immigration statistics to determine the national origin of the American population.

"On June 8, 1926, I introduced in the Senate a bill to repeal the national-origin method and leave the total annual immigration and the quota of each country the same as it has been since the passage of the 1924 law, viz, 2 per cent of the foreign-born individuals of that country residing in the United States according to the census of 1890.

"The Senate Committee on Immigration granted me a hearing on this bill on December 22 last. At that hearing I confined my brief remarks to the point that we had no official data upon which to base the calculations, and any allocations under the national-origin method would be mere guesswork and conjecture.

DIFFICULTY IN COMPUTING QUOTAS IS EXPLAINED

"A couple of weeks after I had made my statement before the Senate Immigration Committee the President submitted to the Senate, in response to a Senate resolution requesting this information, the preliminary report prepared by the committee of experts from the State, Commerce, and Labor Departments, to whom had been delegated the task of computing the quota of each country according to the national-origins method. In a letter submitting this report to the President, the Secretaries of State, Commerce, and Labor made this remarkable statement:

"'The report of the subcommittee is self-explanatory and is stated to be a preliminary report; yet in the judgment of that committee further investigation will not substantially alter this presentation.

"'Although this is the best information we have been able to secure, we wish to call attention to the reservations made by the committee and to state that in our opinion the statistical and historical information available raises grave doubts as to the whole value of these computations as a basis for the purpose intended.

"'We therefore can not assume responsibility for such conclusions under these circumstances.'

"On February 1, 1927, the chairman of the Senate Immigration Committee, Mr. JOHNSON, of California, presented a resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 152, asking for postponement for one year of that clause of the immigration act providing for the determination of the immigration quotas based upon the national-origins clause. In speaking upon this resolution, Senator JOHNSON said:

"'I desire to say that under the present immigration law the President is required to promulgate a proclamation on the 1st day of April, 1927, in respect to the national-origins provisions of the law.

"'Upon this subject two messages have been received by the Senate. The last of those messages states that the figures relied upon for the quota numbers of various countries are ambiguous and that practical legislation could not be predicated upon them.'

"And further he says:

CLARIFICATION OF DATA CONSIDERED IMPOSSIBLE

"'I violate no confidence, I think, in saying to the Senator from Missouri that the majority of the Immigration Committee desired to repeal the national-origins law, but there being a minority in favor of it and our time being so limited, we felt that we could not at this time have definitive action.'

"The resolution passed the Senate, came before the Immigration Committee of the House and a majority of the committee reporting the resolution to the House reported in part, as follows:

"'The committee having considered the text of Senate Joint Resolution 152, to postpone for one year the going into effect of the national-origins provision of the immigration act of 1924, is of the opinion that at the end of one year from July 1, 1927, the same uncertainty as to the results of regulating immigration by means of the national-origins plan will continue to exist:

"'That the Secretaries of State, Commerce, and Labor will have little, if any more, positive evidence on which to base quota findings than at present.

"'That too much uncertainty exists as to the requirements of the law that "the President shall issue a proclamation on or before April 1, 1927," when read in conjunction with further provisions of the law.

"'That the uncertainty will continue from year to year.

"'That it seems far better to have immigration quotas for the purposes of restriction fixed in such a manner as to be easily explained and easily understood by all.

"'That the committee is of the opinion that the United States, having started on a policy of numerical restriction, the principle of which is well understood, that little will be gained by changing the method.'

"Here we have the official evidence of every committee, commissioner, and person who has had an opportunity to study the national-origins clause of the immigration act unanimously stating that the method is so unreliable and unworkable that it is inadvisable to use this method for the determination of our national quotas. The Government of the United States can not afford to use such flimsy material as a foundation for its very important immigration policy."

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, February 2, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, February 1, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, our memories are full of Thy loving kindness and our hope holds on to the future. We see Thee in Thy providences. Bring us to the altar where vows are made and may we dedicate our dearest treasures to Thee. Bless us with the assurance that Thy way is the best way for our feet to tread. Oh, the soul that is brought face to face with Thee—this is the best moment of one's life. Give us Thy presence, Thy call, and Thy wisdom. Correct any false estimates of life and duty, and run Thy tremendous truth into all our hearts: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall not pass away." May we love them now and forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 700. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to execute an agreement with the Middle Rio Grande conservancy district providing for conservation, irrigation, drainage, and flood control for the Pueblo Indian lands in the Rio Grande Valley, N. Mex., and for other purposes;

S. 744. An act to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 754. An act for the relief of certain Porto Rican taxpayers.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 5657. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Monroe County, Miss., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Tombigbee River at or near Aberdeen, Monroe County, Miss.;

H. R. 9142. An act to amend section 71 of the Judicial Code, as amended, by changing time of holding court at El Dorado and Harrison, Ark.; and

H. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution for the appointment of Paul E. Divine, of Tennessee, as member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, I am president of the New York State Forestry Association. We are holding the annual meeting in Albany to-morrow. I ask permission to be absent for the next three days.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

THE FIFTEENTH DECENNIAL CENSUS

Mr. FENN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a communication from the Secretary of Commerce in relation to the census distribution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 26, 1928.

Hon. E. HART FENN,
Chairman Committee on the Census,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FENN: In accordance with our conversation, I wish to state my reasons for supporting the inclusion of the authorization for a census of distribution in the bill which pertains to the taking of the fifteenth decennial census now under consideration by your committee (H. R. 393).

During the last few years the business world has developed widespread use of systematic statistics in the better guidance of business. Through the recommendations of your committee, the census of manufactures has been changed from quinquennial to biennial. It has added greatly to the stability of the producing industries. Likewise, you increased the frequency of the national census of agriculture from decennial to quinquennial with a like result.

In addition to these great national stock-taking efforts of the Government, business men themselves have to largely supplement the figures with more specific current statistics, but they are dependent upon the Government work for their basing points. Trade associations in almost every industry are compiling monthly or quarterly figures regarding the operations of their own businesses. The Bureau of the Census attempts to gather together in its monthly Survey of Current Business many of the more significant figures of this kind. That publication now lists more than 1,500 separate current statistical items, most of them collected originally by private business organizations.

The significance of this vast array of statistical information can not be overestimated. It enables the business man to substitute facts for hunches and guesswork in the formation of his business judgments. It has contributed to the sustained and unprecedented prosperity which this country has been and is enjoying. I believe that to no inconsiderable extent this is due to our increased development and use of business statistics of both public and private origin.

If, however, we look over the array of business statistics available we find that these relate almost entirely to the production and stocks of commodities. Almost none of them relate to the movement of these commodities from the producer to the dealer or the consumer. Coincidentally, it may be noted that by far our greatest advance in business technique and efficiency has been in the field of production. Marketing and distribution are still carried on for the most part along the lines with which our fathers were familiar. To some extent the failure in distribution to make the same progress in production is due to our lack of statistical information and definite facts in this field. Also, it is to be observed that we have made far less progress in reducing the costs of distribution than we have in production. As an indication of this, if we take the factory and the retail prices of commodities at 100 for 1914, we find that to-day falling prices are from 140 to 150, while retail prices are from 165 to 170.

In any event, it is certain that there is relatively little specific information on the distribution of commodities. We do not even know the volume of our retail trade, nor can we guess at it within $10,000,000,000. To the best of our information, there are upward of 1,482,000 retailers and some 82,000 wholesalers engaged in our domestic business. These men collectively, and many of them individually, have approached the Department of Commerce asking for some fundamental statistics regarding their operations. They are convinced that large economies could be brought about if such information was available. We believe that these men are entitled to some assistance from the National Government in a task which they can not perform for themselves. For this reason, we have suggested to you that provision should be made in the next decennial census for a census of distribution, in addition to the regular censuses which have been taken in preceding periods.

In order that we might have some experience in the kind of information which could be developed in a national census of distribution, and also in order that business might see whether such data would be of use, we carried out a few experiments last year. Experimental censuses of distribution were taken in some 11 cities of different sizes and in different parts of the country. These experiments were made possible through the material cooperation of various private agencies, including the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the chambers of commerce in the various cities where these censuses were taken.

These experiments were undertaken with the guidance of a special committee of 16 men of professional economists, Government representatives, and practical business men. After these censuses had been completed, this committee met last fall in West Baden, Ind., and, after a very careful examination of the results, particularly with reference to their value to business, the committee voted unanimously to recommend to the Department of Commerce the desirability and urgent necessity of a national census of distribution. This action was later approved and ratified by the Board of Directors of the United States Chamber of Commerce. We have also received many similar resolutions from other business organizations urging the necessity of the work.

The reports of these experimental censuses of distribution in the several cities are before your committee. They relate to obtaining information from wholesalers and retailers regarding the character of their business, the number of proprietors and employees, and wages paid, the volume of business, the stocks on hand, and the commodities which they handle.

I shall not prolong this statement with any attempt to point out the usefulness of these data, but I would like to suggest one or two items which seem to me particularly significant.

In Baltimore, 33 per cent of all the retailers in that city did a gross business of less than $5,000 per year. That means that total sales in these stores average less than $100 a week. Fifty-five per cent of the retail stores did less than $10,000 worth of business a year, or less than $200 gross sales per week. This is starting wholesalers to considering how much of a high-priced salesman's time should be devoted to visiting such stores. It bids fair to be of assistance in pointing out some of the wasteful practices in our distribution system. Many other similar points could be pointed out.

It is our feeling in the department that a national census of distribution would form the foundation for a marked advance in the efficiency of our marketing system, and I trust the committee will give careful consideration to the advisability of including it in the next decennial census.

Faithfully yours, HERBERT HOOVER.

INTERLOCKING BANK DIRECTORATES

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. McFADDEN (when the Committee on Banking and Currency was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6491) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last proviso of the second paragraph of section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"And provided further, That nothing in this act shall prohibit any private banker from being an officer, director, or employee of not more than two banks, banking associations, or trust companies, or prohibit any officer, director, or employee of any bank, banking association, or trust company, or any class A director of a Federal reserve bank, from being an officer, director, or employee of not more than two other banks, banking associations, or trust companies, whether organized under the laws of the United States or any State, if in any such case there is in force a permit therefor issued by the Federal Reserve Board; and the Federal Reserve Board is authorized to issue such permit if in its judgment it is not incompatible with the public interest, and to revoke any such permit whenever it finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard, that public interest requires its revocation."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some misunderstanding as to how much debate is permissible under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to one hour, and he may move the previous question at any time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the opposition certainly ought to be entitled to an hour of the two hours allowed for debate, and if no member of the committee calls for it another Member opposed to the bill ought to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. That is true of a bill on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. I think that is the spirit of the rule on Calendar Wednesday—there are two hours' debate confined to the bill, and the opposition ought to be entitled to an equal division of the time.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the Chair will examine this matter very carefully. I think the gentleman from Texas is mistaken about it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Let me say to the gentleman from Connecticut if that were not true you could not offer an amendment unless you could get the consent of the one in charge of the bill.

Mr. TILSON. What the gentleman from Texas says is so as to a House Calendar bill, and Calendar Wednesday does not change the rules of the House in this respect.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have the rule before me, and here is what it says:

Provided, That not more than two hours of general debate shall be permitted on any measure called up on Calendar Wednesday, and all debate must be confined to the subject matter of the bill, and the time be equally divided between those for and against the bill.

Mr. TILSON. What would the gentleman call "general debate" on a House Calendar bill? Is there any such thing?

Mr. BLANTON. On Calendar Wednesday; yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in the little book issued by a Member of the House at the present time, then parliamentary clerk, CLARENCE CANNON, on page 175, he says:

Amendments may be offered to a bill on the House Calendar called up on Calendar Wednesday by a Member securing the floor at any time during the two-hour debate provided by the bill.

The rule is perfectly clear to me that any Member opposed to the bill has a right to claim one hour, and during the hour he may offer an amendment or yield a part of his time, and any Member gaining recognition of the Chair has a right to offer an amendment and have it pending.

Mr. TILSON. Admitting for the sake of argument all that the gentleman says, let us suppose that the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not see fit to yield the floor, and within the hour moves the previous question. Where is there any provision in the rules of the House that would cut off the previous question under such circumstances?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The Calendar Wednesday rule says that any Member opposed to the bill as a matter of right shall be recognized by the Speaker for one hour's debate. At least that is the way I understand the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This statement is made in the manual:

The same rules of debate apply to House Calendar bills called up on Calendar Wednesday as on other days.

That is a ruling by Speaker GILLETT, referred to in section 971 of the copy of the manual which I have in my hand.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, that was a ruling by Speaker GILLETT, deciding as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] contends. I think the Chair was wrong, but that was the decision on a House bill. I make this suggestion—the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not care to yield for an amendment, he wishes to move the previous question within the hour?

Mr. McFADDEN. That is my intention.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] is opposed to the bill.

I do not care to take any time myself; but can not the gentleman state what the agreement is between him and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH]? Has the gentleman an agreement with the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maryland and myself are entirely in accord, or have been until this question arose. It was my purpose to yield to him 15 minutes so that he might make a statement. I understood that that was entirely agreeable to him. Then some one in the House raised this question as to the rights under debate.

Mr. WINGO. Are there any other gentlemen who are opposed to this who want to debate it? I think that we can reach an agreement without any trouble.

Mr. McFADDEN. I think we can.

Mr. WINGO. Are there any other gentlemen who wish to be heard in opposition to this or in support of it? As far as I am concerned, I do not intend to take any time.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] realizes that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] can reach the result he desires to reach by moving to recommit with a motion carrying all of the amendments that he wishes to have written into the bill?

Mr. WINGO. I understand that. I simply wanted to have the gentleman get whatever time he wanted in order that he might exercise his right. If there are any others who wish to be heard in opposition, I think now is the time to ascertain that fact. If there is anyone else on this side or on the gentleman's side who desires to be heard in opposition, then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] will be notified of that, and he can yield such time as he desires. The gentleman from Maryland is going to be yielded 15 minutes, and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania will move the previous question. The House is on notice as to what is going to be done, and if there is anyone who has any kick coming, let him make it now.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am going to make one protest. If the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency is going to push these bills through in this manner and move the previous question without the opposition having an equal chance to be heard, I think we ought to have a quorum, if that is going to be done here to-day, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, we should first settle this matter, I think.

Mr. BLANTON. But I would like to have the membership here, so that they may listen to the Speaker's ruling. And it will also give the Speaker time to look up the precedents. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 22]

Abernethy	Davey	Hull, Morton D.	Morin

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-two Members have answered present—a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule on the question presented. The Chair has before him an exact precedent on the question now at issue. On April 21, 1920, the same point was made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], as has been made by several gentlemen this morning, to wit, that the same rule of two hours' debate should apply to bills on the House Calendar as applies to bills on the Union Calendar. After some discussion Mr. Speaker GILLETT made a very well-considered ruling as to the philosophy of the Calendar Wednesday rule. The Chair will not read all of it; it is of some length. It appears on page 5946 of the RECORD of April 21, 1920. The Chair will read one or two paragraphs of that decision. After discussing the philosophy of the rule and the necessity of preserving the integrity of Calendar Wednesday against what might be filibustering or otherwise to prevent consideration of a bill, Mr. Speaker GILLETT said:

So the Chair thinks the main purpose of adopting this rule was speed and expedition in the transaction of the business of the House on Calendar Wednesday.

That being so, it seems to the Chair that that purpose will be best furthered by holding that this clause applies to bills on the Union Calendar only, and that when bills on the House Calendar are brought up on Calendar Wednesday the previous question can be ordered at any time.

Further:

Therefore the Chair thinks that it would best be carrying out the intention of those who framed this provision and expediting the business of the House to rule that the previous question can be ordered. That leaves it all in the control of the House, because if the House desires debate the previous question can be voted down. Therefore the Chair rules that the previous question, which was moved by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Platt], is in order.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] appealed from that decision, and the Chair was sustained by a vote of 274 to 15.

Under the circumstances the Chair is constrained to hold that the Calendar Wednesday rule as to two hours' debate applies only to Union Calendar bills, and not to bills on the House Calendar; and if the House desires to debate this question at any length, it can vote down the previous question whenever moved by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN]. But the Chair holds that so far as the bills on the House Calendar are concerned, they are governed by the same rules as prevail on any other day, and that the two-hour debate rule applies only to bills on the Union Calendar.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania for one hour.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, just as this question was about to be decided by the Speaker the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] raised the question that the chairman of the committee was trying to limit debate and trying to force through a bill without proper consideration. I want to say in answer to that suggestion that the chairman of the committee has no such thought whatsoever in mind. He wants to be as liberal as he can be under the rules of the House for the proper discussion of this measure.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood it was the gentleman's intention to move the previous question after giving only 15 minutes to this side. It is the second bill which the gentleman is going to call up that we want ample time to oppose.

Mr. McFADDEN. I understood that only 15 minutes was asked for on that side. That is where the impression came from. I now understand that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] is the only one in opposition to this amendment who desires to speak. Am I correctly informed on that?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. So far as I know, that is true.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I understand this is the same bill that passed the House once before as a separate measure.

Mr. McFADDEN. It has been under consideration for some two or three years.

Mr. WINGO. It is the same provision that was in the McFadden bill which was passed by the House and cut out in the Senate.

Mr. McFADDEN. No; I think it was just the opposite. It was in a Senate bill, and the House would not agree to it. That is the reason why it is here at this time. In some prior Congress it may have been acted on by the House and not by the Senate. It has been pending before the two Houses for two or three years.

Mr. WINGO. I understood it was in the House bill, and in the Senate an amendment was offered cutting it out, and the Senate receded from the amendment, because, naming a certain western Senator, it was said he was insisting on that Senate amendment, and they would lose his support on other legislation if that were done. The House at any rate considered this proposal before.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am sure it has been under consideration in the House heretofore.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Maryland half an hour?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will yield to him after I have finished my statement.

WHEAT EXPORT DEBENTURE PLAN

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, a number of Members of the House have expressed a great deal of interest in the subject of farm relief, and particularly in connection with the bill that I am introducing, and in order that they may have some information I ask at this point permission to extend my remarks by printing a statement concerning the debenture plan which has been prepared at my suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a statement recently compiled at his instance with reference to the farm relief bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the statement referred to:

WHAT THE EXPORT DEBENTURE PLAN IS AND HOW IT WOULD WORK

The export debenture plan is a straightforward attempt to bring tariff benefits to those agricultural products at present unable to take advantage of the protective-tariff system because of small exportable surpluses which tend to depress domestic prices to the world level.

Equality between agriculture and the industrial and commercial groups could be restored either by pulling down the artificial high-price structure made possible for these latter groups through such legislative devices as protective tariffs, immigration restriction, railroad rate guaranties, exclusive patents, and tariff rebates, or the readjustment could be made by enabling agriculture to take advantage of similar devices to raise itself to this same price level and thus meet the difference in costs of production here and abroad. The grange prefers the latter—the constructive method—rather than the destructive and disruptive method.

Since the inequalities resulting from the tariff system are one of the sources of difficulty, the logical and sensible thing to do is to apply the remedy at that point. The export debenture or bounty plan is, in fact, a recognized supplement to the protective-tariff system in many nations to-day and was proposed by Alexander Hamilton as a part of the original tariff system in the United States.

Stated in the simplest terms the export debenture plan is an arrangement whereby exporters of those agricultural products of which we produce a surplus, receive from the Treasury Department certificates having a face value established by Congress and intended to represent the difference in costs of production between here and abroad, such certificates being negotiable and good for their face value in the payment of import tariffs on any articles later imported.

The farmer cooperative organization or commercial exporter may not desire to import directly, but the certificates would be readily negotiable to American importers at a slight discount. Naturally, the effect of such an arrangement would be immediately to raise by approximately the amount of the export debenture the prices of those farm products now held down to the foreign level. This would follow because any holder of these products could readily sell his supply in the foreign market at the foreign price and get in addition thereto the value of the export debenture or certificate. He is therefore able and willing to pay a higher price, and the general price level for these crops in this country would rapidly ascend by approximately the amount of the export debenture.

The grange plan provides that at the beginning only one-half the existing tariff rates would be given in debenture payment. For example, the present tariff on wheat is 42 cents a bushel. A cooperative association or grain dealer in Kansas desiring to ship wheat to Liverpool would receive the Liverpool price plus a certificate or debenture having a face value amounting to 21 cents for each bushel exported. Unless the exporter himself desired to bring in goods and use his debentures to pay the import duties or tariffs on these imports, he would sell his debentures to persons in the importing business. Since these debentures would be worth full face value in paying import duties, the importer would be eager to get them and would pay face value less a nominal exchange discount.

The grange plan provides that the President may adjust the debenture rates applying to the several farm crops, either upward or downward to the extent of 99 per cent. Whenever investigations show that the rates set in the act do not cover the difference in costs of producion between here and abroad, the rates may be raised. Whenever the exportable surplus increases unduly, the debenture rates may be reduced as a means of discouraging overproduction.

With the export debenture plan of farm relief, no money would be taken out of the United States Treasury, but, of course, the cash receipts of the Treasury would be less, since a portion of the import duties would be paid with debentures instead of with cash, as at present. Exactly the same thing happens, however, whenever Congress increases tariff rates so as to protect our manufacturers against foreign competitors. If the desired purpose is accomplished, imports are shut off and the money from import duties is kept out of the United States Treasury. Theoretically at least the money thenceforth goes into the pockets of the American manufacturer and his laborers.

One great advantage of the export debenture plan as compared with the equalization fee plan is its extreme simplicity of operation. No complicated machinery is required, no elaborate new boards or commissions; in fact, no large appropriation is required, although a modest fund for administration would be needed. The Treasury Department would issue these debentures just as it now issues "drawback" certificates, tobacco-revenue stamps, and similar instruments having a recognized value that must be protected. Officials already stationed at export ports are capable of certifying to the amounts of the various crops exported and designating the persons entitled to receive the export debentures.

IS THIS PLAN A SUBSIDY?

Opponents of the export debenture plan usually base their opposition on the plea that it is a subsidy. The plan is no more a subsidy than is the protective tariff. The very purpose of our protective tariff is to prevent foreign low-cost goods from coming into the United States. By this means large quantities of dutiable goods are kept out and hundreds of millions of dollars in duties are prevented from entering our Treasury. For instance, when the duty on aluminum was more than quadrupled in September, 1922, the Treasury income from that source dropped from an average of about $2,000,000 for the preceding three years to an average of $514,000 for the succeeding four years. This protection results in great benefits to manufacturers and their employees and the cost of this protection is borne by consumers of these articles; that is, by the general public.

Exactly the same thing happens where the export debenture plan is in operation. Less tariff receipts enter the Treasury, but our producers of farm crops are benefited. Consumers, including farmers, pay slightly more for some of their foods as their contribution toward making the protective-tariff system actually protective for agriculture. Consumers likewise pay for the benefits expected by farmers under the equilization-fee plan as proposed in the McNary-Haugen bill.

The export debenture plan is not as much a subsidy as the tariff drawback privilege now accorded many American manufacturers, or the tariff reductions given Cuban sugar, greatly to the benefit of American capitalists. Under the tariff drawback arrangement our manufacturers are actually paid what amounts to an export bounty on goods sold abroad. They receive cash payments from the Government in proportion to the amounts of goods exported. This practice is based on the theory that our manufacturers should not be compelled to pay duties on raw materials imported for manufacture and later included in manufactured articles sold abroad. It is contended that the manufacturer can not afford to pay the protected domestic price for these imported materials if he is to sell abroad at world price levels. This is exactly the contention of the American farmer; he can not pay the protected price for labor, supplies, and other productions factors and at the same time sell at the foreign price level not only abroad but at home as well.

Our Government allows Cuba a 20 per cent reduction on sugar duties. This gives Cuba a great advantage over other foreign countries and is a tremendous benefit to American capitalists who now dominate the Cuban sugar situation, as well as to American manufacturers who sell goods to Cuba. Incidentally this 20 per cent tariff reduction removes by just that degree the tariff protection needed by sugar cane and beet farmers in the United States. This special concession to Cuba, and indirectly to American capital and industry, has kept out of the United States Treasury sugar duties amounting to not less than $135,000,000 in the last five years.

The farmer is asking merely that there be applied to his problem some of the same spirit of tariff adjustment and modification as is already being used to accommodate industry and capital.

HOW MUCH WOULD IT COST?

The grange plan definitely limits the maximum amount of debentures in any year to 50 per cent of the tariff revenues. At the debenture rates proposed, it is estimated that the total value of debentures issued on agricultural exports during 1927 would have been about $175,000,000.

The United States Treasury would pay out nothing. But revenues from import duties would be reduced—just as they are reduced by the Cuban sugar tariff differential, drawback privileges, and prohibitive tariffs—and this amount would have to be made up in other ways. Some of it could be secured through tariffs on other food products that compete with American agriculture—tropical fruits, for instance. If, instead of reducing corporation taxes, the present schedule of tax rates be retained for a time the tax revenues would probably be ample to make up for any decline that might result in import revenues. Surely, industry and labor would profit from improved agricultural conditions far more than from the small tax cut that is contemplated at the present time.

WOULD FOOD COSTS BE INCREASED?

Food costs need not be increased to any appreciable extent and in many instances not at all. The price paid by the consumer bears so little direct relation to the price received by the farmer that the increase in the wholesale price might be entirely offset by more efficient distribution. For instance, the wheat in the average 8.55-cent loaf of bread costs only 1.15 cents, according to a recent report of the Federal Trade Commission. Allowing the 21-cent increase in the price of a bushel of wheat under the export debenture plan, this would amount to only about 0.15 part of a cent increase in the cost of the wheat required in the loaf of bread. Since the margin between the baker and the consumer is about 6.5 cents, this added small fraction of a cent in cost could readily be covered through better efficiency in distribution and cause no increase in the retail price of bread.

ALL WOULD BENEFIT

The increased income which would come to farmers with the export debenture plan in operation would act as a stimulus to the various lines of commercial activity. The farmer must of necessity spend nearly all he makes and the manufacturer, distributor, and banker would each get their share of this increased business. But in the process new life would be put into agriculture and the farmer encouraged to go ahead with his program of self-help and improved efficiency in production and marketing. The economic structure would again be in more equitable relationship as between the various groups and all would have benefited through the readjustment.

INTERLOCKING BANK DIRECTORATES

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended.

In its original form section 8 of the Clayton Antitrust Act, approved October 15, 1914, absolutely prohibited interlocking directorates and officerships between certain classes of banking institutions having resources in excess of $5,000,000 or located in the same city of more than 200,000 inhabitants. It was the apparent intention of Congress to preserve competition between these classes of banking institutions and prevent the formation of bank monopolies. These prohibitions, however, were found to be unnecessarily severe, and in 1916 Congress enacted the so-called Kern amendment to the Clayton Act which gave the Federal Reserve Board discretionary power to permit interlocking directorates between a member bank and not more than two other banks coming within the prohibited classes of the Clayton Act, provided such banks were not in substantial competition. This amendment made it possible for a maximum of three banks to have interlocking directorates, but only on condition that such banks be not in substantial competition.

The experience of the Federal Reserve Board in administering these provisions of law, however, has shown clearly that the Kern amendment in its present form does not work out in the way in which it was intended. It operates in an illogical way and, instead of carrying out the purpose for which it was enacted, often defeats that purpose. The experience of the Federal Reserve Board in attempting to administer the law in conformity with the intent of Congress has proven this to be the case. The mere absence of substantial competition between banks is the wrong basis for permitting interlocking directorates. If noncompetitive banks are permitted to interlock, it is quite possible—and this has happened frequently—that they will become substantial competitors in spite of their interlocking directorate. Yet in such cases they may not have additional common directors, notwithstanding that they have permitted the salutary growth of competition, which is just what Congress desired. On the other hand, competing banks which desire common directors but are unable to have them because of the competition will naturally strive to eliminate competition and thus bring themselves in line with the terms of the law, so that they may be authorized to interlock. In addition, the present law discriminates against national banks in that it restricts them in their choice of directorates but does not prohibit interlocking directorates between State banks and trust companies where no national banks are involved.

The reason for discontinuance of an interlocking directorate between two banks in a small city is frequently misunderstood, and the bank from which a director is required to resign in accordance with the strict requirements of the present law is viewed with some misapprehension by the public. In several cases it has been represented to the Federal Reserve Board that requiring the resignation of a director would cause the bank to be suspected of insolvency and a financial crisis might ensue which would cause serious injury to the banking and business situation in the district. The Federal Reserve Board is frequently confronted with cases of interlocking directorates which have lawfully existed for a number of years but which have eventually come within the prohibitions of the law because the resources of one of the banks involved has grown to an amount in excess of $5,000,000. Cases of this kind occur most often in small towns, where the enforced resignation of a director from one of the banks involved, in order to comply with the strict requirements of the law, is quite likely to cause public misapprehension or distrust with regard to that bank.

The important question is not whether the banks involved are in substantial competition but what effect the interlocking directorates will have on the banking and credit situation in the community. Accordingly, the proposed amendment to the law would make the test for permitting interlocking directorates whether or not the granting of permits for such directorates would be incompatible with the public interest.

There is another respect in which the present law works illogically and in a way apparently not contemplated by Congress. The Attorney General has held that joint-stock land banks are "banks" within the prohibitions of section 8 of the Clayton Antitrust Act. The Federal Reserve Board has recently received applications from a number of gentlemen to serve as directors of joint-stock land banks and at the same time as directors of State banks which are not members of the Federal reserve system. Under the opinion of the Attorney General the services of these gentlemen on these institutions at the same time is contrary to the provisions of the Clayton Act. Since neither the joint-stock land bank nor the State bank is a member of the Federal reserve system, an interlocking directorate between these institutions can not be permitted, because under the terms of the present law a permit can not be granted for an interlocking directorate between two nonmember banks.

The above discussion should demonstrate clearly that the Kern amendment in its present form operates in an illogical way and often defeats the very purpose for which it was enacted. It is believed that the law should be further amended in such a way as to enable the Federal Reserve Board to administer it more effectively and more nearly in harmony with the apparent purpose and intent of Congress in regulating interlocking directorates. It is the purpose of the proposed amendment—H. R. 6491—to redraft the Kern amendment in simpler form giving the Federal Reserve Board discretionary power to permit interlocking directorates between any three banks, if in its judgment it is not incompatible with the public interest and preserving the board's power to revoke any such permit when the public interest requires.

Mr. KELLY. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption at that point?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will; yes.

Mr. KELLY. I have been interested for some time in a condition which has arisen in a city in my district where an outstanding man is desired to act as a director of a national bank who at the same time is a director in a State bank. Under this amendment it would be possible for him to serve as a director of a national bank and also as a director in a State bank with a reserve of more than $5,000,000.

Mr. McFADDEN. It would; yes. That is the very purpose for which this amendment is proposed. Under the language of the proposed amendment the Federal Reserve Board would be authorized to grant permits even in cases where no member bank of the Federal reserve system is involved and thus an interlocking directorate between a joint-stock land bank and a State nonmember bank might be authorized by permit of the board.

I think that covers the main facts of the proposed amendment and the reasons why this amendment should be enacted at this time.

Mr. WELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WELLER. How far does this amendment go with reference to substantial competition? Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain that? What do you mean by "substantial competition" and how far does that go?

Mr. McFADDEN. That is the thing which has caused a lot of discussion in the Federal Reserve Board, and it is one of the main reasons why we are trying to correct this. Much misunderstanding has come about, and it is possible for banks to avoid substantial competition and overcome the intent of the Clayton Act.

Mr. WELLER. It seems to me that is the gist of the whole situation, as the gentleman has stated.

Mr. McFADDEN. This bill proposes to vest the control of it in the Federal Reserve Board, permitting the board to function in needy cases in the manner in which they should, but always looking after the public interest.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. If I understand the bill correctly, discretion is left with the Federal Reserve Board in the matter of the issuance of permits.

Mr. McFADDEN. It is.

Mr. BURTNESS. Where more than two banks are involved?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. And the legislative guide which is set up in the instruction to the board is that it may be permitted if not incompatible with the public interest?

Mr. McFADDEN. That is the idea exactly.

Mr. BURTNESS. It strikes me that language is rather general, and perhaps the gentleman could inform us somewhat as to what you had in mind.

Mr. McFADDEN. We are really substituting that language for the present language "in substantial competition," and permitting the Federal Reserve Board to decide whether it is for the public interest or not to permit that enlargement of service by having a capable man on more than two boards.

Mr. BURTNESS. Just what factors does the gentleman feel the Federal Reserve Board would take into consideration in determining whether that permission is in the public interest or not?

Mr. McFADDEN. They would take into consideration the class of business that the bank was doing and whether or not it was serving the public as it properly should and whether by this change there was any possibility of the tightening of credit or monopolistic control of finance in that community through the granting of such a permit. There are many circumstances surrounding these applications for permits to serve on three boards in communities where it would be absolutely to the benefit of the community to have the service and advice of perhaps one or two business men in that community.

Mr. BURTNESS. I take it the question as to whether there would be any great lessening of competition would be one of the factors to be taken into consideration.

Mr. McFADDEN. Without a question of doubt; yes. The board is weighing all of those situations very carefully and they are considerably embarrassed now in meeting the different situations that are put forward throughout the country. They have withheld permission to certain directors and have forced men off of boards because of the Clayton law, as amended, as it is now enforced.

Mr. BURTNESS. Did the committee give any consideration to the possibility of attempting to write into the act some special guides that are more specific than this purely general one of public interest?

Mr. McFADDEN. We thought it was better, after very careful consideration, to give them the general latitude which I believe they have shown no indication of abusing in the past in respect of matters of this kind.

Mr. BEEDY and Mr. BLACK of New York rose.

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield first to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman from North Dakota asked if the board would not consider whether competition would be diminished by the issuing of such a permit, and the gentleman answered that that would be one of the considerations. As I understand the situation, that would be one of the principal, if not the chief, consideration which would determine the board in issuing its permit, would it not?

Mr. McFADDEN. I imagine it would be; yes.

Mr. BEEDY. The effect of the testimony before the committee, as I understood it, was there were many situations where if this discretion were not given the board substantial competition would be stifled, and because of that fact they wanted their powers enlarged in this respect.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I was just going to ask the gentleman if the demand for this change is universal throughout the country or just from some particular territory?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is universal, I will say to the gentleman. The board has furnished the committee with a brief setting forth the different cases with which they have been dealing, and it is universal throughout the different sections of the country. I know, for instance, there is a case in California, two or three cases in Pennsylvania, and one in New Jersey.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Is it the gentleman's theory that if the board decides that substantial competition in the banking business is not a good thing, the board under this amendment might go ahead and do away with substantial competition?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think so.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Does not the gentleman think his new language is almost a contradiction of the old language?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; I do not think so. It is a substitute for that language and gives more discretion to the board to deal with these situations as business men should deal with them.

Mr. BLACK of New York. But my suggestion is so if the board decides upon a policy of doing away with competition.

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think the board would agree upon a policy of that kind.

Mr. BLACK of New York. The board might think such competition incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Has there been any opposition recorded against the bill from the small banks?

Mr. McFADDEN. Not to my knowledge; no.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Have they had an opportunity to present their views?

Mr. McFADDEN. The matter has been pending before our committee for some three or four years, and it has been a matter of knowledge with the financial papers of the country and the banking associations of the country. On the contrary, the bankers have expressed themselves in favor of this amendment.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. When the gentleman says "bankers"——

Mr. McFADDEN. The American Bankers' Association, for instance.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That is controlled by the large institutions, is it not?

Mr. McFADDEN. Oh, no; it is not. It is controlled by the country banks.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. BACHMANN. I have a situation in my district where a very substantial gentleman is a director of a State bank. He has also been made a director of a national bank, but the Federal Reserve Board would not permit him to serve as a director of the national bank.

Mr. McFADDEN. Quite properly so.

Mr. BACHMANN. Because of the fact that he is a director of this State bank.

Mr. McFADDEN. Quite properly so under a strict intrepretation of the Clayton Act. This bill if passed will permit such a director to serve.

Mr. BACHMANN. If this bill passes and the board is satisfied that he can fill the position in accordance with this act, then there will be no reason for his not serving as a director of the national bank?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; none whatever.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. If a man is a member of the board of directors of a State bank to-day, does this bill permit him to become a member of the board of directors of a national bank without the consent of the Federal Reserve Board or with its consent?

Mr. McFADDEN. With the consent of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry, and in addressing this inquiry I would like to have the attention also of the lawyers on the gentleman's committee? Several times last week the House had before it bills to amend certain acts. Reference was made to the act giving the date when the act was passed, the same as has been done in this instance. The act referred to in this bill, of course, can be found printed in at least two volumes of official Government publications, one is the Statutes at Large and the other is the United States Code. The United States Code was placed in the hands of all Congressmen and all courts and all department heads and chiefs of bureaus, and about 7,500 have been purchased by lawyers. The inquiry I am directing to the gentleman and to the committee is whether they have any objection to inserting at the proper place, at least parenthetically, reference to the United States Code, so that the lawyers and the courts and the departments, when they get this act, can turn to a volume already in their possession and find out just exactly what has been amended.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will state that since the gentleman called my attention to that I have looked it up and I have the information which I propose to ask unanimous consent to insert in the title and also right after the enacting clause. It is title 15, chapter 1, page 45, section 19, of the United States Code.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the gentleman think it is necessary to cite the chapter? The sections are numbered under the title and go right over the chapter without any renumbering of sections.

Mr. STEVENSON. I thought I had better give the lawyers a real good pointer about where they would find this thing, because it is a very obscure piece of legislation anyway.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is entirely satisfactory, and I think all bills that come in hereafter that amend existing law should have a reference to the United States Code.

Mr. LUCE. If the gentleman will permit, I am in entire sympathy with what the gentleman suggests. My understanding has been that the code is not yet law, but is only prima facie evidence. Does the gentleman understand that?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Of course, there is a dispute on that and we have not the time to debate that question. I will be very pleased to present my observations on that phase of the matter at some other time.

But even though it is not the law, to insert a reference parenthetically, not striking out anything, but giving a reference to the code parenthetically can not affect the validity.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 23 minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] for the purpose of making a statement.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] would like to have five minutes, and I would like to yield five minutes to him.

Mr. McFADDEN. That will be entirely agreeable.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill coming up as it does on Calendar Wednesday, and only having one hour for its consideration, would naturally appear to the House to be a comparatively unimportant piece of legislation. Usually bills which should take up seriously the time of the House are given days and sometimes weeks, but this proposed measure is, in my judgment, as important and demands as serious consideration from the Members of the House as any legislation proposed since I have been a Member.

Why do I say that? It appears on its face to be harmless. It appears at first blush to merely give the members of the Federal Reserve Board a slightly additional power in allowing bank directorates to interlock, but, as a matter of fact, it would be a distinct gain in monopolies' eternal struggle to entrench itself.

You know human nature is a strange thing. It seems to make no difference how much ability a man has, how well his mind is trained, or how much general education he has. It makes no difference how often he has been told, and how well he seems to know, that there is not and can not be in this world such a thing as a benevolent despot, for when it comes time to consider specific legislation he will forget it ninety-nine times out of a hundred.

For several years here, under practically the conditions confronting us to-day, very limited time, we considered the question of broadening the rights of banks to engage in branch banking. That tendency was restrained for two Congresses, but because, and only because of the enormous pressure of the great banks of this country which largely dominate its economic life, their continued and insidious pressure, the act allowing practically unlimited branch banking was passed last winter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Is not this bill which we are now considering evidence of the tendency of the times to permit vast wealth and corporations to make consolidations and stifle competition?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is what I am coming to. I want to emphasize to-day that this Calendar Wednesday with one hour for debate is another opportunity for the great banking interests of the country to consolidate the credit situation in their own hands. Why do I say this? I am going to ask you to consider carefully the language of the Clayton Act, the language of the Kern amendment liberalizing that act, and the matter of the amendment proposed to-day.

Section 8 of the Clayton Antitrust Act is as follows:

SEC. 8. That from and after two years from the date of the approval of this act no person shall at the same time be a director or other officer or employee of more than one bank, banking association, or trust company, organized or operating under the laws of the United States, either of which has deposits, capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating more than $5,000,000; and no private banker or person who is a director in any bank or trust company, organized and operating under the laws of a State, having deposits, capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating more than $5,000,000, shall be eligible to be a director in any bank or banking association organized or operating under the laws of the United States.

That is perfectly good legislation. That is legislation which tends to preserve the very thing we all want to preserve—democracy in the extension of credit. Why, my friends, anyone who has had a fairly wide experience in the banking world knows this: You can have what appears to be a democratic form of government, you can have a president instead of a king, you can have a senate and house of representatives, you can have a governor and representative government in the States, but unless you have a democracy of credit, unless you have equal opportunity given to the public to secure credit, you have no democracy except in name, because nine-tenths of the business of this country is not done with money but with bank checks representing discounted notes.

Unless the average man has the same opportunity that the more favored man has to obtain credit, his economic life is cramped, his opportunities are restricted, and democracy to him is a sham, because the very thing which gives us the opportunity to function as men in public life—and when I say public life I mean as distinguished from life within our private families—is the equal right to obtain funds for legitimate business purposes. I remember very distinctly in my county when I was a boy there was one bank, and it was commonly said a note to be discounted at that bank was not a note at all but a petition, signed by many people, representing much more security than was necessary, in order to have the note discounted at all, and that the man who obtained the discount was placed in the position of a suppliant in spite of the fact he was paying 6 per cent for his money.

At present, with nine institutions in the same territory, occupying a highly competitive situation, a very different condition exists. I am only illustrating by that community because I happen to know about it, but the same thing exists all over the United States. In this locality now a young man or a group of men desiring to start in business obtain credit on proper security or valid moral risk as a matter of course, because the directors of each bank knows there is a competitive institution across the street which will absorb the business. This condition has tended to open up the county more than anything else could possibly do. Not only the individual but the community has benefited.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. In the last analysis is not credit a commodity, and is it not just as vicious and destructive to the economic life of the Nation to have a monopoly of credit as it is to have a monopoly of any other of the natural resources of the American people?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I think the gentleman has splendidly stated it, though I would go even further. I would say it is infinitely more important to have credit sold on an equal basis to all the public than it is to resist monopoly in any other commodity. Of course, the bankers naturally do not like the Clayton Antitrust Act. There is nothing wrong with it. There is no reason why a man should serve on more than one board of directors. No man has so much wisdom that his services are indispensable to two or more banks.

A man is wanted on the directorates of more than one bank because he is an individual who is outstanding and because he is a strong personality and able to dominate the affairs of a community; he is a natural dictator, and in consequence that man, if on several boards, dominates not only one bank, but the whole situation, and instead of having several banks you have in reality but one. If this man does not want credit extended to a man or an interest, the man or interest not only can not get credit from one of the banks, he can not get it from any one of them. It is a perfectly simple matter. It is the old, old story that there is no such thing on earth as a benevolent despot, and why we can not remember it every day in the week is not clear to me.

In 1916 the Clayton Antitrust Act was amended as follows—Kern amendment:

And provided further, That nothing in this act shall prohibit any officer, director, or employee of any member bank or class A director of a Federal reserve bank, who shall first procure the consent of the Federal Reserve Board, which board is hereby authorized, at its discretion, to grant, withhold, or revoke such consent, from being an officer, director, or employee of not more than two other banks, banking associations, or trust companies, whether organized under the laws of the United States or any State, if such other bank, banking association, or trust company is not in substantial competition with such member bank.

Of course, safeguards seem to surround the amendment, but here is the Federal Reserve Board sitting in Washington, and they are amenable, not to improper influences, of course, but when big men in the banking world come to Washington and ask for a privilege, they do not go about the matter in an abrupt way; they are very adroit, wonderfully skillful and magnetic, and the consequence is that ninety-nine times out of a hundred if they want permission for an individual to sit on two or more directorates they get the right to have him sit there. It can always be contended that two institutions are not in "subsantial competition," or nearly always.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. If they are not in "substantial competition," permission may now be granted them to sit on two banks.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Under the Kern amendment.

Mr. BURTNESS. That is the present law?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. So that after all the only question is this, practically, whether Congress wants to permit interlocking directorates or institutions which are in fact competitive.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is true.

Mr. BURTNESS. If there is only some slight competition between them, that amounts to little or nothing, the board now has the power to grant permission to sit on two banks.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is true, and the law as it now stands is utterly impractical. It simply means that when they want to get the right to sit they get the right to sit; but there will be a motion to recommit this bill, which will strike out the Kern amendment and leave the Clayton Antitrust Act in its original form.

Mr. BURTNESS. It would prevent them sitting on the directorate of any banks which are in any competition whatsoever?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It will prevent them from sitting on the directorates of two or more banks whether they are in competition with each other or not, just as in the Clayton Antitrust Act as originally passed.

Now, then, this bill gives the Federal Reserve Board the right to allow an individual to sit on as many as three boards of directors if in their opinion the public interest is not interfered with; in other words, if in the opinion of the board it is in the public interest they should do so.

For instance, a man in Sioux City, Iowa, can sit on three boards of directors unless somebody in Sioux City, Iowa, will come down here to Washington and establish the fact in the minds of the Federal Reserve Board that it is incompatible with the public interest for that man to sit on these three boards; practically an impossible proposition. This bill ought to be frank. It ought to simply say an individual can sit on as many as three boards, because that is the effect of it.

Now, what sort of testimony did we have before the committee? The members of the Reserve Board came before the committee and said that this Kern amendment had worked hardships. They spoke of some three or four instances in small communities, where an individual was sitting on two boards. They claimed in each instance the weaker bank in the community would fail if the individual were removed from its directorate, as the public would think the bank was in bad condition.

Now, of course, that is a far-fetched proposition. It is a perfectly simple matter if a man is sitting on two boards and has to resign from one to go out on the street on Tuesday or Wednesday or Thursday morning where men are standing around the corner and say, "Well, Jim has got to get off this board. That bunch in Washington have passed a law in which they say he can sit only on one board, and he must get off." It is perfectly obvious the argument made before our committee was either consciously or unconsciously to cover up the real purposes of the legislation. But suppose some institution somewhere in this country was inconvenienced because a man had to get off its board of directors. What has that to do with a principle? What have we got to do with that? Here we are legislating on a question involving monopoly of credit, and we are asked to base our decision on the fact that some institution somewhere in this country may be inconvenienced if we do not settle it the wrong way.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. As I understand from the bill, a permit must first be obtained from the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What does the gentleman think about that additional power given to the Federal Reserve Board? What do you think of that?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The Federal Reserve Board has that power under the act that we are amending. The only change is that instead of the board determining whether or not there is substantial competition it shall determine whether or not it would be incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is the distinction.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I understand he can not do it unless he gets a permit from the Federal Reserve Board under this bill.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is correct. The Federal Reserve Board are in favor of this bill, just as they were in favor of branch bank legislation. I do not mean to be understood that there is anything improper influencing them, because I know there is not. What I mean is, judging from the attitude of the Federal Reserve Board, they see no reason why banking monopoly should not exist. The statements of the board to our committee appear to me to indicate this.

My time is nearly up, but I want to say a word more. There may come a time, the blessed period when the lion and the lamb lie down together, when we can have one credit source, when credit can be impartially sold by a monopoly. But the condition we must recognize now is that banking is a selfish business; that banking and business are closely linked in this country; that business men sit on bank boards who have their selfish private interests they want to preserve and conserve; that when a man comes to them for credit, and they know he wants to do something which will compete with them in their private business, he will not get credit unless they know he can go next door and get it anyhow. The big banks want the legislation proposed in this bill, but our question is whether the bill is in the public interest, the banks, of course, being included in a consideration of what is the public interest. As legislators, I do not see how we are concerned with what the banks or any other interest want, except in so far as that interest reflects the public interest. The banks are not creators of wealth but distributors of credit for profit, and from our standpoint should be treated as public-service institutions. The sole question for our consideration is whether or not interlocking directorates for banks are in the public interest.

I tell you, my friends, unless we stop this thing somewhere it will simply broaden itself. The banks will interlock under this provision, and in a year or two we will be confronted with another bill. We will be told this right has not been abused; that men have been allowed to sit on three boards of directors, and no complaint has been heard, so why not make it 5, why not make it 10? Why not open the doors and let them interlock? This is the inevitable course. There is no public reason whatever why this proposed legislation should pass and no reason at all why the Kern amendment should ever have been put in the law. My motion to recommit, if carried, will wipe out the Kern amendment and reestablish the terms of the Clayton Antitrust Act. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] has yielded five minutes of his time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maryland puts it mildly when he says we are creating another milepost here. We are actually letting down the bars. I want to call the attention of the membership to the fact that you are not only opening the doors for one director to serve on the boards of two other banks, but that applies to every director on the board. A bank having 15 directors can interlock with 30 banks; 30 banks having 15 directors each would mean 450 directors who could form a combination of 1,250 banks and control the banking of a whole section of the country.

Now, what is the purpose of an interlocking directorate? All these illustrations as to an outstanding man in a community is beyond the question. A bank that depends for its existence on one outstanding man is not worth saving, because he may become sick, he may die, or something may happen to him, and according to the argument presented here that would be the end of the bank.

Imagine, gentlemen, what would happen if the amendment before you were intended to permit interlocking directorates of packing houses or was intended to permit the directors of one packing house to be on the boards of two other packing houses. There would not be one vote on the floor of this House for it.

Yet, this bill affects industry and commerce in every one of its ramifications.

It is possible under this bill to so interlock your directorates in any given section of the country as to obtain absolute control of commerce and industry. Let me give you an illustration. Suppose one bank underwrites the bonds of any factory for the manufacture of any given commodity, or the directors of the bank are personally interested in the factory. It can decide, by having representation on the boards of other banks, not to extend credit to any other company or individual desiring to engage or actually engaged in that same branch of industry. An application is made for a loan to extend or expand its business. It is turned down because it is in conflict with some factory or business that this group of banks is seeking to protect. Through the interlocking directors an absolute control and monopoly of credit is created.

Why, gentlemen, you not only give authority here as to the directors of a bank but you give authority for employees of a bank to become directors of other banks. Any employee of a bank may be sent as the representative of that bank to sit on the board of another bank, so that an applicant for credit is absolutely at the mercy of a group of banks interlocked in this fashion.

After all a bank is no different whatever from any other business. Instead of selling meat, grain, or hardware a bank sells the use of money, and our commerce and industry are based upon credit. The power to refuse credit is the power to destroy under our industrial and commercial system. Put into the hands of any group of banks the power to control credit and you are putting into their hands the power to control business and industry, and you can not get away from it.

Now, gentlemen, when we had before us the branch banking law it was stated by the committee that all they wanted were the branches. Give them the branches and everything would be all right. But that is followed up now with this bill, and I repeat, it gives this power, authority, and right not only as to the directors of banks but as to the employees. I would like to hear the chairman or any other member of the committee say it would not apply to employees.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. If the gentleman will look at the Kern amendment, he will see that we are not changing it, because it specifically gives the right as to employees just the same as to directors. The very thing the gentleman is complaining about is in the law to-day exactly as we are proposing here.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But two evils do not make a right.

Mr. STEVENSON. But we are not changing that or adding to it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The motion to recommit will seek to strike out the Kern amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That would be a good idea, too.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have seven minutes remaining. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert the amendment that was suggested a while ago, merely giving the title and chapter of the United States Code which we are amending, so that may be designated.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEVENSON: Amend the bill by adding at the end of line 5, page 1, the words "found in title 15, chapter 1, section 19, United States Code."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to talk on this bill, but we have reported it and there have been a good many very extreme views expressed without proper limitation.

In the first place, let us see what the law is—the Clayton Antitrust Act.

The law is, first, that no man shall be a director of two $5,000,000 banks anywhere. This was the law as it was first drawn.

Second, that no man shall be a director of more than one bank in a town of 200,000 inhabitants or more. This was in the original act, modified so that a man could be a director in two banks in a town of 200,000 inhabitants or two banks of $5,000,000 of assets or more, provided all the stock of one bank was owned by the stockholders of the other bank.

This was the law as it stood before the Kern amendment. Senator Kern, who was a great Democrat from Indiana, came along and conceived that this worked a hardship—and it did in certain instances—and he asked that the law be amended, and that amendment, which is written in here, provided that a director or employee of one bank could be a director of two additional banks provided the banks were not in substantial competition with each other and provided the Federal Reserve Board granted him a permit to occupy such an interlocking directorship.

This is the law as it is to-day with respect to an employee or director in one bank of these classes—either $5,000,000 of assets or in a town of 200,000 inhabitants or more—and everybody below these classes is exempt from any of this legislation. This is the law to-day.

The Federal Reserve Board finds great difficulty in determining what banks are in substantial competition, and it is a matter of their judgment, and they have to determine it as a matter of judgment now. For instance, here are two banks that are running in one of these cities of 200,000 inhabitants or more and apparently are not in competition now. They grant such a permit and in six months conditions change so that they do come in competition, and then the question arises of making one of these men get off, and they have trouble with all that sort of thing.

This being the case, the sole proposition here is to change that arrangement, and instead of saying "substantial competition" say that the interlocking directorate shall not be incompatible with the public interest, which commits it again to the judgment of the Federal Reserve Board, but it will make it very much easier of administration, so the board thinks.

So far as I am concerned, I am very much in sympathy with the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], that the Kern amendment ought never to have been adopted; but it has been and it is here, and you have interlocking directorates among the directors and employees, about which the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] complains, and the question is how to regulate it so that it can be administered in a sensible and a practical way, so that the purpose and the intent of the legislation shall be carried out.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. May I ask the gentleman how he feels about the motion to recommit?

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, I feel this way about it: If I had been here when the Kern amendment was adopted, I think I would have voted against it; and the gentleman's motion to recommit is merely to strike out the Kern amendment instead of modifying it as we do here.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of privilege.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order that the bill is not properly before the House in that the committee reporting the same did not have jurisdiction. This bill clearly relates to the "civil or criminal law" and under paragraph 4 of Rule XI belongs to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Now, it may be suggested that the point of order comes too late, and I desire to call the Speaker's attention to the precedents, which are numerous, in Volume IV of Hinds' Precedents, where points of order were made in the House after bills had been considered in the Committee of the Whole. This being so, the consideration and the discussion of the bill up to this point may be compared with the discussion and debate of a bill in the Committee of the Whole. Therefore, I believe, although I admit it is doubtful, that it may be proper now to raise the question of jurisdiction; and if that point be sustained, it is fatal. All through the precedents there are instances where if a committee took up a bill not within its jurisdiction, it could not report the bill, and the point having been raised heretofore after a bill had been considered in the Committee of the Whole, I now press my point of order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York cite the Chair to any case where a point of order was raised and held good after a bill was reported, except in the case of an appropriation carried in a bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; many private bills.

The SPEAKER. Private bills; yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That may be so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair recalls when this bill was before him for reference that he examined into the matter and it was quite clear that the reference was correct, in view of the fact this is an amendment of the Federal reserve act, and under the rules the Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction of questions arising under the Federal reserve act; but whether that be true or not, the point of order is evidently made too late. The precedents are uniform that after a public bill has been reported, it is too late to raise the point of order as to the jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I may say in answer to the proposal of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] to offer a motion to recommit, that he is proposing by this motion, according to his own statement, to repeal the entire Kern amendment, which, if it passes or is voted favorably upon, would mean that no interlocking directorates of any nature whatsoever would be permitted under the law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman does not mean to say that the mere motion to recommit would repeal an existing statute. It would simply recommit this bill back to the committee.

Mr. McFADDEN. With the final, avowed purpose of repealing all of the Kern amendment of the Clayton Act.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to report the bill back to the House forthwith with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the language after the enacting clause and insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following language: "That the last proviso of the second paragraph of section 8 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, as amended, is hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing in this act shall effect relations already in existence."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the point of order on the motion to recommit if the gentleman wishes; and if not, I make it.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania state the grounds of his point of order?

Mr. McFADDEN. That it is not germane to the subject matter under consideration; that it repeals other provisions to the Kern amendment of the Clayton Act.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state just what the effect will be if the motion to recommit is adopted

Mr. McFADDEN. It wipes out all of the interlocking directorate provisions of the Clayton Act, and they are not in this bill at all.

Mr. RAMSEYER. You are seeking to amend the second paragraph of section 8, and what the gentleman from Maryland is trying to do is to repeal it.

Mr. McFADDEN. It is proposing to repeal more than we are amending.

Mr. RAMSEYER. But it is germane.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the bill we have before us undertakes to rewrite the last proviso of the paragraph referred to, and the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from Maryland is simply to repeal that particular proviso, and I submit it would be germane to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not tell, with the information he has before him, whether the motion to recommit would repeal any other provisions except the one that it is sought to amend in the bill.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I submit that the language of the motion to recommit is very clear; it proposes to repeal the proviso.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania agree that the motion to recommit only refers to the repeal of the provision which the bill seeks to amend?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion to recommit is germane.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland to recommit the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH) there were 39 ayes and 78 noes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty Members present, not a quorum. The question is on the motion to recommit. All those in favor will answer "yea," and all those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 141, nays 192, present 1, not voting 99, as follows:

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. McFADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FEDERAL RESERVE RETIREMENT FUND

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4) to incorporate the Federal reserve retirement fund, to define its functions, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. GREEN, will kindly take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4, with Mr. GREEN of Iowa in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to incorporate the Federal reserve retirement fund, the purpose of which is to enable the Federal reserve banks and their employees and the employees of the Federal Reserve Board to combine in the operation of a plan under which retirement allowances and other forms of benefit will be provided for those who, by reason of long and meritorious service or by old age or disability, shall become entitled to such benefits. The bill provides for the establishment of a separate corporation, the trustees of which shall be elected one each by the 12 Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board, and one each by the employees of the 12 banks and the Federal Reserve Board. This bill was introduced at the instance of the Federal Reserve Board and the proposed plan has been approved unanimously by the boards of directors of each of the Federal reserve banks.

The purposes of the Federal reserve system in establishing a retirement plan may be briefly stated as follows, none of which, it will be noted, is in any sense philanthropic:

(a) To attract and hold the most desirable class of personnel.

(b) To improve the morale of the staff through providing, so far as it is feasible, a feeling of security with respect to the future and of confidence against the great unpreventable hazards of life.

(c) To provide a means whereby the banks may fulfill their duty to their employees and to society in general upon a uniform basis through a retirement plan for superannuated employees.

(d) To accomplish these objects with the greatest possible efficiency and the minimum of expense, through the establishment of a plan under which the employees themselves will contribute one-half of the amount necessary to support it.

In asking authority to create a corporation for this purpose the Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board are seeking to provide a means for the orderly retirement of those of their employees who will in the course of time no longer be able to render a satisfactory service. The need for retirement plans of this sort has become generally recognized in industry. Many of the larger banks of the country, large numbers of industrial corporations, and practically all the large railroads have already adopted such plans. In many instances the cost of these retirement plans is borne entirely by the employer. This is notably the case with the railroad plans, where in practically every case the total cost is borne by the railroad.

The Federal Government itself has recognized the importance of providing some means for the retirement of superannuated employees, and some years ago established the civil-service retirement fund and has more recently established the Foreign-Service retirement fund, both of which plans are designed to provide retirement allowances which in the average case would represent a larger percentage of the salary than that contemplated under the plan of the Federal reserve banks.

The civil service and Foreign Service retirement fund is based on 2 per cent of average salary; the Federal reserve fund, upon 1½ per cent.

The passage of this bill and the establishment of this corporation requires no appropriation from the Federal Government, as the entire cost of providing the retirement allowances and of administration is to be borne by the 12 Federal reserve banks and the employees.

The bill as amended and recommended includes all necessary safeguards to protect both the banks and their employees. It includes, for instance, the following provisions:

First. That the approval in writing of the Federal Reserve Board is required before the plan of operation can go into effect.

Second. That the total amounts contributed by the Federal reserve banks and the board shall not exceed the total contributions made by the employees themselves.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Under this plan, how much is it contemplated to be contributed from the earnings of the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. McFADDEN. Whatever the cost of the plan is, of course, will come out of the earnings of the Federal reserve.

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, that is indirectly paid by the member banks.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; but I think in that connection you must recognize the fact that a plan of this kind makes for greater efficiency in the operation of the system by permitting the retirement of inefficient employees, taking them off the pay roll, and putting in men who are capable.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman is very familiar with the Federal reserve act and all of the amendments that have been made to it. If this legislation is enacted, will that permit the several Federal reserve banks to contribute such an amount as they may see fit to this retirement fund, or is it limited in any way?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is limited under the terms of the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. This bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. The plan will have a limitation upon it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is it limited in this bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. This bill authorizes the creation of the plan. All of the details are not entirely set forth in the bill. This bill is the authority to the board to establish this system.

Mr. HASTINGS. But if this bill is enacted, how much does it permit the members of the Federal Reserve Board to contribute to the retirement fund?

Mr. McFADDEN. The actuaries of the Federal reserve system have gone very carefully into the system. A very complete study has been made. There have been called into these various conferences over the period of the past two years, during the consideration that has been given to it, some of the best actuaries in the country. The actuaries of some of the large insurance companies, and of the various retirement plans in industries, have all been consulted, and the Federal reserve people, in the consideration which it has given to this plan, have had the cooperation of all known proper sources in working this out, and they believe that they are working out a superior plan to any plan which has up to this time been put into operation. The actuaries have computed the normal cost to the banks of the original plan as being 3½ or 3¾ per cent of the pay roll. As of June 30 last the pay roll, subject to contributions, amounted to $15,350,000. Three and three-quarters per cent of that amount would be $575,625.

Mr. HASTINGS. So that that would be the amount that you would permit the Federal reserve banks to contribute to this fund?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes. The normal cost, therefore, on the basis of the present number of employees, would not exceed $600,000 per annum from the banks and, of course, a like amount from the employees.

Now, you must consider in connection with that the fact that you are improving the service. By this plan of retirement of inefficient employees you are probably not putting any burden upon the system at all. It is a very humane thing to do. It might result that by improvement in personnel that the pay rolls would not be as high by reducing inefficient employees.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Is it the intention of the committee to offer any other amendments than those indicated in the bill itself?

Mr. McFADDEN. Not so far as I know. There are no others recommended by the committee. No retirement allowance shall be paid out of the amounts contributed by the reserve banks and the board at a rate in excess of 30 per cent of the average annual salary received by an employee during the last 10 years of service.

In making contributions or in the computation of benefits to be derived that part of any salary in excess of $15,000 shall be disregarded.

In other words, the men in the employ of the Federal reserve system who are receiving salaries in excess of $15,000 will not be retired on the basis of that salary but on the basis of $15,000.

It is also provided that no member of the Federal Reserve Board or a trustee of the corporation as such shall be eligible to receive any benefits from the corporation.

That the amounts contributed by any employee whose employment terminates prior to retirement shall be returned to him with interest.

The Federal Reserve Board and the reserve banks are to be commended for undertaking to deal with this problem thus early in their existence and while the burden of providing for the accrued liabilities may still be met on an equitable basis.

There is a very important thing in connection with the consideration of this measure. Here is an institution which was started in 1914, and it is a type of institution which requires the highest grade of service. The best knowledge that can be obtained and can be applied to finance should be in this system. You have to pay good salaries to get proper men. It has been stated to our committee in connection with that work that if the men who are devoting their lives to the study and work of the Federal reserve system can feel that when they become incapacitated there is a provision made for them in their old age similar to that provided for in industry, they will stay with the Federal reserve system in place of going into some other vocation at the same salary.

The bill is favorably reported by the committee, and I hope it will pass with the amendments as recommended by the committee. I believe it is a very meritorious thing to do, and if it is done now it will save a good deal of money which would have to be paid if this retirement plan is not put in operation now, but comes along later because of the constantly accruing liability.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Have the employees of these banking institutions by any association or representation told the committee that they are in favor of this legislation?

Mr. McFADDEN. It has been represented to us, yes, that they are in favor of the legislation.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. I did not hear the gentleman's remarks, but I understand that they are considering a retirement bill now before the Committee on the Civil Service. Is there any great difference in the amount of money these people have to pay and the amount they receive? Is there any unusual method of computation as to what the retirement pension shall be as compared with that of our Federal employees?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman, in answer to that, that the average salary for the Federal reserve employees is about $1,600 per annum. The average salary for civil-service employees for 1928 is $1,886 per annum. To-day there are 46,481 such employees. I get those figures from the Budget statement No. 31. The average civil-service salary for 1929 is $1,897 for 46,738 Federal employees. In the Federal reserve system there are slightly over 10,000 employees, and the average salary as a basis is $1,600, which, it is plain to be seen, is $297 less than the salaries which the 46,738 employees of the Government receive.

Mr. CROWTHER. What I want to know is what is the ratio or proportion of the subscription of the individual? What percentage do they prescribe? Is that on an even ratio with that paid in by the Government employees?

Mr. McFADDEN. Two per cent is the Federal rule, as I recall it, and 1½ per cent is the basis of this. This plan is less than that under the Federal plan.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I was somewhat familiar with the provisions of the bill dealing with this subject a year or so ago. I have not had the time to compare the language of this bill with the language of the bill introduced at the last session. Is the language of this bill, with the exception of the amendments now proposed, the same as the other bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. Some changes have been made. The bill that was considered by the committee when the gentleman from North Dakota was a member of it provided an optional plan for all the member banks of the Federal reserve system. One or two other features have been added; one as to the location of the domicile or home office. It is fixed here as Washington. It was not fixed in the old bill.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. You want to fix a limitation as the basis for the retired pay?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes. The bill the gentleman referred to provided for $18,000 as the maximum. Our bill fixes it at $15,000. Some people have raised the question that some of the salaries in the Federal reserve system are too large. One instance was called to my attention—that of the former chairman of the board of the Federal reserve bank at Cleveland, Ohio. His salary was $24,000 or $25,000 a year. He had drawn that salary for a number of years, less than 10, however, and he died. Now, a man in the same position under this bill would have drawn under the retirement fund not to exceed $2,500 on the salary per annum that he was drawing from the Federal Reserve Board of $25,000. The largest amount that could be drawn under this plan would be the sum of $9,000 a year, and that would require that the man must have been in continuous service for practically 40 years at a time, and his retirement would be based on the average salary paid him.

Mr. THURSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. THURSTON. Have the employees of the Federal reserve system ever made application to be placed under civil-service rules?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; they could not do that.

Mr. THURSTON. Has there ever been any legislation proposed along that line?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think so.

Mr. THURSTON. Would there be any good reason why they should not be covered into the civil service, the same as employees of other branches of the Government?

Mr. McFADDEN. I suppose Congress could enact such a law as that if it saw fit to do so.

Mr. MacGREGOR. But national banks are private corporations, not public corporations.

Mr. THURSTON. But they have a Federal status.

Mr. MacGREGOR. No; they have not.

Mr. McFADDEN. I believe it is much better to give them authority to establish their own plan than it would be to tie it up with the National Government. If that were done, I fear complications would enter into it which might be extremely embarrassing to the Government.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. HUDSON. The contributions by the corporations in establishing this retirement fund in no sense become any obligation upon the Government?

Mr. McFADDEN. They do not. The only possible connection is that provision in the Federal reserve act which provides for the payment of a franchise tax, and under the plan adopted any earnings over a certain amount automatically go back into the Public Treasury, to be applied in certain particular ways, in the refunding of the public debt, and so forth, as provided in the present law.

Mr. HUDSON. I have just appeared before the Committee on the Civil Service, and I did not hear the gentleman's statement in the beginning. Why is it necessary to come here for this authority to organize a retirement system if the Government has no part in it?

Mr. McFADDEN. I said in my remarks that the board feels it has the authority, but rather than raise any question about it, which might later on disrupt their plans, they have very frankly come to Congress and asked for definite, legal authority to establish this plan. I think myself they have a perfect right to go ahead and establish a retirement plan, but this gives them a legal entity, and it is quite proper.

Mr. HUDSON. If this is done, will not the employees of the Government say Congress is establishing another system of retirement?

Mr. McFADDEN. Well, we are not establishing the system; we are giving legal authority to the Federal reserve system, which was created by the Congress.

Mr. HUDSON. And this bill will be more generous than the present retirement laws of Congress, and perhaps create dissatisfaction.

Mr. McFADDEN. I could not say as to that, but the present Federal plan provides for 2 per cent, while this plan is based on 1½ per cent of the salaries paid.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am not quite sure I understand some of the provisions of this measure. For instance, I am not sure as to just what percentage you propose for the Government to pay. Does not the Government or the Federal reserve system pay any part of it?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; it pays half of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then that is really the people's money, is it not?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; it is not. I seriously question. I will say to the gentleman, whether this is going to cost the Federal reserve system anything. I think they are going to gain in efficiency everything that might be paid out in money under the retirement plan. I think they are going to get it back in better service, by a better grading of employees, by having more efficient men, and by being able to retire men who are incapacitated, who otherwise would be kept on the pay roll out of sympathy.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman mean to convey the idea that if this bill is passed it is not going to cost the Government anything?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think it is going to cost the Government anything. The only possibility of it costing the Government anything is through the returns received from the franchise tax and the issuance of Federal reserve notes in excess of that necessary to keep the service going and paying the operating expenses of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As I understand the provisions of this measure, you propose to pension even those receiving salaries of $15,000 to $50,000 per year. Does the gentleman contend that a man whose maximum salary was $6,500 in private life, but promoted to a $25,000 job, as in case of one instance cited by the gentleman from Texas, should be placed on a $9,000 per year on retiring? Is that good, sound business?

Mr. McFADDEN. Well, $15,000 is the maximum. A man who receives a salary of $50,000 can only be retired on the basis of $15,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. And I understand the gentleman to state that under this bill a person would have to be in the service for 40 years in order to get the maximum.

Mr. McFADDEN. To draw the maximum; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Does not the gentleman think, in all candor, that if a person who has been in the service on the measly little salary of $15,000 to $50,000 a year for 40 years and drawing in all the enormous sum of $600,000 and who can not lay a little bit away for a rainy day is an exceedingly poor business man?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman says he has been drawing $600,000 a year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Six hundred thousand dollars in the 40 years.

Mr. McFADDEN. But he contributes 50 per cent to the fund which is to be created himself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I understand that; but does not the gentleman think the reason for measures of this kind is to help the needy? Is that not the primary purpose of pensions?

Mr. McFADDEN. I think the banks themselves will improve their own situation by having a more competent class of assistants if they have a retirement plan than by keeping on men who are inefficient.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. But this bill will pension a man $9,000 a year who has drawn in 40 years $600,000 in salary. We are going wild on this pension business. Is there never going to be a stop? I am informed that during the past year there was an increase of pensions from $207,844,348.29 to the enormous sum of $230,152,712.17, an increase of about $23,000,000 in one year. Is not the Congress ever going to call a halt?

Mr. McFADDEN. Half of which has been contributed to the fund by himself.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. LUCE. Permit me to call the attention of the gentleman making the interrogatory to the fact his illustration assumes this man has started in at $15,000 a year, when he was 25 years old, and may I ask the gentleman if he ever knew of any officer of a Federal reserve bank who began getting $15,000 a year when he was 25 years old?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; I do not, and have not assumed that to be true, but that illustration was made by the gentleman. But I again insist that only the needy have any justification for being pensioned. And may I add just here, many of us have in our districts aged dependent men who have taken part in Indian wars or rendered unusual service to this Government who are deserving and yet because of the fact of some little technicality they are unable to get a dime from the Government? The purpose of this bill is not to help the needy, but to pay a chap who is pulling down a good salary. It is another subsidy, and I see no merit in it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. All the employees of a bank do not draw $15,000 a year in salary. The greater percentage of them draw around $1,400 and $1,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I understand they all do not draw such large salaries, and I am more than willing to aid the clerks on small salaries, but I suggest they be placed under civil service, as other Government employees.

Mr. McFADDEN. And I have just stated that the average salary throughout the entire Federal reserve system is $1,600 a year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am absolutely in favor of helping the needy, but I do not believe we ought to set the precedent of pensioning men who draw as high a salary as $15,000 a year.

Mr. McFADDEN. I would like to call the gentleman's attention in this connection to the fact that in the Federal reserve system, as I have already stated, a very high type of employee is necessary. We have got to recognize the fact that we need in this system the best financially minded men that are available. The Federal reserve system is experiencing great difficulty now in the turnover of its employees, the men drawing large salaries, because industrial concerns and other large banking institutions are drawing from them men whose services should be retained in the Federal reserve system. It has been pointed out to our committee by the management of the system that a plan of this kind put into operation would keep in the system many men who should be kept there, who are devoting their lives to making a special study of the intricate problems involved in the proper management of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does not the Federal Government indirectly make a contribution? I notice the bill exempts the business activities of this corporation from not only certain lines of Federal taxation, but even so far as local taxation is concerned.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is not suggesting that we tax the funds of employees drawing an average salary of $1,600 a year that are used for the purpose of establishing a retirement fund.

Mr. SCHAFER. I am simply suggesting that if we are going to give a Federal subsidy, we should relieve every other organization of employees in industry from various lines of taxation. The gentleman is picking out one class of employees in banking institutions and allowing their retirement fund to be used in business and exempting it from taxation while there are millions of other employees that do not have that privilege.

Mr. MacGREGOR. If the gentleman will permit, it is news to me that we tax any eleemosynary corporation or any charitable organization.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I call the gentleman's attention to a provision which appeared in the bill introduced at the last session of Congress, which reads as follows:

Shall provide pensions or other forms of support for persons who may be or who may have been dependent upon such officers or employees.

This seems to have been eliminated in the present draft of the bill; is that correct?

Mr. McFADDEN. I think it is; although I do not know that I got clearly just what the gentleman read.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The provision I want to call the gentleman's attention to is a provision that appeared in section 1 of the bill of last year.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman if he will look at the bill before him he will see that the parts that have been changed in the bill are crossed out and the insertions appear in italics. Perhaps that will answer the question of the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. It would seem to me that the text of the bill as introduced has been changed.

Mr. McFADDEN. It has been slightly changed, I will say to the gentleman; yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. What I was trying to get at is this: I have not found out whether you carry in the bill the language providing pensions or other forms of support for persons who may be or who may have been dependent upon such officers or employees. That is not in the bill as written now, is it?

Mr. McFADDEN. This is taken care of in the detailed plans which have been all worked out.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized for one hour in opposition to the bill, and I ask the Chair to notify me when I have used 10 minutes. I expect to yield some time to other Members who desire to speak against this bill.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, I recall that a few years ago we had an appropriation bill up in the House, and an amendment was offered to the bill to increase the salaries of some lower-paid employees of the Library of Congress. The gentleman from New York, Mr. Stengle, offered the amendment and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] took the floor in support of it. I recall that in his very able speech made in advocacy of the amendment he referred to the increases that had been given to the higher-paid employees and the smaller increases that had been given to the lower-paid employees. He said it reminded him of the verse in Scripture, and then he started in to quote the familiar verse which says:

For unto him that hath shall be given, and from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

For the moment he forgot the quotation, and I remember that he went right ahead and stated it in this way, "For them that have shall get from them that have not." [Laughter.] But after all, he did not miss the meaning of the verse very far. I am opposed to this bill to create a corporation to set up a Federal reserve retirement fund for pretty much the same reason embodied in the verse of Scripture quoted by my friend MURPHY. The bill proposes to incorporate the governors of the 12 Federal reserve banks, and also the members of the Federal Reserve Board into a corporation for the following purposes, which are enumerated in the bill.

These purposes are contained in the following language:

The benefits provided by the corporation may be in the form of annuities, disability, payments, life insurance, or other forms which from time to time shall seem expedient to the said corporation.

Now, we might as well understand that if we pass this bill, we are conferring large powers upon this corporation which it is proposed to create. Let no Member misunderstand that this act confers a very broad authority.

A bill similar in character, or I should say, in text, to this bill was favorably reported by the majority of the Banking and Currency Committee at the last session of Congress. The minority of the committee, including myself, filed minority views against the bill. I want to read for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole one clause from that minority report, because I intend to offer an amendment when the bill is taken up for consideration, adhering to the recommendations which were made in these minority views:

The minority believes that if a pension system is to be established for the officers and employees of the Federal reserve system at least the broad outlines of the plan should appear in the bill. One of these safeguards should be that for the purpose of making contributions and receiving annuities all basic salaries in excess of $10,000 per annum should be counted as $10,000. This provision is a part of the Foreign Service retirement act, passed by Congress several years ago, except that the maximum basic salary for contributions and payment of annuities under the terms of that act is $9,000. Some of the officials of the Federal reserve banks receive as high as $50,000 per annum, and surely Congress would not want to authorize a pension system which would permit payment of a pension based on such a high salary as $50,000 per annum. Yet the bill as now drawn would permit just such a thing.

Now, I will say in frankness that the committee at this session of Congress did agree upon an amendment which is to be offered to the bill providing that for the purpose of making contributions and payment of annuities and other benefits under the act all basic salaries in excess of $15,000 shall be counted as $15,000. That is, of course, an improvement over the bill as it was reported by a majority of the committee at the last session of Congress.

But I think if the bill is passed at all even that limitation does not go far enough. If Congress had under consideration a retirement bill for the civilian employees of the Government, would any Member be willing to go beyond a limitation of $10,000? I dare say not.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will.

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman will concede that we are now dealing with an institution that is obliged to compete with private institutions of a similar nature who command the services of the most expert men within their power to secure and that there are instances where we have to pay more money than we would for the ordinary Government employee. Granting that the gentleman realizes the tremendous pressure under which men are put after they become expert in the Federal reserve employ to accept positions of competing institutions and banks at a much larger salary than they have been getting in the reserve system, if they stay with the Federal reserve system they make a sacrifice of the surplus money they might have gotten otherwise. Does not the gentleman think that we ought to offer some compensation to these men who are of equal ability and caliber in the private institutions?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If I agree to the premises of the gentleman from Maine as laid down, I might agree to his conclusions. But I do not agree to his premises. I have given a good deal of study to the expenses of the Federal reserve banks, including their salary lists.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. No; let me conclude, and then the gentleman can make another statement and ask another question. I will be glad to yield to him. I undertake to say that the salary list of the Federal reserve banks is as high as that in comparable national and State banks, and in many cases it is much higher. Take my own State of Texas. The governor of the Federal reserve bank at Dallas, Tex., receives a salary of $25,000 a year, I believe. I undertake to say that is a good deal more than he would be paid by national or State banks in Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. What did that gentleman receive before he went to this bank?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I undertake to say that never at any time did he draw one-half of that amount.

Mr. RAYBURN. Or one-third of that amount.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman know what he did draw?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. No. I have only information as to what he now draws as governor of the Federal reserve bank at Dallas, Tex.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish the gentleman would get the exact salary and put it into the RECORD.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I shall get that if I can. I do not admit the premise of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY]. I do not admit that the employees and the officers of the Federal reserve banks are underpaid in any sense, as compared with the pay which employees of other banks receive.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. I did not intend to argue this question at all, but if the gentleman will investigate the record he will find that this gentleman drew $6,500 from the City National Bank at Dallas.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am glad to have that information. I did not want to make an inaccurate statement, and I am glad that my colleague can supply us with correct information on that point. The argument of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] is one of the familiar arguments. Proponents of this measure came before our committee and argued that the employees of the Federal reserve banks are underpaid as compared to the employees in private banks. I do not admit that. Furthermore, I affirm that an investigation will show that the contrary is true.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. Getting back to the point of the limitation on the salary on which they can draw an annuity, the gentleman will remember that in the Federal employees' law which we have now some salaries of Government employees run as high as $6,500, from which 3½ per cent is deducted for the retirement fund, and the highest amount anyone can draw is $1,500.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes; I recall that limitation; and before being interrupted—and, of course, I take no exception at all to the interruptions; I am glad to yield to Members—I was about to say that if Congress itself were enacting a retirement act for the civilian employees of the Federal Government, including even members of the Cabinet, if they were to be included, I dare say that we would not consider any maximum beyond $10,000. If we would not do it for employees in the Federal Government, why should we permit it to be done for the officers of the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CANFIELD. As I understand it, the gentleman from Texas is objecting to the $15,000 maximum?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am opposed to the whole bill, but I think it ought to be amended, if it is passed at all, providing that the maximum salary for the purpose of computing annuities shall not be greater than $10,000.

Mr. CANFIELD. Does the gentleman intend to offer such an amendment?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes; I will offer an amendment of that kind if we do not kill the bill before we reach that stage of the proceedings.

Mr. CANFIELD. I hope that he will make that amendment $10,000, because, with $10,000 I think the bill should be passed.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I hope the gentleman will support my amendment, if the bill reaches the amendment stage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman give us a chance to vote against the bill entirely?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. We will certainly have that opportunity. I will see to that.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not take any more time of the committee because I want to yield some time to some other Members who are opposed to the bill. I hope that when we reach this bill under the five-minute rule that we will adopt a limitation such as I have suggested, and I hope that when we come to vote on the bill on final passage that we will be able to kill the whole bill.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. Just to say that the statement I made I did not make inadvisedly. I knew that the matter had been gone over and brought to my attention. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] will, I believe, prove to the satisfaction of the gentleman from Texas that the salaries paid to the Federal reserve bank officials do not range as high as those paid in private banks.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. It may be that he will be able to establish a state of facts of that kind.

Mr. BEEDY. The statistics show it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If he is able to do so, I shall be very much surprised.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. The Federal reserve system employs a little more than 10,000 persons. Of these 265 are classified as officers, and their average salary is $9,130 a year. I could not, of course, submit the salaries paid by the national banks and trust companies in New York, Boston, and the other Federal reserve cities, but I am quite confident that the salaries paid to officers of financial institutions approaching the same magnitude, such as the National City Bank, would be found to average in excess, distinctly in excess, of the $9,130 average of the Federal reserve banks.

Let me call attention also to the fact that about 9,800 employees are receiving on the average $1,409 a year, which is almost exactly $27 a week. The pending measure proposes to make it possible for the Federal reserve system, when the time arrives, to release aged employees and to pay them an amount which will keep them from destitution and from suffering during the rest of their lives.

Yesterday there was discussion of this matter of retirement before a committee of the House, and judging by the report in this morning's papers there seems to me to be occasion for a moment of consideration of the purpose of a retirement system. There is a danger now manifest that some of the beneficiaries of such a system may think it was designed to keep them in ease and comfort the rest of their lives. On the contrary, the purpose of it is to prevent a man or woman who has grown old in the service from suffering hardship and distress.

You may figure out for yourselves how much a man or woman earning $27 a week can lay up in these days against the needs of sickness and old age if left to individual thrift. The result of this situation—and I think it might almost with exactness be called a terrible situation in the world of employment—is that many States, municipalities, and the Nation itself, together with private employers have attempted to face the facts of the case by creating retirement systems. In the case of a private corporation such action may well be based in part upon the impulse of benevolence and a desire to make some additional return to the employee for the work he has done and the sacrifices he has made; but in the case of a public organization or one that is quasi public, like that here in question, the element of benevolence can not safely be permitted to enter. Whether you are considering the high-salaried men or the low-priced men, no account may properly be taken of benevolence.

We are not justified in benevolently giving the money of the people toward a Federal retirement system, nor would we be warranted in allowing this quasi-public institution to do anything of the sort. Charity must not move us. The instincts of the heart may not be appealed to. We must not consider sentiment, however much we might like so to do. This is purely an economic proposition, and the whole justification for a retirement board in the classified service and for the retirement board here proposed is to be found in the fact that it is bad business to retain in the employ of the Government or its agencies men who have outgrown their usefulness. It costs more to do that than it does to retire them under systems such as we contemplate here.

For that reason and that alone, because it is a matter of public economy, are these systems advanced, supported, and maintained. The argument for the pending proposal comes right down to this one question: Is it not better business for us to allow the Federal reserve banks to release those employees who are no longer capable of efficient service than to retain them on the pay roll?

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. BOYLAN. Surely the gentleman will not say the Government is paying sufficient salaries to these employees whereby they can accumulate anything? Does he want to discharge them after years of faithful service and let them go to the poorhouse and let them become outcasts on the highways and byways of our country?

Mr. LUCE. I should be greatly distressed if my words had warranted any such impression. What I tried to bring out was that the object of the retirement system is to prevent exactly that thing. The possibility that an aged employee might be exposed to that hardship is the precise reason why, without any retirement system, he is retained on the pay roll, which is an economic loss to the Government or its agency concerned. Therefore that he may not suffer hardship if he is released, these retirement systems have been devised. The theoretical justification in the case of the Government is that it is wiser to retire these men under a system like this than to retain them on the pay roll.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNING. Does not the gentleman then consider that the basic salary of $15,000 on which to base retirement is too high? Is that not remuneration instead of sustenance? Does not the gentleman think that ought to be reduced?

Mr. LUCE. I will address myself to that situation. A man getting a salary of $15,000 may under this system, if he has received that salary for 10 years, get $9,000 a year upon retirement. Under the doctrine of chances he will not have arrived at the $15,000 salary, except after years of service at a lower salary. Such is the pace of life in these days in the large cities that there are few men with the physique and stamina necessary to remain long in receipt of the high salaries. Many break down after but a few years of service and few reach a ripe old age. I am speaking of the fierce competition of life in the big centers.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSON. I am always greatly interested when the gentleman from Massachusetts addresses the House on pending legislation, and I have been much interested in his remarks to-day. Would the gentleman from Massachusetts be willing to favor legislation for the employees of the Government on the same basis as that which this legislation proposes—that they should receive on retirement an annuity based upon the salary they received when in active service?

Mr. LUCE. I should be glad, on general principles, to favor it, but I could not answer more definitely until I had devoted study to the details of whatever system might be proposed.

Mr. HUDSON. I think our present system is based on wrong principles. From the discussions so far I have not been able to find the reason why this legislation is brought before Congress, if these employees have no relation to the Government of the United States as employees of the Government.

Mr. LUCE. The Federal reserve system is in an anomalous position. It is not a private institution, neither is it a purely Federal institution. It might be called a quasi-public or semi-public institution. The profits of this system in excess of the requirements for the reserve fund and a 6 per cent dividend go into the Treasury of the United States Government, and the members of the Federal Reserve Board are appointed by the President.

Mr. HUDSON. Then indirectly it is true that the Government of the United States is interested in the deductions that will be made for this fund by the board itself.

Mr. LUCE. It is interested in the same way that applies in the case of the recapture clause of the railroad law.

Mr. HUDSON. In the very same way. The more investments the railroads make the less they have to return.

Mr. LUCE. But the fact remains that unless we give it this sanction the members of the Federal reserve system do not feel justified in issuing authority to create the system and are of the belief that the authority for it should come from the Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. This is to provide for a pension system?

Mr. LUCE. For a retirement system.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it usual for industrial concerns to pay one-half of the cost of pensions?

Mr. LUCE. It is not usual, but as I recall the figures about one-fifth, or possibly one-sixth, of the private concerns use the half-and-half plan.

Mr. MADDEN. What is it proposed to do here?

Mr. LUCE. Half and half.

Mr. MADDEN. Why should they become so liberal with other people's money when industry does not follow that practice?

Mr. HUDSON. Nor the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. It is always easy for somebody to give other people's money away. It is always easy for everybody but me. I do not take it very kindly.

Mr. LUCE. I thought I had made it clear in the opening of my remarks, which, perhaps, the gentleman did not hear, that there would be no justification for this plan if the gentleman's theory was correct. The 50 per cent to be contributed by those who in this instance we may call the employers, is to be required because of the belief that there will be a financial gain to the institution through doing that rather than by retaining on the pay roll inefficient men and women after they have become too old to give full service.

Mr. MADDEN. Who is going to pension the gentleman when he gets too old?

Mr. LUCE. I, perhaps, have had the opportunity, like the gentleman who addresses me, to make provision for old age, which neither he nor I could have made if through 40 years we had received but $27 a week.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I worked for a great deal less than that.

Mr. LUCE. Ah, but the gentleman from Illinois has also worked for a great deal more than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. LUCE. I can remember the days, if the gentleman will permit me, when I toiled from morn to night for 5 cents an hour.

Mr. MADDEN. That was a good day's pay.

Mr. LUCE. I have no doubt it was more than I earned. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. But there is one thing I tried to do, and that is what most people do not try to do and do not do. No matter how little I made, I spent less, so I always had something left.

Mr. LUCE. I have followed the gentleman's excellent example.

Mr. MADDEN. And we would not need any pension rolls if that practice had been followed by other people.

Mr. LUCE. That is very easy to say. I ask the gentleman whether with sickness, with accident, and with all the mischances of life he is certain that out of an income of $27 a week he could have maintained a home and laid aside a penny?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I did it when I was getting 50 cents a day; I did it when I got $50 a month, and I worked alongside of men who were getting $150 a month. They could not wait for pay day. The men who were getting $150 a month never had enough to carry them through to the next pay day, but it never made any difference to me whether pay day was one week hence, one month hence, or one year hence; I always had enough to live on until the next pay day out of whatever I earned, and which anybody can do.

Mr. LUCE. It is very fortunate, Mr. Chairman, that we have in society such examples of the value, importance, and results of thrift as the gentleman from Illinois presents.

Mr. MADDEN. And, by the way, everybody borrowed money from me. [Laughter.] They could not get along on their pay and they borrowed money from one who was getting one-third as much as they were.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSON. I was greatly indebted to the gentleman for his explanation a moment ago and I want to say I am in sympathy with the purpose of the legislation, but in the last section of this bill, does the committee attempt to create an estate that can not be changed or altered by any future legislation?

Mr. LUCE. The charter, so to speak?

Mr. HUDSON. No; the language is:

> No contract or individual right made or acquired shall thereby be divested or impaired.

Is this creating an estate for the employees that can not be taxed?

Mr. LUCE. I think that is, perhaps, a needless reiteration of the Constitution of the United States—no law shall be passed impairing the obligation of a contract.

Mr. HUDSON. What is the significance of it in this proposed act?

Mr. LUCE. I should have to examine the bill. Perhaps the gentleman from Maine, who has it before him, when he takes the floor will explain that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman seems deeply concerned about those drawing a salary of $27 a week. The gentleman forgets about the 23 district governors who receive $25,000 a year or more. Does the gentleman insist that these district governors and deputy governors ought to be pensioned when they now receive more than twice as much as the average salaries of the governors of the States of this Nation?

Mr. LUCE. Oh, the comparison is unfair, as the gentleman knows. He would not, on serious reflection, make it. He would rather compare their salaries with those of the great banking institutions that are competing for the services of these men. The gentleman also ignores what I so carefully tried to explain, that not more than $9,000 can be given; that of this amount one-half has been furnished by the man himself and is the return of his own money; and, furthermore, that the salaries he has in mind, in the ordinary course of affairs, will have been received but a few years. So that in all probability there will be few, if any, retirement allowances of more than $5,000 or $6,000 a year.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to make a speech on this matter, but I will endeavor to answer the question of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON].

The question of the gentleman from Michigan was addressed to the significance and effect of the language in section 6 on page 7, which reads:

> The Congress may alter, amend, or repeal this act, but no contract or individual right made or acquired shall thereby be divested or impaired.

My answer to the gentleman from Michigan is this: If this bill should become a law and were in operation for two years, certain contributions to the retirement fund having been made by employees in pursuance of the law, certain rights would thereby have accrued to the employees in question. However, the Congress is forever free to so modify existing law as to affect the future operations and terms of the proposed retirement act. It could not pass a law which would in any way affect the rights of the employees to the fund, which they had acquired under the provisions of the law as written for the two years in question.

Mr. HUDSON. If that is the explanation, I understand it, but if it means that these employees continuing in service must be retired on the annuity proposed to be enacted by this law, that is a different proposition.

Mr. BEEDY. Such a provision would be unconstitutional.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. HALE. That being a constitutional guaranty, what is the necessity of writing it in the bill?

Mr. BEEDY. Well, as my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] suggested it is perhaps a needless repetition of the constitutional guaranty.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in addressing you this afternoon on this proposed legislation I first want to call your attention to the fact that this bill, or a similar bill, was introduced during the last Congress, and that the first bill introduced in this Congress, which was modified by the committee, provided that the employees of all national banks of the Federal reserve system should be placed on this pension, you might say.

Section 5 of that bill provided:

> The corporation, subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, may provide retirement allowances and other forms of benefits for the employees of such banks or trust companies as now or hereafter may be member banks of a Federal reserve bank.

Where is this Congress going in the way of voting pensions or annuities even to those who are not employed by the Federal Government?

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman, I think, does not understand that the committee recommends the elision of that provision from the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Yes; I understand that. Certainly, I understand it, because they knew that this House would never pass that provision, and I do not think this House, if it is informed, or if it informs itself, will agree to this; and right here I want to refer to the gentleman's address about the charity part of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILLIAMS], who has the floor now, has been in the banking business practically all his business life.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Twenty-five years.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman has been president of several important banks, and may be still president of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. No; I resigned when I was elected to the Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman was the president of them when he was elected to Congress?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. I was.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman was president of one of the substantial banks in my district, located at Mineral Wells, Tex. I just want to show that the gentleman, when he speaks, is speaking with authority.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. I do not want to impose upon you, and I do not want to bore you, but before you cast a vote on this bill you should take the opportunity of informing yourself about it.

This is not a partisan matter, or it should not be, and I do not believe that the Members of this House want to make it a partisan matter.

Referring to the address of those who spoke about competition that you have with other banking institutions to secure men for employment in the Federal reserve banks—that is all bunk.

Do you want to pension men drawing the following salaries? Congress recognized the salaries commensurate with the ability and services of the men presiding over the Federal Reserve Board. Members of the Federal Reserve Board can only draw $12,000 a year. The mistake was that Congress did not name the salaries for employees of the 12 branch banks, but left that up to the directors of each bank, and to be approved by Federal Reserve Board.

Congress would never have permitted such extravagant salaries as are paid the employees of the 12 branches.

Now, the law names the salaries of the members of the board at $12,000 per annum, and under that clause, where the board has authority to approve the salaries of employees in branch banks, I want to call your attention to the unheard-of salaries they are paying not only chairmen of boards and governors but even minor officers.

Here are the figures furnished me by the secretary of the Federal Reserve Board:

The salary of the chairman of the board of nine branch banks is $20,000 per year; 2, $24,000; and 1, $50,000; 12 individuals drawing a total salary of $274,000, or an average of $22,833.

Governors of eight branch banks draw a salary each year of $25,000, 1 a salary of $22,500, 1 a salary of $30,000, 1 a salary of $35,000, and 1 a salary of $50,000; 12 individuals drawing a total salary of $337,500, an average of $28,125.

Twenty-three deputy governors, which is a position of secondary importance and also of limited responsibility, receive salaries as follows:

One deputy governor receives $40,000; 1, $36,000; 2 receive $30,000; 1 receives $25,000; 2 receive $20,000; 2 receive $18,000; 2 receive $17,500; 1 receives $16,000; 3 receive $15,000; 1 receives $14,000; 2 receive $13,000; 2 receive $12,500; and 3 receive $12,000.

Total received by 23 deputy governors, $434,000, an average received by each of $18,870.

Forty-seven individuals, 23 of them holding minor positions, receive $1,045,500, an average for each man of $22,265.

In addition the above cashiers and assistant cashiers are paid salaries out of all proportion, as shown by report from Federal Reserve Board.

Let us compare the above salaries with salaries of 25 most prominent positions, I believe you will agree with me, they are the most prominent in the Government: The President, Vice President, Speaker of the House of Representatives, members of the Cabinet, members of the Supreme Court, Comptroller General, and Director of the Budget, 25 individuals who receive a total salary of $406,000, or an average of $16,240 each, and this includes the salary of the President of the United States.

Yet there are men holding minor positions in Federal reserve bank, and several of them, who are receiving an average salary of $18,870, over $1,600 more each year than 25 of the most prominent positions in the Federal Government.

Tell me that you have got to compete with like institutions to secure these men. Is there any difficulty in securing men of that kind? You are not informed when you say that. No man who makes an assertion of that kind is informed.

Mr. BLANTON. And that will happen every time Congress gives up to outsiders its duty to fix salaries. You will find these outrageous $50,000 salaries paid. If Congress had not delegated its authority, you would not find a deputy governor under this act drawing $40,000 per year.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Please do not take my time. These are not WILLIAMS's figures, this is a record furnished me by the Federal Reserve Board.

But you say this is not the Government's money. It should be, and I will get to that in a minute.

In this bill when it was introduced it did not limit these fellows to $15,000. I approve of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said a while ago. He made a rule not to spend all of his wages, but to save a part of them.

The Federal reserve law makes every member bank invest 6 per cent of its capital stock in the stock of the Federal reserve bank. I am not jumping on the Federal reserve law. It makes every member bank put 7 per cent of their deposit in the Federal reserve bank, upon which they receive no interest. On the 25th day of last January we had in the 12 Federal reserve banks a deposit of $4,800,000,000 and over. If the law forces the member banks to contribute the capital and keep their money in them as deposits and receive no interest on the deposits, then in all decency should not those in authority in the reserve banks endeavor to make an income that would not only be able to take care of the expenses, but pay into the Treasury of the United States something in the way of franchise taxes? [Applause.]

I want to give you some figures on that. Understand that I am quoting no figures except those furnished me from the Federal Reserve Board's record.

Gross earnings of the 12 Federal reserve banks for 1927 amounted to $43,020,000, as compared with $47,600,000 in 1926, and current expense to $27,540,000, as compared with $27,350,000 in 1926. Net earnings for 1927 amounted to $13,050,000, as against $16,610,000 for 1926. The banks set aside from their earnings $2,440,000 as reserves to cover depreciation charges and reserves for losses on discounted paper, and so forth, and paid dividends to member banks amounting to $7,755,000.

The Federal Reserve Banks of Minneapolis and Kansas City paid a total of $249,591.17 into the Treasury of the United States as a franchise tax. All net earnings of the 10 other reserve banks remaining after the payment of dividends were transferred to their surplus accounts as required by law, the surplus accounts of none of these banks at the end of the year being in excess of their subscribed capital. The total subscribed capital of the 12 Federal reserve banks on January 1, 1928, amounted to $264,962,000 and total surplus to $233,319,000.

The Federal reserve banks in Minneapolis and Kansas City paid a total of $249,591.17 into the Treasury of this country as franchise taxes, and here 12 banks, with a capital of $264,962,000 and a surplus of $233,319,000, with a deposit of $4,803,000,000, which does not cost them a cent, paying no taxes and no rent, they can not make enough to pay a franchise tax to this Government. That is the outfit that is asking you to pass this bill—and I do not mean this in disrespect to the Federal Reserve Board. They can not be interested in it personally for the reason they are exempted from its provisions. But here are these men from these 12 banks who are drawing salaries entirely out of all proportion to those paid by like institutions, and they ask this Congress and the Members of this Congress to reach into the Treasury and pay them an annuity.

I was amused at the chairman of the committee. He was asked whether it would cost the Government anything, and he said "No." The report says that no appropriation by Congress is involved, and yet the bill provides that from the earnings of the Federal reserve banks 50 per cent of this shall be set aside to go into this fund to take care of the employees of that bank. It is the duty of the Federal reserve banks to conduct their business properly, and it is the duty of this Congress, whether we do it or not, to see that they do conduct it properly. You can not perform your duty by voting for a bill like this.

What about the history of the Federal reserve banks. They built buildings and spent money like drunk Indians, and any man who investigates the fact will agree with me. They will soon have a surplus of 100 per cent in all the 12 banks, and they have to get rid of this money without paying it into the Treasury. Only two paid last year. The others have nearly 100 per cent surplus. They now come in with this legislation which gives a board to be named by the beneficiaries of the bill unlimited power and authority in paying them money which should be paid into the Treasury of the United States as the law intended it should be.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BROWNING. The statement is made that the maximum retirement annuity of this would be $9,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. I call attention to this gross inconsistency. If we permit such a system as this to be enacted, why should we not do as much for the Federal employees? The Federal employees now have a maximum retirement of $1,000. That is paid to men who served 30 years and who have to become between 60 and 70 years old to draw it. The highest salaries paid are $6,500, and they pay 3½ per cent of that. We ought to make this conform to the law respecting Federal employees.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Yes; but these poor fellows who are drawing $30,000 a year have got to be taken care of. In all common decency let us be fair, not only fair to the employees of these banks, but fair to the people of this country. If you think it is proper to vote for this bill, which will pay men who have been drawing over $20,000 a year for years an annuity of $9,000, that is up to you and your conscience.

If you are going to be fair about it, why not limit the amount? The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] spoke of those poor fellows who are drawing $27 a week. That is a different proposition. The people of the country are crying for tax reduction, and we are all crying for a public-building program—as every one of you know, we have had no public-building program since 1913 until last Congress. All over this country they are clamoring for public buildings. Why not vote down this measure and let these Federal reserve banks pay their profits, as they should pay them, and as this Congress should make them do it, into the Treasury of the United States? An investigation will show whether they are operating in a sensible and economical way or not. You will find that they are not.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is not the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts an argument against the bill? In one breath he says that we should not use "sob stuff," but merely provide to keep them out of the poorhouse, and in the next breath he says that we need about $9,000 annuity for these highly paid officials.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. The gentleman amused me when he was talking about the National City Bank in New York. That has nothing to do with this bill, and if the gentleman was as well informed as he should be he would know this is not a parallel case with the National City Bank of New York. Go into the community where any one of these 12 branch banks is located and you can find men, hundreds of them, with as much or more ability to operate those institutions as those who are now operating them, and you will not have to pay them these enormous salaries. It is not treating your constituents right when you vote for a measure like this, which the chairman of the committee says will cost approximately $600,000 a year. You know that it will be more than that, but even granted that it is $600,000 a year, that money should go into the Treasury of the United States, as the law contemplated, when the law was passed. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, let me inquire how much time I have used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 31 minutes remaining.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I had not thought of saying anything on this pending measure to pension reserve-bank officials, but I have asked a number of questions concerning this bill, and I must say frankly that none have been answered to my satisfaction. I have been pleased to hear the forceful argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILLIAMS] against the passage of the pending bill and have been amazed at the information which he, with 25 years of banking experience, has just given. I can not believe that this House, with the information it has, is going to pass this measure. We may pass some kind of a retirement bill, but I hope this will not pass in its present form.

This is a loosely drawn bill and would, if passed, set a bad and dangerous precedent. I can not believe that men of the caliber that I know the committee is composed of which brought out this measure have really given it serious consideration. I have searched this bill, have read it carefully, but have found no provision in it requiring any individual connected with a Federal reserve bank to have served any given length of time in order to be eligible for the proposed pension, as is required by rural carriers, post-office clerks, and other Government employees. Is there such a provision? I would like to inquire at this point if there is anything of that kind in the bill?

Mr. LUCE. The chairman of the committee explained at the outset that the purpose of this bill was to leave the details of the system to the Federal Reserve Board. It is not in the bill, nor are other details of the same nature. We have been discussing here a system which was laid before us as one which would probably commend itself to the Federal Reserve Board, but we did not deem it wise to enter into details in legislation of this kind.

Mr. BLANTON. I may say that we have found by experience—by sad experience—that we can not afford to leave the minor details, like the fixing of $50,000 per year salaries, to the board. For it has paid $40,000 per year to a deputy official. We ought to fix the details ourselves.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes. If Congress had fixed the salaries in the reserve act, I do not believe there would be $50,000 salaries paid to anyone connected with the reserve banks. Members of the board receive $12,000 per year, if I remember correctly. The idea of pensioning a man who has been drawing a salary of $50,000, also deputy governors and minor officers who receive salaries of $40,000, $35,000, and $25,000 a year is astounding. Surely that is not what our fathers had in mind in establishing pensions. It just occurs to me that pensions are for our poor and needy and not for the rich, as this bill contemplates.

Now, I was also interested in the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] that when a man shows signs of becoming superannuated or of a breakdown, then under this bill, if passed, he could be put on the pension roll. Let me say to you that in my humble judgment there would be too many men who would begin to show signs of breaking down in a very few months. They could be appointed and show signs of breaking down in a few months or in a few years, and then be put on the pension roll, if they stood well with the reserve board. Nothing in this measure would prevent such abuse.

Nor is that all. The facts are: The more I have heard you gentlemen who are sponsoring the pending measure the more convinced I have become that I can not support it. A few minutes ago, during a running debate, I inquired of the proponents of this bill to pension reserve bank officials, if the policy of our Government should be to pension the wealthy; and if they contended that men receiving double the salaries of the average governor of the States should of right be pensioned. In reply I was charged with being unfair to make the comparison, and in turn, permit me to say that in my judgment, this bill is not only unfair to our tax-burdened people, but is utterly absurd.

Why, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, under provisions of the bill now before us, it is actually proposed to pension a man $9,000 a year who was promoted from a $6,500 salary to a nice, fat $25,000 job, as in the case cited this afternoon of one Texas banker. And bear in mind that if he remains in the service for 40 years at $25,000 per year, he will receive in all the enormous sum of $800,000. I say it is positively astounding when we know there has been such a marked increase in pensions in the past year. I am reliably and officially informed that during the past fiscal year there was an increase in all pensions from $207,844,348.29 to the appalling figures of $230,-152,712.17. This is the unprecedented increase of nearly $23,-000,000 in one year, and a drain on the Treasury in the face of the fact that taxes have leaped higher and higher; this, in spite of the fact that the country is demanding and this House has voted a material tax reduction.

Almost daily I receive pitiful pleas from men who answered the call of this great Government when the dark clouds of war hung heavily over the land, and who are in destitute circumstances. Thousands of our brave young men lost not only their positions, but health and vitality in the World War, and other wars; but because of so much red tape required, many meritorious cases have been refused adequate relief. We have almost countless others of aged, dependent, and deserving citizens who gave sons to their great Government in those dark and never-to-be-forgotten days, whom the Congress might well aid, rather than rich reserve-bank officials. I can not conceive of this Congress going so far as to waste money in such a shameful fashion while others much more deserving plead for recognition at our hands.

It was amusing to hear the several able gentlemen in their anxiety to rush through the pending measure speak in such pleading terms for the clerks connected with reserve banks, who receive only $27 per week. Somehow I feel constrained to believe that this measure was not conceived in the minds of clerks whose salaries are only $27 per week, but rather in the fertile brain of high-powered political appointees, governors and deputy governors of reserve banks, whose salaries range around $27,000 per year.

I listened with interest to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] and other gentlemen discussing the sacrifices these district governors and deputy governors have made in holding on to $25,000 and $50,000 jobs. I recall that only a few years ago some of these bankers began to pull political wires to secure these appointments, and sent out friends in droves to urge Congressmen and Senators to recommend them for these jobs, which in many instances pay twice the salary they could earn in private life. They pulled every political wire possible in order to "sacrifice themselves." That is the record.

I submit for your consideration that those political favorites who have succeeded in landing coveted places with reserve banks should, by good management, be able to lay up a few pennies for old age and rainy days, if they are in fact half the financiers they have recommended themselves to be, even though they are paid the paltry, insignificant salaries of $15,000 to $50,000 per year.

Mr. Chairman, there are so many objections to this bill that I hope the House will refuse to pass it. There may be some justification for a measure to care for the clerks, but why not place them under the civil service? The faithful rural carriers and postal clerks have been urging a more liberal retirement bill, and Congress has so far turned a deaf ear to them. Then, why bring in a bill here to pension those who do not need it, merely because they happen to be bankers and political favorites? The maximum pension of any postal employee, after 35 years of service, is only $1,000, and yet, under the terms of this act you propose to pension reserve bank officials and employees as much as $9,000 per year.

It occurs to me that it is inconsistent to talk economy at home and support measures of this character here in Congress. This bill is not only very objectionable but it calls for a loot on the Treasury. It was conceived in iniquity and proposes a bad precedent. It is not in keeping with the purpose our fathers had in mind in establishing pensions to aid the needy and deserving, and I submit that it ought to be—and I think will be—defeated.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes. The Chair misstated the time remaining to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. The Chair should have stated that he had 21 minutes remaining.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Is that still remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. That is still remaining.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is but one place to stop the passage of this bill, and that is here. And there is but one time to stop it, and that is now, when we vote on it in a few minutes. If we pass it here we know it is going to become a law, because we know that the Senate of the United States passed such a bill as this unanimously last year. Here is the place to kill it, and now is the proper time to kill it.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am awfully surprised to find the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] agreeing to a bill of this kind, and if he wants to excuse himself I will yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. Allow me to correct the gentleman. The Senate did not pass this bill, but passed the bill in the shape it was originally introduced, which was worse than this.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman by his statement upholds my argument, and that is that the proper time and place to kill this bill is here and now. It is idle to expect that the Senate will not pass it, because, as the gentleman says, it passed unanimously last year a similar bill even worse than this one.

Our friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] seems to think that if you will simply raise salaries you will get better men and better ability than otherwise. I believe the greatest financial expert who served in this House since I have been here, one of the greatest, was the gentleman from New York, Mr. Mills. I do not think anyone will question that statement. I am reminded of the fact that Mr. Mills, probably worth somewhere between $25,000,000 and $50,000,000 himself, was willing to serve in this House at $10,000 a year. I am reminded of the fact that he sought a job, voluntarily, which at the time he sought it, the governorship of New York State, paid only $10,000 a year, and when he sought it he did not know at that time the people of New York were going to raise the salary. He was voluntarily seeking a job that paid $10,000 a year. So you are not going to get better material by paying these $40,000 salaries to deputy governors of these banks.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I have but five minutes, but I am always glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman has always been courteous to me and I appreciate it. I am assuming from what the gentleman says that he thinks there is something in this bill which authorizes increases of salaries, but there is nothing like that in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. No; but it permits $15,000 to be used as a salary basis for retirement for life for the various employees of these banks, so that most of them will retire on $9,000 per year for life. That is exactly what it permits, and therefore it does involve a pertinent question of salary.

There is one service that the membership, especially on the Democratic side of this House, aided and supported by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], ought to render to the country before they quit. First, we ought to kill this bill. And then there ought to be an amendment passed to the Federal banking act to limit the salaries that they shall allow their employees. That was the only serious mistake about that great piece of legislation when it was passed and that ought to be corrected. But this demonstrates to you that whenever the Congress takes its hands off the purse strings of the Treasury you can not depend on somebody else to safeguard the people's rights, and I am not willing, as the gentleman from Massachusetts indicated he was, to leave the details of this legislation to this board of governors to thrash out and determine. I am not willing to do it. They could arrange that a man who had not been in their employment for not more than a year could be retired, if they wanted to, at $9,000 per year for life. They could put any other unreasonable provision in there that they want to. We have been forced to this conclusion from sad experience, that we can not depend on them with respect to vital details.

I am going to vote, first, for the amendment of my colleague [Mr. BLACK of Texas] to reduce this basic amount to $10,000. Of course, I take it that will fail. We have now only about 75 Members here on the floor. If there should be a record vote, you will have large numbers coming in from their offices, called here very hurriedly, and they will not know what they are voting on, and would likely defeat the amendment. And they will vote for what will be told them is a measure of the administration and the bill will pass. We ought to have a decisive vote on this bill here and now and kill it here, and I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will see fit himself to not stand in the way of killing it. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to express my personal opinion about this bill. I am not very friendly to it. I think the bill ought not to pass. [Applause.] I think the bill should not be here. I think men who are getting $20,000 a year, or any such sum, ought not to be put on a pension roll out of public money. [Applause.] The net earnings of the Federal reserve banks—that is, the net earnings after paying dividends and establishing the legal surplus funds—belong to the Government of the United States. I think we ought not to play with that and we ought not to authorize the Federal reserve banks to play with it. I think we ought not to authorize the Federal reserve banks, in a blanket bill like this, without specific conditions, to pay 50 per cent of any pensions that call for the payment of as much as $9,000 to any one man. If we want a pension system that pays a pension to the man or woman we heard about, drawing $27 a week, I will be glad to see it established under proper conditions. I think the civil employees who are now on the Government pay roll under a maximum pension of $1,000, in connection with which they contribute 3½ per cent, are better justified in their claims for increased pension than any authorization for pensions could be under this act. [Applause.]

I have never been very strong for making a pension the equivalent of a salary. I understand an annuity to be provision for the days when we are no longer able to work. I think there ought not to be a premium placed on retirement. Let men work as long as they can. They are better off if they work; they keep themselves more active; their brains are clearer; their physical condition is better. The very minute you put a fit man off the job and out in the rain he deteriorates like an old piece of boiler iron. He rusts out, drops off, and passes out of existence, and you no longer have the pleasure of associating with him.

We should not pass this kind of legislation. If we are going to pass any legislation relating to this subject, let us specify the responsibility and where it rests. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the argument advanced by our colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is one of the strongest arguments against this bill. He told us we should not consider how our heart feels when considering retirement legislation but that it was an economic matter only. He said that a retirement bill had for its purpose the making sure that faithful employees would not suffer want after leaving employment. However, he advocates this bill and if we follow his argument we must come to the conclusion that the high officials of the Federal reserve banks who have been receiving salaries of $15,000 to $50,000 a year need an annuity of $9,000 a year upon retirement to keep them from the poorhouse and from want.

This is a quasi governmental bill, as the proponents state. If we are to take care of employees, let us take care of the Government employees first. We have hundreds of thousands of Government employees, who have been knocking at the doors of this Congress, and past Congresses, to have the maximum retirement pay of $1,000 per year increased. Notwithstanding the fact that there is a deduction of 3½ per cent from their salaries for their retirement fund, and a deduction of only 1½ per cent is proposed in this retirement bill for quasi governmental employees, the faithful Government employees have been unable to have the $1,000 maximum retirement annuity increased.

I am not willing to vote for any bill granting an annuity of $9,000 per year to quasi governmental employees who have been making $25,000 a year, while we leave old and faithful Government employees, such as the underpaid postal employees, and other Government workers, with a $1,000 annuity.

The Federal Treasury is going to have to carry the burden of this bill, because every amount which is paid by this corporation to the retirement fund, in addition to the deductions made from the compensation of the employees, indirectly comes out of the taxpayers of the country, since in proportion to the amounts so paid, so much will the ultimate surplus which otherwise would go into the Federal Treasury be reduced.

Furthermore, if this bill is enacted into law, this retirement fund corporation is granted large and wide-sweeping powers. The powers are set out in section 2 of the bill. They are authorized to engage in practically any kind of business, and yet the other provisions of this bill specifically exempt the business enterprises of this corporation from all local, Federal, and State taxation, except in so far as real-estate taxes are concerned.

I sincerely hope the Members of this House who are so anxious to retire these $25,000 and $50,000 a year bank presidents on an annuity of $9,000 a year will use as much effort to bring before the House for a vote and for passage legislation which will take care of the many thousands of Federal employees who now have 3½ per cent deducted from their salary and who have been trying for many months and many years to have the maximum retirement pay of $1,000 which they can receive increased. [Applause.]

This bill is a looting of the Federal Treasury. I hope it will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, we do not care to use any more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Roy A. Young, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, William P. G. Harding, Benjamin Strong, George W. Norris, E. R. Fancher, George J. Seay, M. B. Wellborn, James B. McDougal, David C. Biggs, W. B. Geery, W. J. Bailey, Lynn P. Talley, and John U. Calkins, respectively, governors of the several Federal reserve banks, and their successors, are hereby created a body corporate by the name of the "Federal reserve retirement fund," for the following purposes, viz:

(a) To provide retirement allowances and other forms of benefit for officers and employees (hereinafter collectively referred to as employees) of the Federal reserve banks (including the Federal reserve agents and their employees) and of the Federal Reserve Board and of the corporation, who, by reason of long and meritorious service, or by age, disability, or other reason shall be deemed entitled to the payment of such allowances or benefits to themselves or their beneficiaries, on such terms and conditions, however, as the corporation may from time to time approve and adopt.

(b) Subject to the provisions of section 5 hereof, to provide retirement allowances and other forms of benefit for officers and employees (hereinafter collectively referred to as employees) of any bank or trust company that is or shall be a member bank of any Federal reserve bank, who, by reason of long and meritorious service, or by age, disability, or other reason, shall be deemed entitled to the payment of such allowances or benefits to themselves or their beneficiaries, on such terms and conditions, however, as the corporation may from time to time approve and adopt.

(c) In general, to do and perform all things necessary or appropriate to a corporation created for the purpose of providing retirement allowances and other forms of benefit for the persons mentioned in subsections (a) and (b) hereof. The benefits provided by the corporation may be in the form of annuities, disability payments, life insurance, or other forms which from time to time shall seem expedient to the said corporation; and for the purposes aforesaid the corporation may establish and maintain appropriate activities, agencies, and institutions and may aid or make use of such activities, agencies, or institutions as may be now or hereafter established for like similar purposes: Provided, That the corporation shall not provide retirement allowances or other forms of benefit for any member of the Federal Reserve Board, any trustee of the corporation as such, nor for any person other than those described in subsections (a) or (b) hereof.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the enacting clause. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on his motion?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I do not care to be heard on the motion, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4) to incorporate the Federal reserve retirement fund, to define its functions, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the enacting clause was stricken out was laid on the table.

REREFERENCE OF A BILL

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to change the reference of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 175) to change the name of the Ancon Hospital in the Panama Canal Zone to the General Gorgas Hospital, which was erroneously referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution by title.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I agree that jurisdiction of this resolution properly belonged to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce under the precedents of the House, but there is this situation in regard to it. I can not find what the extent facts are, but it has been stated to me to-day that the Committee on Military Affairs, while it had jurisdiction of it, acted upon this bill and directed a favorable report, and that a member of the committee was designated to make the report, although it has not yet been filed. If this be the fact, of course, it has reached a parliamentary stage, I think, when it might create confusion if we transferred it. As I have said, I can not be absolutely certain that this is the fact. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] has made some investigation and he can not learn whether it is the fact or not.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. I went to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and he was perfectly willing to sanction the transfer. I went to Mr. TAYLOR, the gentleman who introduced the bill, and he was perfectly willing. That was all this afternoon.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand; but if the Committee on Military Affairs has really acted on the bill and directed a favorable report on it, it can not be changed by agreement, to say the least, under the precedents. Of course, I am not able to state whether or not there has been a favorable report by the committee, but that information has come to me, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN], who sits by me, just this moment tells me that there has been a favorable report. That being the situation, I hardly think the change should be made.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If I have the floor.

Mr. BOYLAN. I want to state that the Committee on Military Affairs has ordered a favorable report on the bill.

Mr. PARKER. The Military Affairs Committee as a whole?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. I want to say that this is a small matter; it is only a matter of jurisdiction.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand that; I agree with the gentleman that the gentleman's committee was entitled to jurisdiction, but there are holdings under the rule, as binding as the rule itself, that where a committee has reported a bill it is too late to raise the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The committee has not reported the bill and the House is not advised of the favorable report by the committee except by hearsay.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It has not been put in the basket; but we will be treading on extremely dangerous grounds if when a bill has been ordered to be reported and for some reason or other they have failed to put it in the basket the House makes a change of reference under that state of affairs. I hope we can get the matter straightened out; all I am seeking is to preserve the parliamentary order. If the gentleman from New York will withdraw his request and let it go over until to-morrow I think we can get it straightened out.

Mr. PARKER. I want to be courteous; but I want to say that I have authority from the committee to make a motion, if I can not get unanimous consent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I should have to interpose a point of order to that.

Mr. PARKER. I do not mean to-night. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the request.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KVALE, for four days to attend an important meeting in Minneapolis, Minn.

To Mr. BOHN, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, for 10 days, on private business.

To Mr. LEATHERWOOD (at the request of Mr. COLTON), for 10 days, on account of illness.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred to the appropriate committee, as follows:

S. 744. An act to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 2, 1928, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Thursday, February 2, 1928, as reported by clerks of the several committees:

REPORT OF THE DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask leave to submit a report from the Committee on Printing, and request its immediate consideration. It concerns the annual report of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am very sorry, but I must object to this matter and ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the receipt of the report?

Mr. COPELAND. Not at all. I have no objection to the receipt of the report, but I want no action taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Printing, reported a resolution (S. Res. 130), as follows:

Resolved, That the Thirtieth Annual Report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the year ended March 1, 1927, be printed, with illustrations, as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning I objected to the consideration of a resolution reported by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM]. I wish to withdraw the objection and hope that the resolution will be acted on.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, as the Senator from New York is so kind, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate Resolution 130, reported by the Committee on Printing, providing for the printing of the Thirtieth Annual Report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, may be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was agreed to.

NICARAGUA AND OUR GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I present an article from the Century Magazine for February, 1928, entitled "Nicaragua and the policy our Government has pursued," by Moorfield Storey, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NICARAGUA AND THE POLICY OUR GOVERNMENT HAS PURSUED

By Moorfield Storey

From every point of view our own interests—moral, political, and economic—are vitally affected by our relations with Nicaragua and our other weak neighbors. To the south of us are 20 Republics with an area more than twice that of the United States, an area which is one of the great food-supply regions of the world, and must soon become a vast market for manufactured goods, with a population of nearly 100,000,000 people, proud, sensitive, and patriotic. As the leading power in this great hemisphere, we are bound to set before them the highest standard of respect for law and consideration for their rights. "It is excellent to have a giant's strength," but it is barbarous to abuse it. We are under every obligation to respect the sovereignty of these Republics and to build up that confidence and foster that friendship which inevitably spring from right conduct upon the part of a strong nation. We owe these peoples the same respect and the same consideration that we pay to the greatest and most powerful nations.

The policy which has been pursued during the last year by our Government violates at once the Constitution of the United States and fixed principles of international law.

The Constitution of the United States provides that the Congress shall have power, among other things, "to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy." This power is vested in Congress and not in the President, because the people of the United States supply the soldiers who do the fighting. It is their husbands, their sons, their brothers who are called upon to risk their lives in battle, and they have never given any man the power to involve them in war without the consent of their Representatives assembled in Congress. If, therefore, the President feels that there is an occasion for using military force in a foreign country, he is bound first to get the authority of Congress, and must not carry on war himself or create a situation where war is the only alternative.

It is no excuse that the President believes that certain things are beneficial. He has no right to exercise any power not given to him, or to decide the question of war or peace, which is expressly committed to Congress. He is not entitled to decide for this country whether acts of war are beneficial or not. It is for Congress to decide the policy of the country. The President's powers are executive, not legislative.

The fact that the Constitution makes the President Commander in Chief of the Army gives him no power to say when and how the Army shall be used, as that is a question for Congress. After Congress has decided that an army be called into the field the President may command it, but he can not determine whether it shall go into the field, for that power is in Congress.

At a time when our minister to England, Mr. Houghton, contends that war should not be declared except by vote of the people themselves, we certainly ought not to tolerate a course of dealing which takes from Congress the power to determine whether war is necessary, and permits it to be usurped by the President.

The rules of international law which regulate the relations between this country and its weaker neighbors have been settled by our own statesmen. When Mr. Elihu Root was Secretary of State he visited South America to attend the Pan American Congress at Rio de Janeiro and to assure those countries as to the policy and purpose of the United States he said: "We consider that the independence and equal rights of the smallest and weakest member of the family of nations deserve as much respect as those of the great empires. We pretend to no right, privilege, or power that we do not freely concede to each one of the American Republics."

When the Pan American Congress was held in Washington in January, 1906, Mr. Lansing, afterward Secretary of State; Mr. Root, who was the former Secretary of State, and Dr. James Brown Scott, one of our leading authorities on international law, framed for the American Institute of International Law the "Declaration of Rights of Nations." This declaration was adopted unanimously by the Pan American Congress and has the following passages:

"Every nation has the right to territory within defined boundaries, and to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over this territory and all persons, whether native or foreign, found therein.

"Every nation entitled to a right by the law of nations is entitled to have that right respected and protected by all other nations, for right and duty are correlative, and the right of one is the duty of all to observe."

It is not necessary to go further in order to determine the rules of international law. These are the rules formulated by a congress to which we and our smaller neighbors were parties in order to regulate our respective rights. From this proposition there is no escape.

The President, without consulting Congress, although it was in session at the time, sent into the territory of Nicaragua, a country with which we were at peace, a large force of marines, a considerable squadron of warships under the command of an American admiral, and a number of airplanes for use in scattering bombs. And as a result of this in one battle there were killed somewhat more than 300 Nicaraguans and a few of our marines.

What are the facts which caused this action? The President did not take the public into his confidence but was content with the statement that it was necessary to protect American lives and property, without going into particulars and telling his countrymen what interests were affected, whether any had been injured, and to what dangers they were exposed. On the contrary, he took the ground that the press and people of the United States were bound to support his action without questioning his rights or his wisdom. The statement of facts which follows has been gathered from other sources, and if there is any inaccuracy the President can not complain, since he does not tell us what the facts are.

In 1850 the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was signed by the United States and Great Britain, providing for a neutral canal across Nicaragua, which country was not consulted. America's interest, therefore, in Nicaragua dates back almost three-quarters of a century, but as time went on the joint interest with Great Britain in the canal was no longer favored. The United States adopted a policy of obtaining an interest of its own. Zelaya opposed the efforts of the United States to extend its control over Nicaragua by obtaining new concessions, and as a result in 1909 a revolution was started by the Conservatives in Nicaragua against President Zelaya, who belonged to the Liberal Party. That insurrection was on the point of being crushed when the United States intervened on the ground that two Americans, Groce and Cannon, had been murdered by Zelaya; and as a result Zelaya was expelled and a man of very high cultivation and intelect, Dr. José Madriz, succeeded him. But the United States, not satisfied with this, forced out Madriz and established the Conservatives in power. The Government at that time controlled the whole country with the exception of the port of Bluefields, which was occupied by the revolutionists.

In 1912 Gen. Luis Mena began a revolution, and although himself a Conservative, was backed by the Liberals. The uprising became so general that the overthrow of the Government which the American Government was backing seemed imminent; whereupon between 1,500 and 2,000 United States marines were dispatched to Nicaragua on the pretext of protecting American life and property. They fulfilled this duty by fighting side by side with the Government troops, to whom they supplied the necessary arms and ammunition. Thus the Liberals were killed off by thousands with slight loss to us.

When the control of Nicaragua had been secured in this way, the American flag was hoisted on the Nicaragua "White House," and presidential elections were called. As our diplomatic representative agreed to Conservative candidates only, the Liberal Party, composed of about 75 per cent of the people, refused to vote. Nevertheless, we held these elections to be valid, and the elected Government is still being maintained in power by the presence of the American marines quartered in the "White House" at Managua, the Capital of Nicaragua. There is no question whatever that our troops kept the administration in power, and this is confirmed by Lieut. Col. Charles G. Long, one of our commanding officers, on November 18, 1912, who said in his report: "The Liberals constitute three-fourths of the country. The present Government is not in power by the will of the people."

This revolution against the Government which opposed the designs of the United States was financed to the extent of $600,000 by Adolfo Diaz, now the so-called Conservative President, at that time a local official of La Luz & Los Angeles Mining Co., an American corporation, who was receiving a salary of $1,000 a year. A provisional government was established and at its head was a general by the name of Estrada who favored the policies of the United States. He was bitterly opposed by the people of Nicaragua, but was sustained in office solely by our support for the purpose of floating a loan and the control of customs to secure that loan.

In May, 1911, Estrada resigned in favor of Vice President Adolfo Diaz in regard to which the American minister wired the State Department, "A war vessel is necessary for the moral effect." In the meanwhile through the good offices of the Department of State a small loan of $1,500,000, afterward increased to $2,500,000, was placed with New York bankers. The proceeds were used to establish a national bank in Nicaragua and to pay off some of the most pressing claims; and by this device, with the consent of our Government, a strong financial interest in Nicaragua was secured by Americans which could be used as an excuse for interference. The policy of refusing to recognize Nicaraguan governments that were not controlled by American interests and actively supporting the governments backed by American interests became well established.

The present difficulty began in 1923 with the death of President Chamorro who was succeeded by Vice President Martinez. Martinez had his own personal ambitions which were not backed by his associates, and as a result Carlos Solorzano, a Conservative, was selected as the nominee for President and Juan Bautista Sacasa, a Liberal, for Vice President. Meanwhile the regular Conservative Party met in convention and nominated Emiliano Chamorro, and the Liberal Party named Dr. Luis Corea.

The new coalition government composed of Solorzano and Sacasa entered office on January 1, 1925, and was duly recognized by the United States. Later Solorzano retired and Sacasa was driven out. On November 14, 1926, there having been various governments which the United States declined to recognize, Adolfo Diaz was inaugurated as President. President Diaz upon his inauguration addressed a note to the United States Government requesting its guidance, cooperation, and aid in restoring peace and order. He declared that he could easily control the situation if it were not for the hostile attitude of the Government of Mexico, which also imperiled the interests of Americans and foreigners in Nicaragua and threatened what he described as the "continental equilibrium." And at the conclusion of his note he said: "I desire to manifest to you at the same time that whatever may be the means chosen by the Department of State, they will meet with the approval of my absolute confidence in the high spirit of justice of the Government of the United States."

Three days later the United States recognized the Diaz government. The following day it was announced by the State Department at Washington that Diaz had asked for American assistance to protect American and foreign lives and property, and on December 18 he stated that he expected this assistance when he took office, and depended on it to retain it. The United States was privy to the movement which put Diaz in power, and his cry for help was expected. After this events moved steadily and rapidly. Having planted a strong military and naval force in Nicaragua which could overcome any resistance that Nicaraguans could offer, the President sent down Henry L. Stimson, not an officer of the United States confirmed by the Senate, but the personal representative of the President, who wrote the following letter to Gen. José Moncada, commander in chief of the forces opposed to Diaz:

"DEAR GENERAL MONCADA: Confirming our conversation of this morning, I have the honor to inform you that I am authorized to say that the President of the United States intends to accept the request of the Nicaraguan Government to supervise the elections in 1928; that retention of President Diaz during the remainder of his term is regarded as necessary for the proper and successful conduct of such elections, and that the forces of the United States are authorized to accept the custody of the arms of those who are willing to lay them down, including the Government's, and to disarm forcibly those who will not do so.

"Very respectfully,

"HENRY L. STIMSON."

The Associated Press dispatch from Washington, under date of May 6, made this report:

"A truce until to-morrow to enable General Moncada, Liberal commander in chief, to try to persuade his followers to surrender their arms to American marines was disclosed in the State Department announcement made public to-night.

"The eight conditions enumerated by Mr. Stimson as governing the suppression of civil war, made no reference to any threat on his part that American marines would disarm any Liberal troops which failed to turn in their weapons. In a message dated yesterday, however, Mr. Stimson expressed the hope there would be disarmament except for possible small groups of 'irreconcilables and bandits.'

"The program, as Mr. Stimson now views it, may be outlined as follows: 1. Complete disarmament on both sides. 2. An immediate general peace to permit the planting for the new crop in June. 3. A general amnesty to all persons in rebellion or exile. 4. The return of all occupied or confiscated property to its owners. 5. Participation in the Diaz cabinet by representative Liberals. 6. Organization of a Nicaraguan constabulary of a nonpartisan basis, commanded by American officers. 7. American supervision of the 1928 election. 8. The continuance temporarily in the country of a sufficient force of American marines to guarantee order pending the organization of the constabulary."

It is interesting to quote this statement from Mr. Stimson:

"My investigation has shown that this evil of government domination of elections lies, and has always lain, at the root of the Nicaraguan problem. Owing to the fact that a government once in power habitually perpetuates itself or its party in such power by controlling the election, revolutions had become inevitable and chronic, for by revolution alone can a party once in control of the government be dispossessed. All persons of every party with whom I have talked, admit the existence of this evil and its inevitable results; and all of them have expressed an earnest desire for the supervision of election by the United States in an attempt to get rid of the evil forever."

On what theory our troops are to be used may be gathered from the following:

"The organization of a nonpartisan constabulary, under the instruction and command of American officers, is further suggested by President Diaz, who, in this connection, asks for the continuance in Nicaragua of a sufficient portion of our present naval force to insure order pending the organization of the constabulary.

"References in dispatches from Nicaragua to the use of American troops to disarm Liberals may be in relation to this aspect of the peace terms, since they would impose on the American forces the duty of policing Nicaragua and suppressing any group that remained in arms until such time as the new constabulary should be ready to assume its duties. The status of the American marines in such circumstances, however, would be that of a police force temporarily lent to the Nicarauga Government and acting by warrant of Nicaragua law in maintaining order in that country."

American soldiers can not become Nicaraguan policemen by warrant of Nicaraguan law. The only law which governs them is the law of their own country.

In a word, under pretense of protecting American property we take charge of Nicaragua, keep Diaz, whom we have been upholding, in power, and are to see that the new government elected next year will be chosen under the bayonets of our marines lent as policemen to a foreign government.

Mr. Stimson, in his letter says, "I am authorized to say that the President of the United States intends to accept the request of the Nicaraguan Government to supervise the elections of 1928."

The Congress of the United States was in session when this interference in Nicaragua was begun; it will be in session before the election in 1928, but Congress is not to be consulted. The President of the United States, exercising sole authority, using the military power and the money of this country, and acting through his personal representative, has taken control of an independent country and proposes to hold it.

There is not in the letter or the spirit of the Constitution anything which authorizes this action, there is no principle of international law which justifies this invasion and subjection of an independent people. It is a pure tyrannical usurpation of power, and it must be recognized as such. Behind it may be, and it would seem must be, American interests which ask the President's support. The people pay, the interests profit, and the President receives their support. It is time that usurpations such as these were characterized as they deserve, and that Congress asserted the rights of the American people and protected the rights of friendly nations from such abuse.

The President in his speech defending his course says that "while it is a well-established international law that we have no right to interfere in the purely domestic affairs of other nations in their dealings with their own citizens, it is equally well established that our Government has certain rights over and certain duties toward our own citizens and their property wherever they may be located. The persons and property of its citizens are a part of the domain of the Nation even when abroad." What an absurd contention is this! Were it true we should only have to get a citizen or body of citizens to buy land in some other country and thereby add it to our domain. For such simple method of annexation there is no precedent. Contrast this statement with the rule laid down by our eminent statesmen which has already been quoted, that "every nation has the right to territory within defined boundaries, and to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over this territory, and all persons, whether native or foreign, found therein."

It is worth while to observe that the President counts on the request of the Government of Nicaragua. Does this mean that Diaz is in power to-day as our representative and as our agent?

Now that our force is in control of Nicaragua, our Army and Navy in its territory, its President in power only by our support, the morning paper, as I write, informs us that "President Coolidge sends messages of congratulation to five Central American Republics on the event of the anniversary of their independence. The messages were addressed to Presidents Ricardo Jimenez, Costa Rica; Miguel Paz Baraona, Honduras; Pio Romero Bosque, Salvador; Lazaro Chacon, Guatemala; and Adolfo Diaz, of Nicaragua." Can self-deception go further?

It is perhaps interesting to add that a scathing denunciation of the policies of the United States toward the countries of Latin America by Horace G. Knowles, former American minister to Rumania, Serbia, Bulgaria, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, and Bolivia, enlivened Prof. William R. Shepherd's recent round-table session on "self-determination in Latin America."

"Our national policy," he charged, "has always been to take all we can from them and to give as little as possible to them. We have a long arm for taking and a short arm for giving. Instead of sending them teachers, instructors, and helpers, we have sent concession hunters, conscienceless and usurious bankers, avaricious capitalists, bribers, commercial tricksters, murderers, soldiers to shoot them, degenerates, and carriers of loathsome infectious diseases." Mr. Knowles said he was ready to prove these assertions.

Professor Borchard, a lawyer of eminence, who is very familiar with the Caribbean policy and who has been the Assistant Solicitor of the State Department, states the case accurately, as follows: "We must frankly recognize that the rights of small States and of government by consent of the governed, of which we have recently heard so much, have never been a consideration or factor in our Caribbean policy, nor has the social regeneration of a backward people, who constitute the bulk of the population, yet had any tangible manifestations."

The readiness with which the most civilized governments adopt the claims of their citizens against other nations, and the extent to which these claims shrink when put to the test may be illustrated by the statement made by the Hon. Wayne MacVeagh some years ago. He dealt with the claims presented to arbitration commissions for allowance between the year 1868 and 1892, and with the claims presented to commissions by Great Britain, the United States, France, Spain, Mexico, and Chile, countries which he stated were fairly represented by the civilized nations. The figures are very striking. To the commission constituted July 4, 1868, to settle the claims presented by the United States against Mexico, and Mexico against the United States, the United States presented claims for $470,126,613.40, and the total amount awarded was $4,125,622.20, a little less than nine-tenths of 1 per cent. Mexico presented claims for $86,661,891.15—the cents in each case showing the extraordinary accuracy with which the figures were made up—and the amount allowed was $150,498.41, about sixteen hundredths of 1 per cent.

By the commission appointed on the 8th of May, 1871, certain claims growing out of the Civil War were considered. Great Britain presented claims against the United States amounting to $96,000,000, and the amount awarded was $1,929,819, about 2 per cent. Claims presented by the United States against Great Britain amounted to $1,000,000, on which not one cent was allowed.

Before another commission Spain presented claims amounting to $30,313,581.32, and the amount awarded was $1,293,450.55, about 4 per cent. To a joint commission to settle claims between France and the United States, France presented claims amounting to $17,368,151.27 and received an allowance of $625,566.35, the percentage of allowance being about 3.6 per cent. The United States presented claims against France amounting to $2,747,544.99, and the amount allowed was $13,659.14, an allowance of about one-half of 1 per cent. Taking all the commissions together, the total amount presented was over $719,000,000, and the total allowance was less than $8,500,000.

Had it not been for arbitration, it is probable that these great countries would have gone to war to collect the preposterous claims of their citizens, and well did Mr. MacVeagh say, "You sow military force against a weak and defenseless state and you reap injustice." With these figures before us, does it not become us to move slowly and be sure of our ground in international controversy? The fable of the wolf and the lamb is not without its application to such cases.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the pending appropriation bill be now proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill under consideration carries appropriations for the executive offices and some of the independent executive bureaus, boards, and commissions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929. When the bill came from the House it carried appropriations amounting to $539,593,111. This exceeded the appropriations for the same executive offices, bureaus, boards, and commissions for the fiscal year 1928 by $5,684,697.

This is only one of a considerable number of general appropriation bills that are to become law before this session of Congress adjourns. And in addition there will be a multitude of laws enacted which will carry in the aggregate hundreds of millions of dollars additional. It is too early in the session to predict with any degree of certainty what the sum total of the appropriations for the next fiscal year will be, but the indications are that the direct and indirect appropriations will aggregate between four and five billion dollars. It is certain that the appropriations for the next fiscal year will exceed by a very large sum the expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928. These mounting figures indicate that if the Republicans are continued in power the costs of government will be increasingly greater as the years go by.

There is nothing to justify the claims of the party in power that it has given to the people an efficient and economic administration. There has been a persistent effort upon the part of Republican leaders and the Republican press to convince the people that the Republican administration has practiced economies and given to the country a high standard of efficiency. That success has attended these efforts is apparent. Much of the popularity of President Coolidge has resulted from the belief widely entertained that his administration has inaugurated reforms and effected economies in all branches of the Government.

Mr. President, in my opinion, there is no foundation whatever upon which to rest this claim of economy or efficiency; political propaganda has misled the people. Many of them have ascribed to the administration virtues which it does not possess and achievements which vanish like fleeting shadows when the light of investigation is thrown upon them.

During the last Democratic administration our country participated in the greatest war of all time. It mobilized more than four and one-half millions of men and transported more than 2,000,000 to European shores; it accomplished a task the most gigantic ever undertaken by any country or people. To accomplish this stupendous work billions of dollars were required. President Wilson and those charged with legislative responsibilities determined that a large part of the expenses required to carry on the war should be met from current revenues, even though heavy taxes were imposed upon the people.

A revenue system was devised and taxes laid which brought billions of dollars into the Treasury of the United States, but, large as the income of the Government was, it was insufficient to meet the military expenses. Accordingly bonds were issued to the extent of more than $25,000,000,000. When hostilities ceased the administration applied itself with energy to the demobilization of the armies and the restoration of the affairs of the country to a peace-time basis.

The reactions following the war and misrepresentations made enabled the Republicans to gain control of the Government and Mr. Harding became President of the United States. In the campaign preceding his election the air was charged with misrepresentations by Republican orators and Republican newspapers. The claim was made that the Wilson administration had been inefficient and extravagant, and the Republicans solemnly assured the country that they would, if intrusted with power, inaugurate an efficient administrative system, abolish bureaus and executive agencies, commissions, and instrumentalities, consolidate Federal agencies, and decrease the personnel to peace-time limits. These promises were accepted by the people as though they were genuine and fooled millions of voters into supporting the Republican Party. But when that party came into power it ignored these preelection promises and solemn declarations; it abolished no bureaus or commissions or agencies, but, upon the contrary, increased the number. There have been no consolidations or reorganizations of departments and executive agencies, and no administrative reforms have been effected. The number of Federal employees exceeds by tens of thousands the personnel of the Federal Government in 1916.

The administrative expenses of the Government are greater now than under the Democratic administration, except during the limited period when the United States was participating in the World War. Economy does not characterize the present administration or executive departments. Every executive department, bureau, commission, and agency is reaching out for more power and is increasing its expenses and multiplying its personnel. The cry of economy has served its purpose. It has deceived the people and has aided the Republicans in winning elections. The people have been made to believe that the Coolidge administration has expended less per annum than was expended when the Democrats were in power from 1913 to the period when the United States entered the war.

When it has been shown that during the past five or six years Congress, extravagant as it has been, appropriated less than recommended by the President, the people have taken no cognizance of that fact and have set up an idol to worship, performing their devotions before an impalpable and invisible symbol which they think represents the executive power or form of the Government.

Mr. President, the appropriations for the coming fiscal year will be greater than for the present year, and it is safe to predict that if the Republican Party remains in power, the Federal Government will become more highly centralized, more powerful, more overbearing; and as its power increases and its authority is asserted, its demands for more departments, bureaus, commissions, executive agencies, and boards will increase and its expenditures will annually be enlarged.

It is the duty of executive departments to execute the laws enacted by the legislative branch of the Government, but under the present practice some executive departments and some in the army of officials and employees in executive departments expend a portion of their energy and time in devising new plans and schemes to increase the power of the Federal Government and to frame measures restrictive of the States and aggrandizing the National Government. A persistent effort is made by executive agencies to rob the States of their sovereignty and to submerge them under the rising tide of a destructive federalism.

If time permitted I could point out the triumphant and ruthless march of the Federal Government trampling down individual rights and State authority. In every part of the land voices are lifted in behalf of the Federal Government; the people are conjured to transfer from themselves and from the sovereign States the authority and power which they possess. It is certain that the Government established by the fathers is being materially modified. The centralizing tendencies were never so manifest and never so powerful as at present. The States are being assaulted; their sovereign powers are being taken from them.

The unitary theory of government is gaining ground; the lines bounding States are being obliterated and more and more they are being reduced to shadowy forms; their life, vitality, and vigor being destroyed by the increasingly powerful Federal Government. William Penn declared that—

> Governments, like clocks, go from motion men give them; and as governments are made and moved by men, so by them they are ruined, too. Therefore governments rather depend upon men, than men upon governments.

And the people seduced by the gifts and gratuities and bounties of the Federal Government or intimidated by its formidable power surrender their individual rights and the prerogatives and sovereignty of their States and look with indifference upon the ever-increasing force exercised by the National Government. Students of history and those familiar with the philosophy of government will have no difficulty in determining the future of this Republic if it continues its abortive processes. The States as centers of democratic strength and power, as fountains pouring forth pure waters of democracy, will lose their identity, their vitality, their energizing spirit. They will be swallowed up in the all-embracing federalism, and as their authority is destroyed the initiative and vigor of individuals will be weakened.

Mr. President, in view of the persistent claims of Republicans that economy has characterized their administration since Mr. Harding's election, I desire to invite attention to a few figures which will, in my opinion, negative the claims which they put forth. To show the enormous increase in the expenditures of the National Government I invite attention to figures which ought to arrest the attention of those who are interested in our Government.

In 1873 the entire expenses of the Federal Government were $330,000,000. In 1890 they were $395,000,000. In 1900 the National Budget carried $698,000,000. In 1910 the national expenditures were $1,044,000,000. In 1916, after the Democrats had been in power for a number of years, the total expenses of the National Government were $1,114,490,706. In 1917 even after the United States had entered the World War the appropriations were $1,628,000,000. During 1918 and 1919 the appropriations were, of course, necessarily very great. In 1920 they were $6,454,000,000. In 1921 the Federal approprations amounted to more than $4,704,000,000. In each of the years 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927 the Federal expenses exceeded $4,000,000,000.

It is too early to determine what the expenditures of the Government will be for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928. Not all of the appropriation bills providing for the ordinary expenses for the Government have been prepared; and it is certain that other measures will be passed before the adjournment which will call for stupendous sums. Bills are now before committees of the House and Senate calling for $125,000,000 for the Boulder Dam project. I am advised that a bill will soon be reported to the Senate dealing with the so-called Columbia River project. It is not approved by the executive department of the Government and the data available show how impracticable is the scheme. This project will involve an expenditure of between three hundred and five hundred million dollars.

The St. Lawrence River project has powerful support and will require a billion dollars from the Federal Treasury. The demands for so-called flood control will undoubtedly be responded to by Congress, with the result that hundreds of millions of dollars will be required. Numerous other measures are pending before committees of the House and Senate which, in the aggregate, call for appropriations amounting to billions of dollars.

Many of the pending bills are supported by active organizations and forceful agitators and propagandists. Even States, and political subdivisions therein, are importuning Congress to enact laws which will infringe upon the rights of the States and absolve them from obligations which, under our dual form of government, belong to the States or to their political subdivisions alone. It is depressing to those who believe in our form of government, in the sovereignty of the States, and the independence of the individual, to witness the growth of paternalism and the increasingly powerful current which is sweeping the States into the maelstrom of a dangerous, if not despotic, federalism.

We hear much of mass production, of giantism and bigness in business, of huge consolidations and mergers of corporations, of trusts and monopolies, and their control of business. The people are dazzled with the almost astronomical figures employed in measuring the wealth of individuals and corporations. There seems to be a disposition to accept as a proper formula for economic, as well as political, guidance the statement that modern conditions require giantism and bigness in every line and field of business endeavor; that the day of small business has passed; and that individualism and the fine spirit of democracy must yield to the centripetal forces which standardize and consolidate.

The revolt against monopolies and trusts, resulting in the Sherman antitrust law and Clayton Act, seems to have subsided, or at least its voice seems inarticulate and paralyzed. Gigantic mergers in various lines of business are of almost daily occurrence. They are defended upon economic grounds, and the contention is made that competition is unwise and anachronistic. Accordingly billions of capital are employed in huge mergers and consolidations. The man or corporation with limited means is absorbed or destroyed by the advancing hosts of big business, which leave behind them the mangled remains of thousands of individuals who have been crushed beneath this modern Juggernaut. Powerful movements, whether political, economic, or religious, have their repercussions in substantially all activities of the people.

If capital is massed, and huge consolidations and trusts control the economic and industrial activities of a nation, a materialistic atmosphere will be created. The thoughts and lives of the people will be largely shaped by the economic and business policies superimposed by dominating capitalistic forces. Little by little the resentment and fears of the people will be allayed unless the oppression become so great that a revolution will be precipitated. Consolidation of wealth in the hands of a few and the development of the mechanical system which seeks the greatest possible production though individualism is destroyed, will, if continued, destroy democracy, individual initiative and independence, produce a condition of mental and moral inertia upon the part of the people that will lead to the destruction of political freedom.

The consolidation of wealth leads to the centralization of political and governmental authority. If the wealth of the country is controlled by the few, the political power of the many will be weakened and the central government will expand its authority until the citadels of democracy are destroyed. There is a growing disposition upon the part of the people of our country to shirk the duties and responsibilities imposed by a democratic government and to transfer from the people and the States the responsibilities and the power which belong to them. The States are being devitalized and local political units exhibit a depressing form of atrophy.

Students of history do not fail to discover analogies, if not parallels, in the life of this Republic and powerful nations of the past whose melancholy fate historians portray. The aggressions of the executive departments in our Government and the expanding power of our National Government no longer provoke serious opposition and resentment upon the part of the people. Indeed, too often they covet Federal interference and seek to uncrown themselves and despoil their sovereign States of prerogatives and power, which they bear as captives of old did their involuntary gifts to lay at the feet of their conqueror. The highest form of liberty can only be enjoyed where there is the highest form of democracy. Liberty is not always lost through political machinations. More frequently it is stolen from the people through the machinations of wealth.

When we have learned to reverence liberty as well as wealth we shall have a renaissance of democracy with all its beauty and glory.

Mr. Andre Siegfried has recently written a book entitled "America Comes of Age," which presents some views concerning our country and its institutions worthy of consideration. He refers to the use of machinery or "standardization, and to intensive division and organization of labor, resulting in a supercollectivism" which he declares is a "grave risk for the individual." He declares that the "integrity of the individual is seriously threatened not only as a producer but as a consumer as well."

He refers to the fact that American workmen may have a house, a bath, and a car, and he fears that these are obtained "at a tragic price—no less than the transformation of millions of workmen into automatons." He calls attention to some forms of American industry which result in the standardization of the workman himself, so that artisanship has no place in the New World, and that its disappearance there has dissipated "certain conceptions of mankind which Europeans consider the very basis of civilization." He declares that "to express his own personality through his creative efforts is the ambition of every Frenchman, but it is incompatible with mass production." He further states that—> once it is admitted that their conception of society is materialistic in spite of the idealism of its leaders, it is only logical that the doctrine of efficiency should become the central idea of the country. Today in America no sacrifice is too great to be endured for this sacred principle. There is no possible escape. Big profits overshadow liberty in all its forms, and the exercise of intelligence is encouraged only if it fits in with this common aim. Anyone who turns aside to dabble in research or dilettantism is regarded as almost mentally perverted. Hence a growing tendency to reduce all virtues to the primordial ideal of conformity. * * * An important transformation of society results from this concentration of energy on the one supreme object of mass production.

> The individual, having become a means rather than an end, accepts his rôle of cog in the immense machine without giving a passing thought to the effect on his personality. Religion, also enrolled in the movement, exalts production as an ideal akin to the mysticism of life and of human progress. The ideal of "service" sanctifies this collaboration and its superb material rewards. Caught between the atrophied individual and the overdisciplined community, the family finds its field of action greatly restricted; for in the eyes of the apostles of efficiency the family is regarded as a barrier impeding the current.

Mr. Siegfried refers to the tendency of American society to "adopt an aspect of practical collectiveness which is subtly undermining the liberty of individuals and restricting his outlook to such an extent that without so much as regretting or realizing it he himself assents to his own abnegation."

The views of this acute critic may be extreme and perhaps inaccurate. Undoubtedly they will be resented by many Americans. I submit, however, that our industrial and economic situation is influencing—if not determining—our political views and shaping our political institutions. The sources controlling trade, commerce, business, industrial, and economic conditions direct and drive the thoughts of the people into materialistic channels. More and more our lives are influenced by capitalistic views and these in turn modify—if they do not change—our political views and those noble ideals and principles of democracy that exist only when the true spirit of democracy prevails in political, social, and industrial activities.

These observations are somewhat foreign to what I was discussing and yet they are not irrelevant, or wholly disassociated from the subject of Federal expenditures, and the growing disposition of the people to shirk individual responsibility and place upon governmental agencies, State and national, solemn responsibilities and duties which, if shirked by individuals will bring inevitable evils, the consequences of which will be most serious. The abdication of personal and individual responsibility is a dangerous step in the direction of bureaucracy and paternalism. There is developing in the United States an oppressive State and municipal bureaucracy; and Federal bureaucracy and paternalism are marching forward with ruthless and destructive consequencies.

The remarkable increase in the burdens of taxation and in governmental expenditures are manifestations of both bureaucracy and paternalism. They are evidences of the assumption by either States or National Government of duties belonging to individuals or local communities. An examination of the endless list of departments, bureaus, commissions, divisions, and organizations, both in States and in the Federal Government, furnish conclusive evidence of the powerful bureaucratic forces which govern the people by statute or by administrative measures and regulations, the number of which is so great as to be unknown to the people. No longer, it has been said, is this a Government of law, but a Government by bureaucrats who promulgate rules and regulations penal in character and oppressive in their operation.

I referred to the great increase in Federal expenditures. Permit me to further direct attention to this subject. The National Industrial Conference Board has done important service in publishing a number of volumes dealing with the cost of government in the United States. I have before me the volume issued in 1926, as well as the one issued in 1927. These volumes are worthy of study and should receive the attention of Senators and Congressmen, as well as the attention of members of the various State legislatures. The figures presented show the enormous increase in the cost of government, the stupendous amounts expended annually by cities, counties, and States, as well as the Federal Government.

In the introduction to the 1927 volume reference is made to the rapid expansion of public expenditures, and the question is suggested as to the possibility of securing a more active public interest in and control over physical forces. It is stated on page 9 of this volume that the total gross expenditures of the United States and the States and their local subdivisions for the year 1890 were $855,000,000 (of this amount the Federal Government expenditures were $291,000,000). In 1913 the expenditures were $2,919,000,000; in 1923, $10,265,000,000; in 1924, $10,983,000,000; in 1925, $11,124,000,000.

The expenditures for 1926 and 1927 are greater than those for 1925. The public expenditures during the fiscal year ended in 1925 were 8.4 per cent higher than for the fiscal year ended in 1923, and 281.1 per cent above the expenditures of 1913. The per capita tax in 1890 for Federal, State, and local purposes was $13.65. In 1925 it was $96.41. The tax for each person gainfully employed in 1890 was $36.67, whereas in 1925 it was $259.24. On the basis of the number of persons gainfully employed, there was an increase in the taxes between 1913 and 1925 of more than 246 per cent. It may be remarked that the military functions of our Government absorbed more than 30 per cent of the funds derived from ordinary receipts between 1920 and 1923. Substantially the same proportion was devoted to military expenditures in 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927.

It is not improper to remark that the heavy taxes imposed upon the people have been inadequate to meet national, State, and municipal expenses. The result has been that the bonded indebtedness of both Federal and State Governments and their political subdivisions has been greatly increased. In 1913 the combined State and local bonded indebtedness amounted to $3,196,000,000. In 1925 this had been increased to $9,865,000,000. In 1923 the States and their political subdivisions issued bonds to the amount of $1,043,118,000, and in 1926 to $1,365,057,000.

The total interest-bearing debt of the United States before we entered the war was $1,023,000,000. The present outstanding indebtedness of the Government is approximately $18,000,000,000.

This enormous sum bears interest as do the bonds issued by the States and their political subdivisions. The total annual interest charges which the Federal Government and the States and their political subdivisions are required to meet, exceed $2,000,000,000. The outstanding indebtedness approximating $30,000,000,000, together with the interest payments that must be met, constitute a heavy burden which the taxpayers of the United States are required to meet. But the increasing costs of Government, the extravagance, and inefficiency characterizing both National and State administration, should awaken the most serious thoughts in the minds of the people and cause apprehension as to the future of our Republic.

But, Mr. President, the knowledge of this huge indebtedness does not restrain either the Federal Government or the States and the municipalities or curb their expenditures. The expenses of the Federal Government for the fiscal year 1929 will, as I have stated, exceed those for the present fiscal year. In my opinion, the appropriations for the next fiscal year by the National and State Governments and their political subdivisions, will exceed $12,000,000,000. This sum will amount to approximately 16 per cent of the gross earnings of all the people of the United States.

A burden so great will constitute an obstacle to prosperity and will arrest the economic and industrial development of our country. Substantially all taxes ultimately rest upon the great masses of the people. The bowed back of labor, like Atlas of old, bears the burdens of the Government. It is the farmer, the laboring man, the real producer who finally pay the taxes and meet the expenses of the Government.

Mr. President, I protest against the extravagant appropriations which have been made by the present Congress, and the program outlined by the majority party which will call for billions of dollars to be provided for before we adjourn in June. It is a time for economy and for the enforcement of drastic provisions calling for the reduction of the expenses of the General Government. Instead of increasing the bureaus and executive agencies and the number of employees, Congress should abolish many bureaus and Federal commissions and agencies and consolidate others and reduce the personnel by at least 150,000.

Greater efficiency is required in the administration of the affairs of the Government. Many Federal agencies could be dispensed with to the advantage of the Government. Instead of decreasing Federal expenses we are increasing them.

The Republican Party loudly declared in the campaign of 1920 that it would soon return to normalcy; that it would reduce the number of employees to the extent of hundreds of thousands and reach the pre-war level, that it would bring about reforms in administrative procedure that would greatly reduce taxes and make for more efficient administration. These declarations were for political purposes, as I have stated. They were not uttered in sincerity; it was not believed that they would be fulfilled. We are now confronted with demands from the party in power for appropriations for the next fiscal year which will be more than four times as great as the entire expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

If the Republicans continue in power, there will be no relief from tax burdens. The Republican leaders, when Congress met in December, stated that the first important measure to be enacted into law would be one reducing taxes. Indeed, before Congress met, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House was engaged in the preparation of what was called a revenue bill which would reduce taxes. It passed the House containing many obnoxious features, but the Republican majority in the Senate promptly pigeonholed the bill. Whether it will be permitted to emerge from the musty recesses of the Finance Committee I shall not attempt to say. Certain it is that in no event will there be any substantial reduction in the revenues which are to be collected from the people for the next fiscal year.

Mr. President, I should have stated in connection with the figures submitted showing the expenditures made by States and their political subdivisions that under our dual form of government they have the greatest responsibilities. The States are sovereign and they deal with those matters which fall within the category of internal and domestic affairs. The scope of the National Government is limited, and its expenses should be materially less than those of the States and the municipalities therein. But as I have heretofore said, the Federal Government is reaching out and taking over prerogatives and duties belonging to the States and to the local subdivisions therein.

Upon a number of occasions I have challenged the attention of the Senate to the usurpations of the Federal Government, to the improper, unwarranted, and, indeed, in many instances, unconstitutional measures enacted by it, pursuant to which individual and State rights have been interfered with if not destroyed. I have also expressed the hope that there would be an awakening upon the part of the people to the dangers that will inevitably result if the General Government shall continue its invasions of the rights of the States and its interference with the liberties and authority of individuals therein. I have urged that the people organize to protect themselves from Federal aggressions and to compel retrenchment, reform, and economy in both Federal and State Governments.

The American people will soon perceive the fact, if they have not learned it yet, that the power to tax is the power to destroy; they will learn sooner or later that to compound the States into one mass, controlled by Federal authority, will destroy their sovereignty and change the form of this Republic.

I regret that the Democratic Party, which has always been the champion of individual liberty, of the maintenance of local self-government, of the preservation of the States in all of their vigor and authority, has been and now is too complacent in the face of this new federalism which is a menace to liberty. If the Democratic Party has a mission, it is to preserve individual liberty and those personal rights for which patriots have ever contended and which tyrants have ever resisted. But there are Democrats who seem to forget the principles of Jefferson; the political philosophy which he expounded; the immortal principles of which he is the ablest exponent. The Democrats in my opinion, should oppose with the utmost vehemence these centralizing movements, the bureaucratic and paternalistic policies which are sapping the vitality of the States and effecting the courage and independence and initiative of the citizens of the sovereign States.

I repeat that the greatest question before the American people to-day relates to the preservation of the States and the protection of individual rights. I have examined many of the bills which have been offered in both branches of Congress during this and preceding sessions for the past 10 years. It is my belief from such examination that a majority of the measures of importance which have been offered have had for their object the extension of the authority of the National Government, and their enactment has had the result of weakening the power and authority of the States. Many of these measures have sought to curtail the liberties and freedom of the people and to project the Federal Government into the internal and domestic affairs of both the States and the families and individuals therein.

We need to-day some mighty leader who will arouse the people to the dangers from Federal usurpations, and who will lead them to the uplands where the shining light of liberty and justice and equality will illumine their pathway and guide their footsteps.

Mr. President, there is no danger to this Republic from any foreign power. Whatever dangers there are come from within. President Masaryk, of the Czechoslovak Republic, one of the great statesmen of Europe and a profound historian, states that "there is democracy and democracy"; and declares that genuine democracy should be economic and social, as well as political—> to proclaim and practice the equality of all citizens; to recognize that all are free and hold inwardly and outwardly the human principle of fraternity is as much a moral as political innovation.

Mr. President, if this Republic should ever fall it will not be because of enemies from without, but because of the lack of fidelity upon the part of the people to the principles of democracy and to the ideals of the founders of this Nation. It is essential that a proper equilibrium be maintained between the States (local self-government) and the National Government. If the States are asborbed by the Federal Government, that equilibrium is destroyed. Many nations which developed democratic institutions and a fair degree of personal liberty, have been destroyed because the centralizing forces, both political and financial, become too powerful. When wealth controls the policies of a government, it obtains political power, weakens local political units, and creates a highly centralized government. And governments of this character tend toward further centralization, if not absolutism. They become imperialistic, and one of the never-failing concomitants of imperialism is militarism. There may be economic imperialism, the subjugation, or at least the control through economic forces, of other governments and alien peoples. But economic imperialism inevitably develops more ugly forms of imperialism and they are supported by military governments.

Students of the historical development of this Republic will not fail to observe the powerful currents that result in atrophying the States and transferring to the General Government authority and prerogatives which belong to the former. In some countries there are movements toward decentralization of political power and the development of democracy with increased personal and individual liberty. I am opposed to the enormous approporiations which the Federal Government is making, because no inconsiderable portion of the same is devoted to increasing the authority of the General Government at the expense of the States.

Moreover many appropriations are mere subsidies to the States and create a feeling of dependence upon the part of the people upon the bounties and favors of the Federal Government. In this manner the process of Federal absorption will be more rapid until sooner or later we will have a top-heavy paternalistic, if not an oppressive, Federal Government beneath which the ruins of States and local self-government will be found.

I have indicated one of the symptoms of approaching imperialism is found in demands for enormous military expenditures. For months the country has been resounding with the cries and demands of orators for hundreds of millions of dollars to be expended during the coming year for so-called military preparedness. The Executive department has submitted a Budget which calls for approximately $800,000,000 for the ordinary expenses alone of the Army and Navy for the next fiscal year. This huge sum is nearly as much as was expended in 1916 to meet all expenses of the Federal Government. And yet when we are at peace with the world, except as we are carrying on war in Nicaragua, and governing Haiti by our bayonets and military forces.

We are asked by the President to appropriate nearly a billion dollars for the ordinary expenses of the Army and the Navy. And in addition to this request, Congress is asked to provide for the construction of 71 war vessels, the cost of which will exceed $1,000,000,000. Additional sums will also be requested by the Executive department to replace war vessels and to elevate guns upon a number of our capital ships. If these demands are acceded to by Congress, there will be appropriated for military purposes approximately $1,000,000,000 for the next year, and authorized appropriations of more than $1,000,000,000. No nation in the history of the world in peace times expended for military purposes as much as the United States will expend during the next fiscal year. In my opinion, we are not justified in adopting a military policy requiring appropriations of such stupendous amounts. We are claiming to be a peace-loving Nation and are constantly avowing our devotion to peace and our hatred of all forms of militarism and imperialism. We need not be surprised if there are persons in other countries who are not disposed to give full faith and credit to our peaceful declarations. Some of them manifest great incredulity and do not hesitate to aver that our professions of peace and international good will do not entirely harmonize with our military activities.

There is no reason for this military outburst in the United States, nor for appropriations direct and authorized for military purposes totaling more than two billions of dollars. Who would dare to state that this Republic is menaced by any nation in the Western Hemisphere? Canada and the United States are bound together by enduring ties of friendship. Latin American states desire the friendship of this Republic and are willing to walk hand in hand with this Republic along the paths of peace and toward the goal of world fellowship.

The English-speaking people throughout the world feel a kinship with the people of this Nation. There are ties of consanguinity as well as of affinity. There can be no conflict between us and Great Britain. The Orient presents no menace to our peace; no danger to our security. It is true there are chauvinists and agitators within our borders, who, from time to time, seek to arouse animosities between the United States and Japan, but they will not succeed. The people of Japan are entering upon a democratic era and realize that they must have peace and opportunity for economic development. They are averse to war and would welcome the establishment of cordial and enduring relations between their country and all countries of the world. The United States is in a position to lead all nations along the highway of international fellowship. The people of the world will be glad to have the United States hold aloft the banner of peace and they will willingly follow in our footsteps.

Mr. President, we must put true and noble human qualities into politics and administration of state. That is one of the problems of democracy. Of course, we are national, "but the more national we are," as was stated by President Masaryk, "the more human we shall be, and the more human, the more national." "Humanity requires positive love of one's own people and fatherland and repudiates hatred of other peoples." Palachy, the great Czech patriot, in speaking to his countrymen, declared that the counsel he "bequeathed them" was that—> whenever we have triumphed it has been more by the might of the spirit than by physical power, and whenever we were vanquished it was through the lack of spiritual vigor more than lack of courage and boldness * * *. Not until we conquer and rule under the power of the spirit in the struggle Providence has laid upon us from time immemorial, can we be sure of a lasting peace.

Mr. President, in my opinion it is an incipient spirit of militarism and imperialism that keeps us in the Philippine Islands and in Haiti. The Filipinos desire independence and we deny it to them. It is their country, not ours. The longer we remain in those far-off islands the more difficult will it be for us to withdraw. American economic interests will demand that the United States retain the Philippine Archipelago, and their demands, I fear, will be heeded. Imperialism, no matter in what form it appears, finds a multitude of pretexts and plausible reasons for its conduct. The Filipinos, imperialism says, are a backward race and need the strong hand of this Republic to guide them.

In my opinion the verdict of history will condemn the United States for its military operations in Nicaragua. War is being waged in Nicaragua to-day. There was no sufficient reason for landing American marines and carrying military operations against any of the political factions or groups of that country. But our mission there is a "peaceful" one; we are there in the interest of "justice" and to establish "democracy." We are in Nicaragua with guns and bayonets to show our love and affection for the people and to discharge "obligations" owing to that country!

I believe that our policy in Santo Domingo and Haiti was wrong. We were not justified in seizing either of those countries and superimposing upon them American military rule. In so doing we aroused resentments in all Latin-American countries and at the same time excited the fears of many of the people therein.

Many of the people believed that this Republic was embarking upon an imperialistic policy, and that it intended to extend its political power over weak and unoffending States. Some South American jurists and statesmen of eminence condemned the interpretation placed by some Americans upon the Monroe doctrine and saw in such interpretation a constant peril to the independence and security of their own countries. I have mentioned Haiti. For six or seven years I have sought to have the United States withdraw its armed forces from Haitian soil and permit the people of that country to set up a government of their own choice. I have offered amendments to a number of naval appropriation bills which called for the withdrawal of our marines and warships from Haitian soil and Haitian waters; but upon each occasion my efforts have been in vain.

Mr. President, our invasion of the Philippine Islands has cost our country hundreds of millions of dollars. Our military operations in Santo Domingo and in Haiti imposed burdens upon the American taxpayers amounting to tens of millions of dollars. What the cost of carrying on war in Nicaragua will be it is difficult to forecast. These incursions into foreign countries have not been helpful to world democracy or to the maintenance of the true spirit of democracy in our own land. There are military repercussions to-day in the United States, and they have stimulated demands from various parts of the Republic for these enormous appropriations for military purposes to which I have called the Senate's attention. Before we adjourn further demands will come having to do with so-called "preparedness."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. While the Senator is narrating the things that are going to come before us to be appropriated for, will he not take up the question of appropriations to carry on the war down in Nicaragua?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it was not my purpose in taking the floor to speak about Nicaragua or Haiti or our military operations in other countries. I intended, rather, to briefly comment upon the enormous appropriations being made to meet current expenses of the Government and the failure of the party in power to inaugurate reforms and proper economies in the administration of governmental affairs. However, I will say to the Senator that I am opposed to appropriating money to send our marines and warships to Nicaragua or to wage war against the people of that country. In my opinion the Executive was not warranted in sending the armed forces of the United States to Nicaragua, nor do I believe there is any constitutional warrant for the course of our Government in its present military operations in that country. I have prepared a resolution, which I shall offer to-morrow, asking the opinion of the Committee on the Judiciary as to the authority of the President of the United States to carry on war, as is being done in Nicaragua, without the consent of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator any doubt about that question?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator suppose that it would take the Judiciary Committee to advise the Senate that under our Constitution the President has no right to carry on war without a declaration from Congress?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, legislative bodies sometimes are indifferent to executive policies which they are not authorized to carry out and which may be, indeed, unconstitutional. As I view the proposition there should be unanimity of opinion in this body that the military and naval operations in which our Government is engaging in Nicaragua constitute war, and that no declaration of war having been made by Congress, such operations are without constitutional warrant. I had hoped that a resolution of the character indicated might challenge the attention of the executive department and the country, as well as the Senate, to the conduct of our Government in Nicaragua. I had hoped that a resolution asking for the opinion of the Judiciary Committee would result in a review of our country's military operations and a declaration that the fundamental law of our land was violated in such proceedings. An expression by the Judiciary Committee and by the Senate, I believed, would lead many of our citizens to an examination of our Constitution and the powers of the Executive, and would also arouse in them apprehensions as to a national course which, if not imperialistic per se, would constitute a precedent as well as a dangerous policy which should not be supported by the American people.

Mr. NORRIS. The string, it seems to me, which Congress still has in its possession is the control of appropriations; and I interrupted the Senator because he was talking about appropriations. The President perhaps could not carry on war in Nicaragua without appropriations being made or some money be provided by Congress.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator that he offer amendments to the Army and Navy bills when they are under consideration, providing that no part of the appropriations carried therein shall be employed for the purpose of carrying on military operations in any country without the consent of Congress. However, I fear the Senator's support would be insufficient to secure the adoption of such amendments.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose I would get the Senator's vote for that proposition.

Mr. KING. I can assure the Senator he will.

Mr. NORRIS. We would still be laboring under the difficulty that the President might refer to the Senator's speech here, in which he refers to our activities in Nicaragua as a peaceful mission, one to carry on peace, and therefore quote the Senator from Utah in support of the contention that what he was doing there with the Army and the Navy was not war.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that I have felt reluctant to engage in a discussion of our Caribbean Sea policy and our policy in Latin America while the Habana congress is in session.

Mr. NORRIS. That Congress may remain in session until we adjourn.

Mr. KING. Then I hope that some Senators before that time will—shall I say, take the lid off?—discuss that question.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Utah, in my judgment, is particularly qualified to talk on that subject, because what we are doing in Nicaragua is akin to what we have been doing in Haiti; and the Senator has some personal experience and some personal knowledge as to what we are doing down in Haiti, at least.

Mr. KING. Yes; I confess that I have.

Mr. NORRIS. And I am satisfied that the Senator, with his usual courage and eloquence, might have a great deal to do in bringing about a condition here by which we might perhaps curtail appropriations to carry on "peaceful" activities of that kind, which, as a matter of fact, it seems to me, everybody must know are nothing more or less than war.

Mr. KING. I stated a few moments ago that I had offered amendments to each naval bill for several years providing that no part of the appropriations should be employed in maintaining military forces in Haiti. I received, however, but scant support from the Members of this body.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. SHORTRIDGE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah further yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska. Then I shall be very glad to yield to my friend from California.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to suggest to the Senator, when we pass the bills that contain the appropriations providing for the use and the handling of the Navy, and particularly of the marines, if we do refuse to prevent the use of the marines for the holding of "fair elections" down in Nicaragua, if it is going to be the policy of the Government that that branch of our military service is to be used for holding elections around at different places in the world, we ought to enlarge our policy here at home. If that is the object of maintaining the marines, we could very well, with a great deal of appropriateness, send them up to Philadelphia or out to Pittsburgh.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not be led into a discussion of a question which is now before a committee of which I am a member; and I know the Senator will pardon me if I do not discuss the elections in Pennsylvania.

I yield now to the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, anticipating a very interesting address by the Senator from Utah later on touching our foreign policy, perhaps, in Nicaragua and other points named, I wish to make a kindly suggestion that, when the Senator comes to make an address, he take up and consider the case of an American citizen, a citizen of California, Mr. Charles Butters, a very loyal and more or less eminent citizen, who went to Nicaragua and there expended some $900,000 in the development of a mining property. He employed this modern "hero," Sandino, and paid him ample, generous wages for some six months or more, when one morning the said "hero," with a pistol in his hand, demanded of Mr. Butters that he turn over his property to him. Under force, stress of circumstances, glad to escape with his life, Mr. Butters turned over the property, which was thereupon very promptly wrecked.

I hope that my friend from Utah will come to consider the rights of American citizens who go lawfully into a foreign country, observe the laws of that country, and then are robbed and despoiled of their property, and then tell us whether Uncle Sam, your country and mine, should sit cowardly, pale-faced, afraid to reach out and in any way assert the rights of those despoiled American citizens.

I merely suggest that particular case. I have a detailed statement of it which I shall, on a proper occasion, lay before the Senate, and then ask the question of American Senators whether this Nation shall shut its eyes and drop its hands and scurry away and suffer that American citizen to go without any redress. Is that American doctrine?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, while the Senator is answering that, may I not put a case to the Senator so that he may answer them both at once?

Mr. KING. All right.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator is making his address I want him also to consider the case of Mr. John Baur, who, in the lawful pursuit of a legitimate business, was driving his automobile along through the State of Illinois, and was held up by a rascal—I do not know whether it was Sandino or not—but some fellow, and at the point of a gun was compelled to surrender his property into the hands of this bandit. He did so under that kind of persuasion; and then I want the Senator to be faced with the question also in regard to Mr. Baur, whether we, as American citizens here in the Senate, are going to close our eyes to the destruction of property and the robbery of American citizens by bandits and do nothing about it. Why are we not going to send the Army and the Marines and the Navy to defend those American citizens?

Mr. KING. The Senator from Nebraska might have referred to the case in Illinois—and I hope I shall be pardoned for localizing—where a few years ago a number of persons who were peacefully seeking work were assaulted, some of them were bound and driven before their captors and butchered. We might call attention to the fact that in a western State, not many years ago, 60 or 70 Chinese were killed by white persons, some of whom at least, were citizens of the United States. China did not invade the United States because of this crime against her citizens.

Mr. NORRIS. May I give the Senator an illustration where we have used our marines to protect patriotic citizens and their property? The Senator will remember—and this could be given as a precedent for sending the marines anywhere—a year or two ago a man by the name of Harry Sinclair was interested in a Teapot Dome oil reservation, and some ruthless fellows who had nothing in support of their claim except that they had made a contribution to a campaign fund were illegally in possession. Our Government, in a very patriotic and dignified way, sent its marines out there to take possession of Teapot Dome and turn it over to the rightful owner, who had bought and paid for it in various ways.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield; but I would like to conclude my remarks.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Let us not be in a hurry to put through a bill like this.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator; I should like to move to recommit it, and if I am in the Chamber when the bill is put on its passage, I shall move to recommit, with instructions to the committee to reduce the amount of the appropriation by at least $50,000,000.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I was going to observe that the President of the United States, the present occupant of the Executive chair, promptly, before ever a voice was raised in the Senate, announced to the people of the United States that the rights of the United States to the property referred to by the Senator from Nebraska would be protected, and took every step, earnestly urging the appointment of competent attorneys to bring appropriate action to assert the rights of the United States, incidentally, and, of course, to recover the property referred to.

Some gentlemen who want to be President see, or think they see, a parallel between a crime committed in Illinois and an outrage committed in Nicaragua. The crime committed in Illinois presumably will be punished, either by State or other authority. For the crime committed in Nicaragua against an American citizen, where is his redress? Who is to give him aid and comfort unless it be his country? Some have seemed to come to the point of thinking that this country is not to protect its citizens when they travel abroad.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Senators can not expect me to fully cover all questions they submit, especially when they are not connected with the matter under discussion. Briefly replying to the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], permit me to state that I should be glad when I discuss conditions in Haiti and our foreign policy, to consider at some length what obligations rest upon the Government of the United States to protest its nationals when they are in foreign countries. I might observe, however, that the invasion of Nicaragua by the United States was not for the purpose of protecting Mr. Butters, or, so far as I am advised, the property which the Senator states he owns. It is my recollection that the State Department, speaking for the President, announced some weeks ago that we were in Nicaragua to protect the Nicaraguan canal route, and because Mexico was furnishing ammunition and supplies to the liberal forces led by Sagasa. That there was any danger to the so-called Nicaraguan canal route from the domestic convulsions in Nicaragua, no serious person could believe. That Mexico was trying to establish communism in Nicaragua, and for that purpose was sending military supplies into Nicaragua, is a myth which no one now accepts. There was no reason, in my opinion, to justify the United States in interfering in the domestic affairs of Nicaragua or in taking part in factional controversies and giving military support to one faction as against another.

It may be true that some military forces or some guerrillas robbed Mr. Butters of his property, but conceding such to be true, it would not, in my opinion, justify armed intervention or the military activities which are being waged by the United States in that country. The fact is, as I understand, the rights of no American citizen were interfered with by either of the contending factions in Nicaragua prior to the time American troops were landed upon Nicaraguan soil. So far as I am advised, even then no American lost his life or property. The only case of which I have heard where an American was assaulted or his property taken is that of Mr. Butters, and I never heard of that until the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] made the statement a few moments ago.

But conceding that Mr. Butters was outraged and wronged, the Government of the United States could have demanded reparations from the Nicaraguan Government. The Senator is aware of the fact that more than 600 Americans during the past 10 or 12 years have been killed in Mexico by Mexican troops or Mexican nationals. He also knows that property of the value of hundreds of millions of dollars owned by Americans has been confiscated or destroyed by the Mexican Government or by its nationals. The Republican administration has not sent troops into Mexico. It has not waged war upon Mexico to recover damages for the death of these Americans or reparations for the great property losses sustained by thousands of American citizens.

I do not approve the view that we must send marines and warships to every country where some American has been wronged. We know that in our own country the nationals of a number of countries have been assaulted and some have been killed and the property of many has been destroyed. No country, however, has suggested that military operations should be carried on against the United States because of the wrongs committed against aliens.

If American citizens go into foreign lands and engage in business or speculation, there are certain risks they must assume. This is particularly true if they enter countries which are not as far advanced in civilization as the United States. It is known that in some countries there are large numbers of illiterates and law and order do not always prevail. It is also known that some Americans have not always been scrupulous and highly ethical in their business dealings with the people of the countries to which they have gone. The same may be said of the nationals of other countries who have engaged in business in the same countries where Americans were operating. It would be a rather dangerous doctrine to announce that the United States must send its battleships and marines wherever any adventuresome American goes. Of course, self-respecting nations will protect their nationals in their lawful pursuits, whether upon land or upon sea; but there are different ways of protection, and the mere fact that one has been despoiled of his property does not, prima facie, require his government to land troops and make war upon the country where the larceny was committed.

If Mr. Butters has sustained injuries, it is the duty of the United States to make proper representations to the Nicaraguan Government and require compensation in his behalf. I have not heard that our marines in Nicaragua were there to collect damages for any wrong done the distinguished citizen of California referred to by the Senator. But even if the wrong done to an American citizen is such as to justify a punitive expedition against the offending country, Congress must speak before war is declared and military forces landed upon foreign shores.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. One brief statement in connection with what the Senator from California said in regard to Charles Butters. He also is an old friend of mine. For over 25 years that man has been struggling against heavy odds in developing his mining property in Nicaragua. He stands as one of the foremost mining engineers of the world. His many valuable inventions in the cyanide process and the filtration process for the recovery of precious metals from ores are known to every mining man. His name is among the foremost in the mining profession, and I know that the mining men of all the Western States are back of Mr. Butters and with him heartily in obtaining the protection he needs.

Mr. KING. Delicate diplomatic questions frequently arise growing out of the alleged mistreatment of the nationals of one country by another country or its nationals. Many Americans have invoked the offices of our State Department to obtain reparations for wrongs done them by other countries or by the nationals of such countries. Our State Department now is negotiating with Mexico for the purpose of obtaining compensation for Americans who have been injured in Mexico. Commissions have been appointed to hear the evidence and pass upon the claims submitted. It is the duty of our Government, as well as every government, to use its good offices to secure indemnification for any wrong done to its citizens. American citizens have been greatly wronged in Mexico, and our Government has been derelict, in my opinion, in protecting the rights of its nationals. It has been too indifferent to the flagrant wrongs inflicted upon American citizens. But I do not support the proposition that the President alone can send our armies into Mexico and our warships into Mexican harbors for the purpose of carrying on war against Mexico. I protest against the proposition, or the view, or the theory, that the President of the United States may, without the consent of Congress, wage war against any country or engage in military operations against the same.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I just came into the Chamber. I wanted to ask the Senator what the facts were with reference to the right of this Government to send marines down there for the purpose of stamping out banditry in Nicaragua?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, so many claims are made in justification of sending our marines and war vessels to Nicaragua that it is difficult to determine upon what ground the administration rests its position. We are told now that we are operating in Nicaragua and killing persons who resist our military forces in order to get ready for an election which is to be held in Nicaragua by Nicaraguans. Apologists of the administration speak of the Nicaraguans who oppose the invasion of their country as "bandits." When Nicaraguans are killed by our marines there appears to be in some quarters a spirit of elation, and the country is promptly advised that a certain number of "bandits" were killed in resisting American troops. George Washington and the Revolutionary patriots were called "bandits" by Lord North and George the Third. They were proscribed and when captured were to be transported to England and hung.

When the United States sent large military forces and landed them upon Haitian soil many of the Haitians believed that their country was to be taken from them. They sought to repel the invasion, and more than 2,500 were killed by our occupying military forces. They were denounced as "rebels," "bandits," and "guerrillas." The same offensive epithets were applied to Aguinaldo and the Filipinos, who had extinguished Spanish authority in the Philippine Archipelago and established a government in harmony with the wishes of the Filipinos. When the United States sought to take possession of the islands these men, who a short time ago were patriots and who resisted American intervention, were denounced as "rebels" and "bandits," and many of them were killed.

Mr. President, perhaps if I or some other American were a Haitian or a Nicaraguan we would have been killed.

Mr. President, the people of Nicaragua and Haiti and the Philippine Islands and Mexico and all other countries have their views, their traditions, and their ideals. Their States may be small, the peoples may be weak, and many of them may be illiterate and below the ethical and political standards of the most civilized nations of the world. However they are entitled to their own lands and to work out their own salvation. They are entitled to their national aspirations and to the kind of government they desire. This Republic has not been made the arbiter of the world. It may not, because of its superior advantages and its great achievements, arrogate to itself the right to control other nations or to take the lives of other peoples.

This Nation may become the great moral and spiritual leader of the world, but it can not occupy this exalted position by force, by imperialism, economic or otherwise; but it may wear the crown of leadership by pursuing a just and righteous course, by patience, by confidence in humanity, by following the example of the Master who taught that he who would be greatest among men must be the least among them.

I am pleading for a policy of justice and peace, not a craven or a bullying policy. A powerful man is not humiliated by the delinquency of some weak and foolish person. Our Nation is so great and powerful that it need not wear the gaudy trappings of military power and swagger through the world seeking pretexts for quarrels and contests. There is something in the world more important than physical force, there is a moral and spiritual force; and there are ethical concepts and standards, adherence to which makes men and nations irresistible. Physical barriers yield to the moral and spiritual forces.

I am opposed to a militaristic policy. Two years ago I supported the President when he did not follow the demands of excited militarists and insist upon immediate construction of a certain number of war vessels. The President was right then. I regret that the present position of the administration is such upon its naval program that I can not give it my support.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say to the Senator that they did not send the marines to chase down the bandits or the Chinese nationals who destroyed property at Nanking, either, did they?

Mr. KING. No; we landed some of our forces, however, in Turkey, as did the Allies, when Smyrna was burning and Christians were being massacred, more than 200,000 of them being butchered by the Turks. The Standard Oil properties were protected, but we could not protect the lives of men, women, and children who were carried away into slavery by the Turks, or the lives of thousands of Armenians who were butchered by the Turks.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Does not the Senator think the time has come when the Senate ought to act on some of these resolutions regarding Nicaragua?

Mr. KING. I certainly do. I said, however, a few moments ago, that I had refrained from discussing the Nicaragua situation and the questions relating to our Latin-American policy during the conference at Habana. I hope that good will result from this Pan American gathering. The President, in my opinion, in attending the conference, desired to promote more cordial relations between this Republic and Latin America. I am glad to support him in these efforts. I desire to uphold the hands of the President in his conduct of foreign matters. I believe I would go further in upholding the Chief Executive, who is not of my political party, when dealing with foreign affairs, than I would a President of my political faith. We may be partisan when considering domestic and internal affairs, but so far as possible there should be an absence of partisanship in considering what we denominate foreign affairs. I should feel freer to criticize the conduct of a Democratic President in dealing with foreign questions than I would a Republican President.

It is a delicate matter to conduct the foreign relations of a country of the magnitude and power of the United States, particularly in view of the chaotic condition in the Orient and the somewhat unsettled conditions existing in various parts of the world growing out of the Great War. I have believed, therefore, that it was my duty, so far as I could in honor, to support the Chief Executive of my country in his administration or handling of foreign affairs. Of course, I do not mean where a policy is pursued by the executive department that I regard as dangerous and unjust and unconstitutional, that I should support those responsible for the adoption and execution of such a policy. There are questions, however, that do arise which are not fundamental and which do not involve the honor or safety of the country; questions which permit of honest differences of opinion and which no matter how decided would not seriously affect our country. There will a time come, however, if we persist in foreign policies which are inconsistent with the ideals of the Republic and dangerous to our peace and harmful to our influence in the world, when silence will no longer be possible nor honorable.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] suggested that business men who go to foreign countries and lawfully spend their money in a business way should be protected. I was wondering if the Senator from Utah does not think that if that were the case, a Senator of the United States who goes to one of those foreign countries for a little careful, quiet, lawful investigation, should not also receive some protection.

Mr. KING. I do not want to inject my own experience into this discussion. The Senator refers to the fact that several months ago I was denied the opportunity of entering Haiti because of my criticism of the policy of the United States in taking possession by military force of that country, and subjecting it from that time until the present, to American rule, supported by American bayonets. For a number of years I have urged that the American forces of occupation be withdrawn and that the Haitian people be permitted to establish a government of her own choice. I have criticized the course of the United States in waging war upon the Haitians, overthrowing their Government, abrogating their constitution and forcing upon them an alien rule. I have insisted that American marines be withdrawn from Haiti and that Haitians be permitted to enjoy their old constitution and elect their own officials and govern themselves free from the military rule of the United States.

Mr. President, the course of the United States in dealing with Haiti has aroused bitter feelings against this Republic among the people of the Central and South American countries and the Caribbean islands. The Haitians for more than a hundred years maintained their own government and discharged all international obligations. Without sufficient reason, the United States sent war vessels into Haitian waters and landed military forces upon Haitian soil. This occurred in 1915. Our troops are still in Haiti, and the Haitian people are governed not by themselves but by agencies set up by the United States and supported by the power and bayonets of this Republic.

Mr. President, the interruptions which have occurred have led me into discussions not pertinent to the theme to which I intended to briefly address myself. I shall not pursue further the questions presented by Senators. Upon some other occasion there will undoubtedly be full and free discussion concerning the foreign policy of the administration, not only in South and Central America but in other parts of the world.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment to the pending bill; but before doing that I want to say there is at least one thing that has been said by the able Senator from Utah in which I fully concur, and that is that the present moment is a highly inopportune time for discussion of our foreign policy. I noted, however, that the Senator, having said that, went ahead and discussed it. I content myself simply by saying that at the proper time there will be discussion of the Central American situation, but I do not believe the present is opportune for such discussion.

There is one other thing I want to say in this connection. The Senator from Utah criticized very strongly the idea of the United States being the policeman of the world and yet, as I recall, the Senator was one of those who was most active in undertaking to make the United States the policeman of the world by dragging it into the League of Nations. We are told now by one of the chief defenders of the League of Nations that that organization is the very thing that prevents France from entering into the arrangement which was proposed by this country for the elimination of war, it being said in effect that Articles X and XVI of the covenant of the league specifically require the use of force. So that at last it develops that the advocates of the league now admit what some of us were contending eight years ago, that it is not an instrument of peace, but an instrument of war and force and so intended.

But I had risen to introduce an amendment to the pending bill, which I now send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 26, after line 17, insert the following:

Perry's Victory Memorial Commission: For electric lighting of the Memorial Plaza and grounds, $7,374; for a utility building on the Memorial grounds for use as a public comfort station and storage warehouse, $7,000; in all, $14,374.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, the reason for the amendment is best stated in one paragraph of a letter from the Director of the Budget. It comes to us by transmission from the Executive and with a recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget. One paragraph of that statement is as follows:

The commission—

That is, Perry's Victory Memorial Commission—reports that the park of 14 acres surrounding the memorial remains in darkness at night, the lighted portions of Put in Bay being removed from it.

Many of us are rather familiar with the geography of that section and will recall that the memorial is erected on a rather narrow neck of land connecting two larger portions of the island.

Mr. OVERMAN. What memorial is it?

Mr. WILLIS. Perry's Victory Memorial at Put in Bay.

It is believed that the park should be lighted at night to afford an adequate setting for the monument, to prevent acts of vandalism, and to permit increased revenues from night operation of the memorial. The need for a utility building, combining the purposes of a comfort station for the public and a storage warehouse for equipment and supplies, has been made urgent by the parking of the grounds.

That states the facts, and we have here the recommendation of the Budget Commissioner and the President of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I understand that this amendment is provided for by legislation and also that it is approved by the Budget. Does the Senator from Ohio think it is important and necessary?

Mr. WILLIS. I am quite familiar with that section of our country. I think there is no question about it that it is very necessary.

Mr. WARREN. I believe there can be no objection made to the amendment and, so far as I may do so, I accept it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, was it estimated for?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes, by the Budget; but it came to us after we had completed the consideration of the bill in the committee. It is entirely regular.

Mr. BLAINE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRAZIER in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The Senator is discussing a subject which I think is of great interest to the country, and I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Caraway	George	Johnson
Barkley	Copeland	Gerry	Jones
Bayard	Couzens	Gillett	Kendrick
Bingham	Curtis	Gooding	Keyes
Black	Cutting	Gould	King
Blaine	Deneen	Greene	La Follette
Blease	Dill	Hale	McKellar
Borah	Edge	Harris	McLean
Bratton	Edwards	Harrison	McMaster
Brookhart	Ferris	Hawes	McNary
Broussard	Fess	Hayden	Mayfield
Bruce	Fletcher	Heflin	Metcalf
Capper	Frazier	Howell	Moses
Neely	Ransdell	Smith	Tyson
Norbeck	Reed, Pa.	Smoot	Wagner
Norris	Robinson, Ark.	Steck	Walsh, Mass.
Nye	Robinson, Ind.	Stelwer	Walsh, Mont.
Oddie	Sackett	Stephens	Warren
Overman	Schall	Swanson	Waterman
Phipps	Sheppard	Thomas	Watson
Pine	Shipstead	Trammell	Wheeler
Pittman	Shortridge	Tydings	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. Will not the Senator from Wisconsin permit us to vote on the pending amendment? I understand that there is no objection to it. The chairman of the committee has agreed to it, and if we could have the amendment disposed of, I should be very glad.

Mr. BLAINE. If there is to be no debate, I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 26, after line 17, insert:

Perry's Victory Memorial Commission: For electric lighting of the memorial plaza and grounds, $7,344; for a utility building on the memorial grounds for use as a public comfort station and storage warehouse, $7,000; in all, $14,374.

The amendment was agreed to.

[Mr. BLAINE resumed his speech, and after having spoken in all over an hour and half he yielded the floor for the day. Mr. BLAINE's speech will be published entire in the RECORD of February 3.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may we now have a final vote upon the bill?

Mr. KING. What is the pending item before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Substitute for the word "three" on line 24, page 35, the word "two," and add at the end of line 25 the following proviso: "Provided, That no attorney shall be paid more than $10,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

No officer or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation shall be paid a salary or compensation at a rate per annum in excess of $10,000 except the following: One at not to exceed $18,000, two at not to exceed $15,000 each, and one at not to exceed $12,000: Provided, That no attorney shall be paid more than $10,000 per year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are other amendments to be offered, and because of the closeness of the hour when we are to go into executive session it seems to me that it would be wise to have the bill go over for to-day.

Mr. JONES. Then the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will be considered as pending.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, we have made such progress to-day that I am sorry we can not go ahead and complete the consideration of the bill.

At this time I ask that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. COPELAND. I object.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the Senate, under the order heretofore made, will now proceed to the consideration of executive business. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 2 hours and 55 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

CONFIRMATION OF MEMBERS OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD

In executive session this day, following the confirmation of George R. Cooksey, Floyd R. Harrison, and Eugene Meyer, to be members of the Federal Farm Loan Board, on motion of Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and by unanimous consent, the injunction of secrecy was removed from the vote of confirmation.

The vote on confirmation resulted—yeas 60, nays 13, as follows:

The following pairs were announced:

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] (for) with the Senator of Oklahoma [Mr. PINE] (against).

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] (for) with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] (against).

The doors having been reopened,

SHIPMENT OF LIVE POULTRY

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 42, to amend the act of May 29, 1884, as amended, the act of February 2, 1903, and the act of March 3, 1905, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COPELAND. House Joint Resolution 112, which has passed the House, contains the amendments which have been recommended by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I ask that that joint resolution be substituted for Senate Joint Resolution 42.

Mr. CURTIS. Are they identical?

Mr. COPELAND. They are identical.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 112) to amend the act of May 29, 1884, as amended, the act of February 2, 1903, and the act of March 3, 1905, as amended, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle, and to provide means for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals," approved May 29, 1884, as amended, the act entitled "An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to more effectually suppress and prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases of livestock and for other purposes," approved February 2, 1903, and the act entitled "An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts, to permit and regulate the movement of cattle and other livestock therefrom, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1905, as amended, are hereby further amended to include within their provisions live poultry, and wherever in the said act the term "livestock" is used it shall be followed by the words "and/or live poultry"; and all the penalties, terms, and provisions in said acts, as amended, are hereby made applicable to live poultry.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate Joint Resolution 42 will be indefinitely postponed.

INVESTIGATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. DENEEN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 79, submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and reported by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with amendments, to report it favorably as proposed to be amended, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I trust that there will be no objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported with amendments, on page 3, line 4, after the word "persons," to insert the word "books," and at the end of the resolution to add a new paragraph reading:

The expenses of said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate and shall not exceed $30,000.

So as to make the resolution read:

Senate Resolution 79

Whereas there are 225,000 Indians presently under the control of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, who are, in contemplation of law, citizens of the United States but who are in fact treated as wards of the Government and are prevented from the enjoyment of the free and independent use of property and of liberty of contract with respect thereto; and

Whereas the Bureau of Indian Affairs handles, leases, and sells Indian property of great value, and disposes of funds which amount to many millions of dollars annually without responsibility to civil courts and without effective responsibility to Congress; and

Whereas it is claimed that the control by the Bureau of Indian Affairs of the persons and property of Indians is preventing them from accommodating themselves to the conditions and requirements of modern life and from exercising that liberty with respect to their own affairs without which they can not develop into self-reliant, free, and independent citizens and have the rights which belong generally to citizens of the United States; and

Whereas numerous complaints have been made by responsible persons and organizations charging improper and improvident administration of Indian property by the Bureau of Indian Affairs; and

Whereas it is claimed that preventable diseases are widespread among the Indian population, that the death rate among them is not only unreasonably high but is increasing, and that the Indians in many localities are becoming pauperized; and

Whereas the acts of Congress passed in the last hundred years having as their objective the civilization of the Indian tribes seem to have failed to accomplish the results anticipated; and

Whereas it is expedient that said acts of Congress and the Indian policy incorporated in said acts be examined and the administration and operation of the same as affecting the condition of the Indian population be surveyed and appraised: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate is authorized and directed to make a general survey of the condition of the Indians and of the operation and effect of the laws which Congress has passed for the civilization and protection of the Indian tribes; to investigate the relation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to the persons and property of Indians and the effect of the acts, regulations, and administration of said bureau upon the health, improvement, and welfare of the Indians; and to report its findings in the premises, together with recommendations for the correction of abuses that may be found to exist, and for such changes in the law as will promote the security, economic competence, and progress of the Indians.

Said committee is authorized to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, to employ such clerical assistance as is necessary, to sit during any recess of the Senate, and at such places as it may deem advisable. Any subcommittee, duly authorized thereto, shall have the powers conferred upon the committee by this resolution.

The expenses of said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate and shall not exceed $30,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

SURVIVORS OF THE MEXICAN WAR

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this day, February 2, 1928, is the eightieth anniversary of the signing of the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, which brought the Mexican War to a close. There are now five survivors of that war in the United States, according to the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions, as follows:

William F. Buckner, Paris, Mo.; Uriah Gasaway, Reelsville, Ind.; Owen Thomas Edgar, 5000 Fourteenth Street, Washington, D. C.; Richard A. Howard, Sterling City, Tex.; Samuel Leffler, St. Paul, Ind.

I felt that the Senate would be interested in this information.

ENLARGEMENT OF CAPITOL GROUNDS

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2301) to create a commission to be known as the commission for the enlarging of the Capitol Grounds, and for other purposes. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. What is the measure?

Mr. FESS. It merely provides for the creation of the Plaza commission. There is no expense attached to it at all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the chairman of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the minority leader of the Senate, the minority leader of the House of Representatives, and the Architect of the Capitol are hereby created a commission to be known as the commission for the enlarging of the Capitol Grounds. The commission shall have charge of the area between the Capitol and the Union Terminal Station, now owned by the Government, and such other parcels of land as may be added thereto, and is authorized to consider plans and estimates for the creation of a park area to enlarge the Capitol Grounds, both the plans showing the original scheme for the development of this area, and the alternative scheme for the development of this and added areas, and to recommend to the Congress such original and alternative plans or schemes with estimates of costs therefor, together with recommendations for the purchase of such other areas as may be considered necessary to give to the plans for the enlargement of the Capitol Grounds a suitable landscape treatment for the Capitol Building in relation to the landscape treatment with the proposed arrangement of the Mall area.

Mr. FESS. To-day the committee agreed unanimously to report the bill. It provides for the appointment of a commission to consist of the Vice President, the Speaker of the House, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the chairman of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the minority leaders of the House and Senate, and the Architect of the Capitol. They are to make up the commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. In accordance with the order heretofore made, I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 6 o'clock p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 3, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, February 2, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Jehovah Father, these words are with us: "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Thy truth is immortal! It is everlastingly at morning's dawn. Every upright endeavor of every upright heart is to know the truth. Holy Spirit, be with us. Tell us that there are portals more golden than eye or ear. Enable us to see in Thee that which the flesh or blood can not reveal. Speak to our souls and show us the power of Thy sacrifice and the empire of Thy love. Let Thy spiritual accent fall on their altars and beget a longing in us to be one with Thee. May we enjoy this world and after a while enjoy the world eternal. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1154. An act to authorize the use by the county of Yuma, Ariz., of certain public lands for a municipal aviation field, and for other purposes;

S. 2594. An act transferring a portion of the lighthouse reservation, Ship Island, Miss., to the jurisdiction and control of the War Department; and

S. 2752. An act to amend section 80 of the Judicial Code to create a new judicial district in the State of Indiana, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table, and, under the rule, referred to the appropriate committees, as follows:

S. 1154. An act to authorize the use by the county of Yuma, Ariz., of certain public lands for a municipal aviation field, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 2594. An act transferring a portion of the lighthouse reservation, Ship Island, Miss., to the jurisdiction and control of the War Department; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 2752. An act to amend section 80 of the Judicial Code to create a new judicial district in the State of Indiana, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PERMISSION TO POST OFFICE COMMITTEE TO SIT DURING THE SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to ask unanimous consent that that committee may sit during the sessions of the House, when necessary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, asks unanimous consent that that committee be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean through the entire Congress?

Mr. GRIEST. Throughout this session of the Congress.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Could not the gentleman make that 30 days? The gentleman can get a renewal of this if he wishes. I have not had any opportunity to confer with my fellow Members about this.

Mr. GRIEST. The reason for asking for this is because we have a large number of bills that are engaging our attention at this time and we expect to take up next week a general revision of the postal rates, which will require hearings for several weeks. I do not know how long.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection at all to the committee having that permission for 30 days, and I shall not object to a renewal of it at the end of the 30 days.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Speaker, that is satisfactory to me, and I so modify the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania modifies his request and asks permission that the committee be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House for 30 days. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GEN. DANIEL BRAY

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in respect to Gen. Daniel Bray, who furnished boats to take Washington across the Delaware River.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks I submit the following:

In the cemetery at Rosemont, Hunterdon County, N. J., rest the remains of Gen. Daniel Bray. Only an ordinary stone marks the grave, and this is the inscription thereon:

Sacred to the memory of Daniel Bray, born October the 12th, A. D. 1751, and departed this life December the 5th, A. D. 1819, in the sixty-ninth year of his age.

That is all; no mention of his military rank or of his great services to the country. Yet the man whose remains lie below did valiant services as a lieutenant and later as a captain in the war for independence. He later received the rank of general in the State militia.

His most spectacular services were rendered in preparation for the crossing of Washington's troops at McKonkeys Ferry, now Washingtons Crossing, just before the memorable battle of Trenton.

Feeling that the success of his plan would depend upon his having control of all the Durham boats between the Lehigh and Coryells Ferry, now Lambertville, Washington charged General Green with the duty of seeing that all such boats were secured and brought down the river. General Green, knowing the valor and trustworthiness of Captain Bray, assigned this special duty to him, with Capt. Jacob Gearheart and Capt. Thomas Jones as his associates in the enterprise.

So successful was this difficult and dangerous undertaking that every Durham boat was secured and safely hidden below Coryells Ferry until needed.

Captain Bray served in various battles during the struggle for liberty, and in the War of 1812 he is recorded as having a company of trained men ready for service at call.

All this and more the records show. Yet this brave officer, said to have been too modest to display his rank or his services, lies in a grave marked simply as above.

Patriotic citizens of New Jersey feel that something should be done to secure proper recognition of the great services of this modest man. They further feel that the country he served so well should erect a suitable marker or tablet to his memory. And to that end I have introduced a bill, H. R. 10420, to provide such recognition. I hope that this bill will be enacted into law by this Congress.

LAKE LEVELS

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report made by former Supreme Court Justice Hughes on the lake level cases be printed as a public document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the report made by former Justice Charles Hughes relating to lake levels be printed as a public document. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10286, the War Department appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the War Department appropriation bill, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] has 3 hours and 14 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON] has 3 hours and 38 minutes remaining.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for one hour.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations submits for the consideration of the House the bill making appropriations for the War Department for the fiscal year 1929. The subcommittee in charge of the bill began hearings on December 12, 1927. The committee recessed from December 23 to January 4, and has been in session until January 24. Sessions of the committee were held mornings and afternoons. The bill presented is not the work of any one member of the subcommittee, but, rather, the result of the entire subcommittee's judgment.

The very able chairman of the subcommittee, Representative DANIEL R. ANTHONY, Jr., of Kansas, has been unable to be present during the hearings and the committee has thus been without the benefit of his excellent judgment in military matters and his broad range of knowledge regarding the War Department and its activities. Mr. ANTHONY is undoubtedly one of the best-informed men in the Congress and in the country on all matters pertaining to the military branch of the Government. [Applause.] Because of his wide knowledge of the activities covered by this bill, his service in this House has been of the greatest value to Congress and to the country at large. I feel that I express the sentiments of every Member of the House when I say that it was with deep regret that I learned of his recent decision to retire from Congress, and I know that all of the Members join me in the hope for his early and complete restoration to his usual good health and his return to this House, should he decide to change his recent decision as to his retirement. [Applause.]

The other members of the subcommittee—Representatives CLAGUE, TABER (who has served temporarily), HARRISON, and COLLINS—have all worked long hours and conscientiously and have contributed the most valuable assistance in the preparation of the bill; and it is indeed a pleasure to acknowledge the help that has been given to the committee by its very able clerk, Mr. John Pugh. [Applause.] He is a tireless worker, has an intelligent grasp of the matters covered by this complex bill, and has been of most valuable assistance to the committee in all of its work.

The appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1929 for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department carries a total of $389,199,869. In addition to that there is a contract authorization for $7,115,000 and a reappropriation of $45,000. The 1928 War Department appropriation bill carried a total for military activities of $304,360,178.81. This included deficiency appropriations, reappropriations included in last year's bill, and a contract authorization of about four and a half million dollars.

The 1929 bill, now pending before us, carries for military activities direct appropriations amounting to $308,766,711, a reappropriation of $45,000, and a contract authorization of $7,115,000, making a total of direct appropriations, reappropriations, and contract authorizations of $315,926,711 for military activities.

The increase in direct appropriations, reappropriations, and contract authorizations for military activities in the 1929 bill over the 1928 bill amount to $11,566,532.19. For the nonmilitary activities of the Government the 1928 bill carried direct appropriations, including deficiency appropriations carried in the deficiency bill, amounting to $92,137,829. The 1929 bill, the bill now under consideration, carries for nonmilitary activities $80,433,158. This is a decrease of nonmilitary appropriations for 1929 of $11,704,671. The 1928 appropriations, however, include almost $13,000,000 of deficiency appropriations made necessary by the flood in the Mississippi Valley and to provide for the purchase of the Cape Cod Canal and for a number of items of lesser magnitude.

The net decrease in the 1929 bill as compared with all of the appropriations for the War Department for 1928, including reappropriations and contract authorizations, is $138,138.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. You show a net decrease for 1928. How much do you estimate the deficiencies will be before the end of 1929?

Mr. BARBOUR. We do not anticipate that there will be any great deficiencies in 1929.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. In 1928 there were considerable deficiencies. Why does not the gentleman give a comparison between the original bill which was put through this House for 1928 and the bill for 1929?

Mr. BARBOUR. The original bill for 1928 carried for military activities $280,618,085. This bill for 1929 carries $308,766,711. In addition to both of those sums there are reappropriations and contract authorizations for the Air Corps.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. What is the principal item in that increase?

Mr. BARBOUR. The largest item is for housing; nearly a corresponding amount is under the Air Corps, and there are a number of other substantial increases to which I shall refer later.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGHAM. What was the deficiency on account of the Mississippi floods?

Mr. BARBOUR. As I recall, it was $7,000,000 for the Mississippi floods.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has the gentleman stated the entire expenses for military activities so far authorized for 1928, including not only the original bill that was passed by the two Houses and was approved by the President, but as represented by appropriations?

Mr. BARBOUR. That would be ascertained by adding the military, including deficiencies——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I mean nonmilitary.

Mr. BARBOUR. The total for nonmilitary for 1928 was $92,137,829, which includes the deficiency appropriations.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And also included reappropriations?

Mr. BARBOUR. There were no reappropriations and contract authorizations on account of nonmilitary activities.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The grand total of appropriations, reappropriations, and authorizations and continuing appropriations was $304,000,000?

Mr. BARBOUR. For military activities; yes. That does not include the permanent annual appropriations. Those appropriations are the result of permanent and fixed legislation, and they consist mostly, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, of revolving funds.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In the comparisons which the gentleman from California is making between the appropriations and expenditures for the fiscal years 1928 and 1929 those revolving-fund appropriations are not included?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; they are not included. I am referring to money that comes out of the United States Treasury.

I will make this statement: If you examine the table at the end of the report you will find that there are apparently certain large increases and decreases as compared with 1928 appropriations, and as compared with some of the Budget recommendations. Now, those are only apparent increases and decreases, for the reason that the committee this year took certain items that are scattered all through the bill in various places and under various headings and gathered them together where they more properly belonged. On the face of the report it appears that there is an increase or a decrease, which does not actually exist, but is due to the transfers just mentioned, and the increase or decrease in those cases is only apparent.

At this point I wish to indicate, for the information of all who may be interested, the objects for which we transferred money from "Regular supplies" to "Barracks and quarters." This is the biggest of the transfers, involving a total of $2,195,944. The objects and the amounts in relation to each are as follows:

Salaries and wages pertaining to projects transferred	$700,704
Maintenance and repair of bakery, ice, and refrigeration plants	100,000
Maintenance and repair of reservation fences	30,000
Maintenance and repair of heating apparatus apart from stoves	600,000
Maintenance and repair of boiler and refrigerating-plant equipment	200,000
Maintenance and repair of electric-power equipment	100,000
Maintenance and repair of electric wiring and fixtures	412,000
Gas systems and apparatus	20,000
Rental of cold storage	33,240

The appropriation bill for 1929 provides for an Army of 12,000 commissioned officers, or thereabouts, and 118,750 enlisted men and about 6,000 Philippine Scouts. And I will say at the beginning that the 1,248 men who will be required to make up the second year's increment of the Air Corps, according to the five-year program, are included in those 118,750.

Provision is made for carrying on the housing program. This bill carries a direct appropriation of $4,784,000. It provides contract authorizations amounting to $2,115,000. These amounts will take care of all the housing authorized by Congress up to the present time. Provision is made under the title of subsistence——

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I understand Congress has authorized all the expenditures called for by the War Department's housing program.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is a matter coming within the jurisdiction of the Military Affairs Committee, and undoubtedly the gentleman from New York, who is a member of that committee, would know what that situation is.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. That is the fact.

Mr. BARBOUR. We have provided for furnishing the Army with the increased ration which was given to them last year, commencing on July 1, 1927.

Under the title or heading of "Subsistence in the Quartermaster Corps" certain items in the bill will appear on their face as showing a rather large increase. But when you consider the deficiency appropriation that was made to take care of this increased ration, which began on July 1, 1927, and the reappropriation under this head for 1928, the apparent increase is more than absorbed. With regard to this increased ration which has been furnished to the Army, placing it on an equality for the first time in years with the ration of the Marine Corps and the Navy, Congress has done, I think, one of the best things that has been done for the Army in some time. The Chief of Staff, General Summerall, when he was before our committee and was speaking of the increased ration, said that, in his opinion, it was the best thing that had been done for the Army since he had been identified with it.

Under the heading of "Army transportation" there is an increase in the 1929 bill as compared with the 1928 bill. This increase will purchase 458 motor cars at not to exceed $1,000 each; it will purchase 10 motor cars at not to exceed $2,500 each, and it will also provide trucks for test and study. It will take care of increased repairs to the large number of automobiles the Army now has on hand, made necessary by age and past enforced neglect. It will purchase a considerable number of Phillips pack saddles. This is an improved type of saddle. It may be interesting to know that at this time the Army has on hand 18,901 motor-propelled vehicles, including trucks; 6,931 of these are operating, 10,147 are serviceable or economically repairable, and 1,823 are unserviceable.

Another quartermaster item is that of horses and mules. The Budget recommended that in the year 1929 there be purchased 2,400 horses and 1,981 mules for the Regular Army. The committee in preparing the bill provided for 2,150 horses and 1,450 mules, the same number of horses and mules that were provided for in the 1928 bill.

On July 1, 1927, the Army had on hand 24,900 horses and 14,000 mules. The average age of these animals is 12 years. In reducing the Budget estimate for horses and mules the committee was confronted by the problem as to what extent motors are going to supplant horses and mules in the Army. The men who believe in horses are of the opinion that we will always require as many horses as we have at the present time. There are other outstanding officers in the Army who are of the opinion that motors will supplant horses in the Army practically to the same extent that they have supplanted them in commercial life. This whole question is receiving the attention of the War Department, and because of the fact that there is at this time an uncertainty as to just how far motors will in the future be used in place of horses the committee decided that it would not be businesslike and economical to provide for a larger number of horses and mules than was provided for in the 1928 bill.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. I am interested to know whether the figures 24,900, as given by the gentleman, include both horses and mules.

Mr. BARBOUR. No. In addition to the 24,900 horses, there are 14,000 mules.

Mr. BYRNS. Which makes a total of——

Mr. BARBOUR (interposing). Thirty-eight thousand nine hundred.

Mr. BYRNS. Are they all in use, or is a great portion of them in surplus?

Mr. BARBOUR. They are all practically in use in the Artillery and Cavalry, and some of the older horses are used for work around the posts in hauling wagons, freight, and things of that kind. So they are all practically in use. Then we have some remount stations, where a certain number of horses are always present going through the process of being fitted for the various branches of the service to which they will eventually go.

Mr. BYRNS. I take it for granted that is an inconsiderable number in proportion to the total number.

Mr. BARBOUR. Oh, yes; that is really an inconsiderable number.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman has stated that this bill provides for the purchase of 2,150 horses?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; and 1,450 mules.

Mr. BYRNS. That does not add to the number, but I presume is necessary in order to keep the complement up to what it is now.

Mr. BARBOUR. This number will not quite meet the requirements needed to keep it up to where it is at the present time. I will further say to the gentleman from Tennessee that 2,400 is the number recommended by the Bureau of the Budget and we provide for 2,150.

Mr. BYRNS. The reason for my inquiry was that I had heard we had about twice too many horses and mules, and that was the reason I was interested in asking the gentleman whether they were all in service or not.

Mr. BARBOUR. The testimony given to the committee by the representatives of the War Department was that these animals were all in service and that they needed more.

Mr. BYRNS. Does not the gentleman think it would be much cheaper if the Army would go as far as possible to motor service and save the cost of the upkeep of these animals and the necessity of replacing them?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am not prepared to say. I have seen figures indicating motorization would be cheaper. I should say, however, that the original cost would probably be a little more, because a truck or automobile would cost more probably than six horses. The price at which horses are purchased is $165 a head. Then, of course, there is transportation and they have to go through a period of three months in quarantine, as you might call it, and are then ready to go into the different branches of the service.

Mr. COLLINS. When the gentleman gives the number of horses and mules he is not taking into consideration the number privately owned and for which the Government pays subsistence, bedding, and so forth.

Mr. BARBOUR. Some of the officers below the rank of major own their own horses, as they are entitled to under the law.

Mr. BYRNS. Are there many of those?

Mr. COLLINS. There is an item of $225,000 carried in this bill for the purpose of paying so much per month for some one to take care of those horses.

Mr. BARBOUR. It depends upon the viewpoint. Compared with the total number of horses in the Army the number is very small.

There is also an increase in the item of barracks and quarters under the Quartermaster Corps. This is due mainly to increased repairs. We have not been keeping up the repairs on our Army buildings during the past few years and we have now reached the point where we have got to spend more money for repairing these buildings. The total replacement value of all the buildings owned by the Army to which this appropriation applies, exclusive of the Philippines, is $230,800,000, and the item carried in this bill for repairs for the fiscal year 1929, for all of these buildings is a little less than 2½ per cent of the replacement value of the buildings.

This item under barracks and quarters will also purchase a certain amount of new furniture for officers' and noncommissioned officers' quarters and will also purchase some steel wall lockers to equip some of the barracks at various posts.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. Does the committee provide any funds for the repairing or building of new quarters in the Canal Zone?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; the construction program in the Canal Zone is being carried along.

Under the Signal Service there is an increase in this bill over 1928, and this increased amount of money will go principally to the activities of the Signal Corps with relation to radio development and matters of that kind, as well as engineering research work. It will also equip with signal-service apparatus the second Air Corps increment. Real progress is being made, I may say, by the Signal Corps in developing radio communication and radio instruments. The Signal Corps supplies the Air Corps with all of its instruments for communication between airplanes and the ground. It also develops instruments used in the navigation of airplanes and renders a distinct service to the Air Corps. For this reason the Signal Service appropriations have been kept up pretty well in the last few years and have not been decreased.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I noticed in the bill the other day that the land in Alaska formerly held for the purpose of the telegraph line that was operated by the Signal Service has been abandoned. Does the Signal Service maintain radio communication in Alaska?

Mr. BARBOUR. It maintains a cable line from Seattle to Alaskan points, and then in interior Alaska it maintains both land lines and radio stations. Some of those stations, I will say, have been recently abandoned.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But it does operate radio station for fast communication?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; it does, and it makes a very good showing in that respect, I will say to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So I understand.

Mr. BARBOUR. Coming now to the Air Corps, this bill making appropriations for the fiscal year 1929 carries a total of $24,817,268 in direct appropriations for the Air Corps and a contract authorization of $5,000,000. The 1928 bill carried a direct appropriation of $20,396,300 and a contract authorization of $4,495,000. This is a considerable increase.

The money provided in the 1929 bill will purchase for the Air Corps during the fiscal year 1929, 473 new planes.

They will be short, according to the testimony that was submitted to the committee by Assistant Secretary Davison and General Fechet, 27 bombers. They will be 27 bombers short of the number they had hoped to buy, but they will be over their requirements in observation planes and some of the other types under the five-year program. The War Department in its primary estimates asked for 50 bombers. The Bureau of the Budget recommended 23, and the testimony before the committee showed that the bomber is still in an experimental stage. The Assistant Secretary of War for Aviation testified that during the year 1929 they will have perfected the bomber to the point where they will be ready to go ahead and build in considerable numbers, or at least enough to meet the requirements. The committee felt that so long as the bomber was still in an experimental stage we would be governed and guided by the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget, and we have therefore appropriated for 23 bombers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Was there any testimony to indicate whether or not the Air Service has adopted certain types of planes which they will continue to use during the five-year period?

Mr. BARBOUR. They have, as I understand, standardized most of the planes or practically all of them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The pursuit and observation planes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Pursuit, observation, and training. Of course, as they go on and as there are developments which would perfect or improve the existing types, they undoubtedly in the new construction would adopt such improvements.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How many bombers have they in service now, if the gentleman remembers?

Mr. CLAGUE. Around 80.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the old type with some of the new type which they are buying?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is what they have on hand now, and this bill will provide 23 more.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But they have not decided on that type yet.

Mr. BARBOUR. Not fully.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think that is a very proper thing to do at this time.

Mr. BARBOUR. Assistant Secretary Davison was of the opinion they would have this type perfected during the fiscal year 1929 and would be ready to go on a construction program, but the committee felt, in view of the fact it was at this time in the experimental stage, we had better follow the recommendation of the Budget.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With respect to the technical division in Dayton, was there any increased appropriation for that work this year?

Mr. BARBOUR. As I recall, that is the same as last year. That work will be carried on as it has been heretofore.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is all they asked for?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is all they asked for.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. NEWTON. We have an Air Corps Reserve, and in the Seventh Corps Area the reserve flying officers have to go to Kansas City, I think it is, for their training in flying.

Now, it appears that there is a shortage in the department for necessary planes, which prohibits them from having more planes at Fort Snelling.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think I can explain that. The bill provides for new planes for the Air Corps Reserve. They are washing out the old planes and providing new ones, and naturally you reach a point where they are short of planes. That is recognized, and they will correct it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand they are furnishing the National Guards——

Mr. NEWTON. I am speaking of the Air Corps Reserves. The States of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Minnesota have 350 members of the reserve flying corps, or prospective members; they are not in a position to go to Kansas City or some other place in that vicinity for training, but they are in a position to go to a nearer point. I think that in the vicinity of the Twin Cities there are 150 that could make use of these planes.

Mr. BARBOUR. That would be an administrative matter, something that we could not plan for in the bill.

Mr. NEWTON. When I took it up with the Assistant Secretary for Aviation, he said that Congress has not furnished them in sufficient numbers.

Mr. BARBOUR. We gave them all they asked for with the exception of a few bombers.

Mr. NEWTON. It seems to me that when you have officers in the flying corps it is no economy to withhold from them in the immediate locality a sufficient number of planes so that they can fly now and then.

Mr. BARBOUR. If you go into the plan of establishing an air reserve corps unit wherever you can gather a number of reserve officers together you are going to have a lot of units. This is a peculiar branch and an expensive branch, and the department does not advocate large numbers of training fields.

Mr. NEWTON. Take Fort Snelling, where they have a general military post and a flying field adequate in every way, it seems to me that the War Department ought to furnish it with planes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would like to suggest that we need flying fields. I landed at Duluth about two months ago on a private field, and the poor fellow did not know where he was coming out—had to land in a potato patch.

Mr. NEWTON. Did the gentleman fly down to Minneapolis? There he would have found one of the best flying fields.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; but I suggest that at Duluth they ought to have a flying field.

Mr. NEWTON. If the gentleman had gone to Minneapolis he would have found a flying field unexcelled.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I telegraphed to Duluth, asking where the flying field was, and they answered at the foot of South Twenty-sixth Street, but I could not find Twenty-sixth Street from the air. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARBOUR. It would seem to me that the question raised by the gentleman from Minnesota is one that would come under the administrative authority of the War Department rather than having a place in the bill.

We have on hand at present 831 planes in the Army Air Corps, exclusive of wood types, and 480 are now on order. That was November 1, 1927, making a total of 1,311. It is estimated that the total on hand June, 1928, will be 1,195 planes, and the total on hand June, 1929, when these funds are used, 1,398 planes.

The increase of the total on hand does not correspond with the number provided for in each bill because of the washout of old planes. We have increased the appropriations for seacoast defenses. The appropriation will provide for continuing the work on the 16-inch gun battery at Panama. Two guns are already installed, and two on the ground ready to be installed. We provide for additional fire-control apparatus, plotting rooms, magazines, railway, and everything that goes into the equipment of one of these big 16-inch gun batteries.

Provision is made for the emplacement of the 14-inch railway guns at Panama. Provision is made for the emplacement for aircraft guns at Panama. Provision is made in this bill for beginning the installation of two more 16-inch guns at Hawaii. We have at Fort Weaver two 16-inch guns. The project calls for four 16-inch guns. This bill carries the money to begin the installation of the two additional 16-inch guns in Hawaii.

Provision is made for the installation of fire-control apparatus at Chesapeake Bay, Sandy Hook, and Los Angeles. Those projects were carried in the appropriation bill for 1928. The money carried in this bill will complete the fire-control installation at Chesapeake Bay for the guns already installed, and it will carry on the work at Sandy Hook and place Los Angeles in a very good condition.

Provision is also made in this bill for the purchase of a certain amount of single-conductor cable, used in connection with our mine defenses, and a very interesting story is connected with this single-conductor cable. Heretofore we have been using in our mine defenses a cable composed of 19 strands.

This cable had to carry a considerable amount of insulation, which deteriorated rapidly, and was very expensive to install in the beginning and expensive to maintain. An enlisted man in the Coast Artillery Corps, Master Sergt. Paul R. Nelson, a graduate of the Coast Artillery School, has invented a single-conductor cable, a cable with a single strand, that will do all of the work, and do it better, than the old 19-strand cable. It costs much less to install it, and it costs much less to maintain it after it is installed, and when we get this new single-conductor cable installed in all of our mine defense systems, it will result in the saving of a million dollars every 10 years to the Government in maintenance alone. This single-conductor cable as I mentioned a few moments ago is the invention of an enlisted man in the United States Army. I think he is entitled to full credit for this very wonderful work.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Is there any method that the gentleman knows of—I may say that I do not know of any—of compensating or rewarding the personnel of the Army for making inventions of that kind which prove of such great value to the Government?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, when one of our enlisted men or one of our commissioned officers develops anything new, far better than anything we have ever had before, that places our Army in that respect far ahead of any other army in the world, there should be some way of rewarding that enlisted man or that commissioned officer, some way of recognizing the exceptional service that has been rendered. That, however, appears to me to be more a matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, of which the gentleman is a member, than the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I am very glad the gentleman realizes that something should be done. I think we should adopt some system by which there could be some reward granted to men of this kind. As I understand it, there is no provision for reward in such cases.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand that is true. There have been officers in the Air Corps who have made the most wonderful inventions. I call to mind now the invention of First Lieut. George Goddard, of the Air Corps, in the field of night photography, a most remarkable invention. Yet Lieutenant Goddard is still a first lieutenant in the Air Corps, enthusiastic about his work, and in my opinion there should be some way of recognizing distinguished service of that kind.

We come now to the subject of ammunition. Each year just before the appropriation bills come in, particularly the bills relating to the War Department and the Navy Department, it seems that we must have some sensation sprung in the country about our national defenses. A year or two ago the soldiers of the Army were being housed in buildings that were not fit for human beings to live in. That is being corrected. A year ago statements were published in the newspapers that the soldiers of our Army were starving to death, when the report of the Surgeon General of the Army to our committee showed that the health of the Army was never in better condition than it was at that time. This year the sensation seems to revolve around our munition reserve, and statements were made in the press but a short time ago that we did not have ammunition enough in this country to last an Army of a million men 30 minutes in action.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Was that from somebody in authority in the War Department?

Mr. BARBOUR. That statement was published in a way that made it appear that it was with the authority of the War Department.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And that it was official?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; that was the impression that most people got from reading it. The Secretary of War and other officers of the War Department testified to our committee that it was not with the authority of the War Department, that they never issued any such statement, and that it was not true.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, but the gentleman does not intend to create the impression that the housing condition in the Army is satisfactory?

Mr. BARBOUR. No. We are improving it, and in this bill we carry funds for all of the housing that has heretofore been authorized.

Mr. BLAND. I am not attaching any criticism to this committee.

Mr. BARBOUR. We can not appropriate for this housing program until it is authorized.

Mr. BLAND. The conditions are serious. I know that in my own district there are places that are mere fire traps, and they ought to be remedied. I have been trying to get the War Department and the Committee on Military Affairs to do something, but I have not been able to thus far.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Is it not a fact, so as to allay any question about this housing situation, that Congress has appropriated every dollar that the War Department has recommended?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is true.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And that the War Department has recommended all that they could reasonably handle; in other words, there is a limit to the contracting possibilities of the Quartermaster General's Department. I am not sure exactly what the figure is, but it runs up to ten or twelve million dollars that are now under authorization.

I believe that we are proceeding as fast as it is possible reasonably to proceed with the available facilities in accomplishing the proper housing of the Army and carrying out the program by which we are utilizing the sale of the surplus real estate.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman certainly knows that you will never be able to house the Army out of the proceeds of the sale of real estate. The gentleman will find that out from the War Department if he looks into it. He will find out that the housing program contemplates an expenditure of $110,000,000 and that the maximum to be realized out of the sale of real estate, if all of it could be sold at the highest price, would be approximately only $37,000,000. It is an absolute impossibility, as the gentleman will be advised in the War Department, to finance the proper construction of housing by limiting the expenditure only to the amount received from the sale of surplus real estate.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I shall not attempt to contradict the gentleman as to the amount yielded by the sales of real estate, but it was contemplated that it would be a much greater figure than $37,000,000. The point I make is that we are proceeding with that just as fast as we reasonably can, and if from the sales of real estate we do not procure enough to house the Army as it should be housed, we can take it up further at a later date, and then it will be time, when the proceeds of the sales of real estate do not seem to be sufficient, to have direct appropriations made from the Treasury.

Mr. BLAND. When the men are occupying shacks and buildings that are practically fire traps, I submit that probably the reason why the gentleman has not made any recommendation or submitted it from the War Department is that that is all they could get the Budget to recommend.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. If the gentleman has any program other than the program that is being pursued, he should indicate it. If he has any concrete suggestion, a concrete, constructive program to submit to the Military Committee or to the War Department as to how to proceed more speedily in the solution of this problem, I think he should submit it. No Members of the House are more in sympathy and more familiar with the project of adequately housing the Army than the members of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLAND. I have taken that up with the War Department for the last three years, and I have also discussed it with the Committee on Military Affairs, which has housing in mind, and I understand, construing the recommendations of the War Department, that they are getting nowhere.

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. WURZBACH. I want to make a statement confirming what the gentleman from Virginia has said. General Cheatham stated before the committee that the Government would save 30 per cent if a comprehensive building program were entered into by the Government; that the saving would be made by reason of a larger contract. I think the gentleman from Virginia is correct in his statement.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, when this interesting discussion began, relative to the housing conditions, I had started to discuss the subject of munitions reserve.

In view of recent statements that have been given wide publicity, the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the War Department has made a careful investigation of the ordnance reserves of the Army. Much of the information received by the subcommittee is confidential. The subcommittee finds that in the matter of equipment of rifles, machine guns, and artillery we are very well supplied. This equipment is comparable with the equipment of the principal nations of the world and is of about the same quality and efficiency. Investigation and study is being carried on with a view to development of improved types, and real progress is being made along these lines.

As to the ammunition reserve carried on hand, it can be said that it is in a serviceable condition. There is at all times deterioration, but this is being carefully watched and guarded against.

The amount of the reserve necessary to have on hand is based on a certain program of the War Department, which, of course, is based on certain assumptions, and the question of adequacy goes right back to those assumptions. The War Department plans relative to ordnance reserves are being continually studied and may be changed at any time.

The question of adequacy of the reserve is also dependent upon the ability of the industries of the country to reach a volume of production that will meet current requirements. The shorter the time required for our industries to reach this point in production, the smaller the reserve that it will be necessary to carry on hand. In order to shorten this period the War Department now has under consideration the policy of each year placing so-called educational orders with certain manufacturing concerns which will enable them to keep in a condition which will allow for more rapid expansion in case of an emergency. This will materially shorten the period necessary to bring production up to requirements.

The character of operations that we would have to carry on in case of war, our geographic position, and other elements, enter into the question of adequacy of ammunition reserves. I do not believe that it is contemplated that the United States would in the beginning carry any war to foreign soil, although that might be necessary at a subsequent time.

Recent publications to the effect that we are practically without ammunition reserve in this country are entirely unwarranted by the facts. In some respects our ammunition reserves are in very satisfactory condition. After a careful investigation the subcommittee on appropriations for the War Department feels quite satisfied that so far as our ammunition reserves are concerned there is no cause for alarm on the part of anyone. Consideration and study of this very complex question will be continued by the War Department, and any plan that may be submitted will have the serious consideration of Congress.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. NEWTON. There has been, of course, I presume, a deterioration of the reserve carried over from the World War?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes. There always is.

Mr. NEWTON. And there has been a using up of this reserve year by year, and it would seem to me that we must figure, after having used up a large portion of our reserve, on increasing our supply from time to time in the future if we are going to carry an adequate reserve.

Mr. BARBOUR. This bill carries an increase, not large. It will provide, for instance, about 70,000,000 rounds of .30-caliber ball ammunition. It will also provide other types. Then we are having a great deal of experimentation. We are experimenting with field pieces. Our Ordnance Department is making real progress in the development of field guns that are far superior to anything we had in the World War. As the tests go on and the efficiency of these new guns is proved, many of them will require new types of ammunition. It is a complex question.

Mr. NEWTON. It is; but this, of course, remains true, that in the event of emergency it will take a substantial time to get any real capacity production of those heavy shells.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; of course, as to some of the types of ammunition, particularly the heavier types, we are not at this time up to the requirements for a well-equipped Army of 1,000,000 men. In other respects we are in very good condition. It is estimated that it will take six months under present conditions to bring our production in this country up to the point where it would meet requirements, and that is estimated on the basis of ammunition expended during the World War. For the heavier types it will take possibly a year or longer.

But we should take into consideration the fact that we are geographically isolated. We have no great military power on our borders. It would be necessary, before we were in danger in this country, for some enemy to come across the sea and land large forces on our shores. That would mean that our Navy would have to be wiped out of existence before the enemy could land. Surely we have a certain amount of ammunition on hand, and surely we can stand them off for some time with no additional production. An enemy is not going to land on our shores right away by any means, and there will be a period of time during which our industries can be getting upon a large production basis.

These proposed educational orders which the War Department is planning now to issue to the manufacturing industries of the country are calculated to place them in a position so that each year they will be able to furnish the War Department with ammunition of the type required. Having the machinery and the trained men on hand, the time required for those industries to get into the production necessary to meet requirements will be materially shortened.

Mr. NEWTON. Is the department carrying on any study through a commission such as was suggested in the publicity that was given a month or six weeks ago, at the time an article appeared in one of the local papers?

Mr. BARBOUR. There is a board in the War Department that is studying this question all the time.

Mr. NEWTON. But I understood they were going to call to their assistance a commission of civilians as advisers.

Mr. BARBOUR. I could not say as to that, but that proposition was suggested, as I recall, in one of the articles that was published.

Mr. NEWTON. I am glad the committee is going over it so carefully, because it seems to me that when you use up munitions the way they were used in one day in a World War major engagement we ought to consider that very carefully.

Mr. BARBOUR. The committee does not intend to convey the impression that we have a full reserve on hand of all types, according to the War Department's program, but as to some types we are quite well supplied and in other types we are fairly well supplied. Taking the whole situation together, there is no cause for alarm, in the opinion of the committee.

Mr. NEWTON. In those where they are not so well supplied is the appropriation being increased so they can be brought up?

Mr. BARBOUR. Some of those types, as I recall, are types which will be used in guns with which they are now experimenting for the purpose of development, but, as I have already stated, as to some of our types we are very well supplied. It is a complicated question. The committee did go into it very carefully, and most of the testimony we received was confidential testimony of the War Department and therefore was not published in the hearings, but it is on file in the records of the Committee on Appropriations.

For chemical warfare the committee has provided the same amount as in 1928. The 1928 bill provided for 30,000 new gas masks. The Bureau of the Budget recommended 21,000 new gas masks for 1929 and the committee increased this number to 24,667. That is an odd figure, but in the opinion of the committee the Chemical Warfare Service will probably be able to save enough money to bring the production of gas masks for 1929 to something like 25,000. The Chemical Warfare Service will also carry on tests for protective clothing, which it is developing for protection against mustard gas.

The National Guard is very well taken care of in the bill. There is an increase in the appropriation for the National Guard over 1928. The present bill will provide for about 2,000 additional men in the guard for the purpose of rounding out existing units. The present authorized strength of the National Guard is 186,260 men, and the 1929 bill will add about 2,000 more. It is the plan of the Militia Bureau to reach about 190,000 men in 1930 and to go on up until the guard reaches a strength of 210,000 men. This bill provides for 48 days of armory drills and 14 days at camps.

For the Organized Reserves we have provided 14 days' training for 16,000 men. Last year we provided 14 days' training for 16,382 men. The Bureau of the Budget recommended this year 14 days' training for 15,125 men. Representatives of the Organized Reserve Association asked for the training of 20,000 men, and the committee has provided for the training of 16,000 trainees for not to exceed 15 days. We also provide for the training of 600 officers of the Organized Reserves for a period of more than 15 days. Last year we provided for the training of 627 officers of the Organized Reserves for periods of more than 15 days. This number includes the 110 Organized Reserve officers who will go into the Army Air Corps for one year's intensive training.

There has been considerable discussion as to the adequacy of the appropriations for the Organized Reserves. Perhaps most of you have received communications from friends at home urging larger appropriations for the Organized Reserves. I want to say to the House that the Organized Reserves present to our committee one of the most difficult problems we have to contend with. On the one hand we have the War Department, which wants to maintain a well-balanced and well-rounded organization so far as the Army, the National Guard, the reserves, and all other components are concerned.

Then we have those very fine gentlemen, members of the Organized Reserve Association, who annually come before our committee and ask for the training of a much larger number of trainees than we have previously trained. We have as yet been unable to get from the advocates of training a larger number of reserves definite figures which would warrant us in recommending appropriations for the training of a larger number than we have been carrying along. The Organized Reserves are composed of men in civilian life. Many of them are former World War officers and many are graduates of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps at the schools and colleges. It is difficult for us to find out just how many of these men will go to the camps and just how many of them should go to the camps. There are many men in the Organized Reserves who are earnest and enthusiastic officers. They are valuable men to the War Department and to the Government. They earnestly carry on their studies every day of the year, and when the time comes for the training camps those men are ready and prepared to go and take the 14 days' training that will be of real benefit to them and make it possible for the Government to get a return of 100 cents on the dollar expended.

There is another considerable number of reserve officers who do not keep up their studies during the year, and if they go to training camp they are not properly prepared to take the training and get the full benefit of it.

So the question we have had to solve, or try to solve, is just how many of these men should go to the camps. I want to say that the feeling of the committee toward the Organized Reserves is very friendly, but because of this indefinite, uncertain information that has come to us—that is, indefinite and uncertain so far as basing appropriations upon it is concerned—we are loathe to recommend more trainees than we have provided for in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has consumed one hour.

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield myself another half hour, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be recognized for an additional 30 minutes, the allotment of time being under his control.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARBOUR. In this connection I simply want to quote briefly from the testimony of Major Wainwright, who is the Regular Army officer in the War Department in charge of the reserves' work. This is his language given to the subcommittee:

> This committee has in the past provided ample money for training reserves. I do not think any great harm will result to the reserves with this appropriation.

He was then speaking of the Budget recommendation. The committee has increased that so as to provide for 875 more trainees than Major Wainwright was speaking about.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. During the past year I had a great deal of correspondence from reserve officers. I followed it up very carefully, and I think most of it was inspired by the Regular Army men who are assigned to this work; I suppose with the best of motives. But they made quite a fuss about reducing the number of days of training from 15 to 14. A careful examination among the reserves showed that they hardly noticed it; but these men made quite a lot of fuss about it, and I am of the opinion that was all inspired.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the committee has made a suggestion to the War Department and the Secretary of War has advised the committee that orders have already been issued to carry its suggestion into effect. The suggestion is that an investigation be made of the reserves, right down through the corps areas and into the units; that the War Department require the corps area commanders to require the Regular Army officers on duty with the units to submit reports to the corps area commanders and then to the War Department, showing how many reserve officers these Regular Army officers are working with, who are in branches that should be trained—and some of the branches it is not intended to train at all—how many are keeping up their work, how many might be classed as inactive because of lack of interest in their work; and to furnish information along several different lines, so that next year we will have a more definite and concrete picture of the Organized Reserves than we have ever had before.

One trouble has been that the War Department officers in charge of the reserves have not all this detailed information. They say the reserve activities are carried on through the corps area commanders and much of this informataion is in the hands of the corps area commanders, if it exists at all.

So we have asked them to gather this information and have it ready for our committee next year, and the Secretary of War has assured us that orders have already gone out to carry this suggestion into effect.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I still maintain that the position I have always taken since the war is correct. I believe it is contrary to the spirit of what we intended to be our reserve and National Guard to figure the penny and the mileage and to pay high salaries in the higher ranks as we are doing in the reserves.

I do not want to say it is the general rule, but I have heard and have received some mail which would also indicate that the greater interest is in the pay allowance rather than anything else, and perhaps we are going a little too far on that.

Mr. BARBOUR. The testimony given to the committee shows that the average pay to reserve officers who go to training camps for not to exceed 15 days' training, their pay and their allowances and their mileage and everything is about $132 for the two weeks. A captain in the reserve going to training camp for not to exceed 15 days will draw somewhere in the neighborhood of $150 for the two weeks.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman will perhaps remember that I made a statement during the consideration of the last War Department appropriation bill, and shocked my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT], about the padding of the pay roll. This summer some militia officers were indicted in one of our States and there has been a very wholesome change in my own State in this respect.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I will say to the gentleman that my only familiarity is with the National Guard of our own State.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That was in the old days.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And even in the old days I do not think there were practices of the kind the gentleman refers to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But in the old days we did not pay them per drill. That is the vice of the whole thing.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. How many reserve officers are there?

Mr. BARBOUR. According to the latest figures, approximately 110,000.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. That is quite an increase over last year?

Mr. BARBOUR. An increase of about 5,000.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. How many of them took the 15 days' training?

Mr. BARBOUR. Last year 16,382.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And how many applied for it?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not know. The committee was not furnished information as to that.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I notice that the appropriation for the Organized Reserve is reduced $102,000 from last year. Is that because it was thought it was not necessary to afford as many men an opportunity for training?

Mr. BARBOUR. We do not afford the opportunity for so many men.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. What is the number provided for in this bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. Sixteen thousand—382 less than provided for in the 1928 bill.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And the War Department thinks that is sufficient?

Mr. BARBOUR. They have so informed the committee. The fact of the matter is the War Department informed the committee that the Budget provision was satisfactory.

Now, as for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, the activity carried on at the schools and colleges, provision is made for 125,141 students. Many of you have received communications in regard to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps in relation to the commutation in lieu of uniforms. Heretofore some institutions have drawn a uniform equipment from the Government. Certain institutions preferred a distinctive uniform of better quality and wanted to pay more money for it. The Government had been allowing $36 every two years for each man in an institution of this kind. Last year the committee cut the commutation allowance down to equal the value of the issue in kind, which was $7.15. There has been a great deal of complaint from schools that heretofore have had the larger commutation, and the War Department and the Bureau of the Budget recommended this year that enough money be appropriated to provide the former commutation of $36 for two years, or an average of $18 a year, and to pay $30 one year and $6 the second year. That would restore the commutation to the advanced student in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. That was the recommendation of the War Department, and I understand it will be satisfactory to those institutions that have complained about the rather drastic cut that we made last year.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. The course at the colleges is divided into two parts?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. And in that division naturally the freshmen and sophomores will come in for the lower grades?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. And they received 30 cents a day commutation?

Mr. BARBOUR. They all receive 30 cents a day commutation for subsistence whether they are advanced or basic students.

Mr. BURTNESS. The senior students receive 70 cents a day commutation?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is when they go to the summer camps. When they go to the summer camps they are allowed a ration valued at 70 cents a day and transportation.

Mr. BURTNESS. And subsistence allowance is the same for all four years?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; when they are members of the unit.

Mr. BURTNESS. Why should not the freshmen and the sophomores receive as much allowance for uniforms as the juniors and seniors?

Mr. BARBOUR. If I answered the gentleman it would not be a satisfactory answer.

Mr. BURTNESS. I wondered why there was a difference in the allowance?

Mr. BARBOUR. As our friend Sam Winslow once said, "Do you want an answer to that question, or is the purpose of the question answered by the asking of it?" [Laughter.]

I will say this to the gentleman, that the lower-grade students are men who are generally required by the institution to take the military training. In many institutions they take military training, football, boxing, or swimming. They are required to take some physical training.

A good many take the R. O. T. C. training, and those in the lower grades are generally younger men. When they get into the advanced grades the training is elective. The men who are going into that are men interested in the work and who want to pursue a military course. They become officers, and naturally the officer expects to have possibly a little better uniform than the privates.

Mr. BURTNESS. The $7.15 is an annual allowance.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is annual.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is the theory of giving the students 30 cents a day?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is in the way of compensation for the time they give to military work while they are taking these courses at the universities or colleges.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The R. O. T. C. is, of course, the basis of the whole reserve officers' structure. How many R. O. T. C.'s were there last year?

Mr. BARBOUR. This bill will provide for 125,141. There were something over 120,000 last year.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. How many of them were actually commissioned last year?

Mr. BARBOUR. About 5,000.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Has the gentleman anything to show whether these young men after they get their commissions proceed and take their training for the next two or three years following the issuance of the commissions?

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman will find different groups. Some of them become very enthusiastic officers of the Organized Reserve, and others do not. Lots of them do not even take their commissions in the Organized Reserves, but it is generally the advanced students who do. They are the men who are interested in the military training and who want to follow it up, and they are the men this increased commutation will be paid to.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Does the gentleman think there are enough of them following up their course to a conclusion and taking their commissions to really justify us in keeping up this whole system of reserve officers' training?

Mr. BARBOUR. That would be my view of the matter; yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is the appropriation carried in this bill in conformity with the recommendations of the War Department?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. I mean in so far as the Reserve Officers' Training Corps is concerned?

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman means the War Department?

Mr. BRIGGS. Yes; the allowance for commutation of uniforms, and so forth.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; that is recommended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. BRIGGS. And it provides readjustment and increase over the allowances of last year?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Just about to what extent?

Mr. BARBOUR. We have been allowing an average of $7.15 a year. This will allow to advanced students $36 over a period of two years; that is, $30 the first year and $6 the second, upon the theory that a uniform will last two years. It will cost in the beginning about $30. That is all of the commutation he would receive anyway, even though it does cost more. Then the second year the $6 will provide for renovation and for caring for the uniform and putting it in shape.

Mr. BRIGGS. And they have the same allowances on the first and the second year?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes. They get $7.15 a year.

Mr. BRIGGS. In other words, it means an increase over two years, and a compromise basis is obtained from what you had before and what is in this bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand that this will be a satisfactory arrangement.

Mr. BRIGGS. With all of the schools and colleges who handle this?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is my understanding.

Mr. BRIGGS. You have been conducting these activities?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. What is carried in this bill, however, does not restore the situation to what it was more than a year ago, does it?

Mr. BARBOUR. Not more.

Mr. BURTNESS. It does not restore it to the basis that existed prior to last year?

Mr. BARBOUR. No. I understand that in some institutions young men who were taking the training in the lower grades were allowed a greater commutation than they are now receiving. Many of those young men were taking training because they had to take some physical exercise. They were not the young men who were following this work up because they were interested in it, and who later would become of value to the Government.

Mr. BURTNESS. Is not this the first time that you are in any bill making any distinction between the first two years and the last two years of the four-year training in so far as commutation for uniforms is concerned?

Mr. BARBOUR. Only so far as commutation is concerned. All the way through there is a distinction made between the advanced students and the basic students. That distinction exists all the way through this legislation.

Mr. BURTNESS. But I am talking about the students in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps work. Until a year ago were they not allowed the same commutation for uniforms, regardless of the class they were in. That is, for the first two-year period they receive $30 plus $6 the second year, and when they go into the second section they received the same allowance of $30 the first year and $6 the second year for renovation?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is my understanding of the situation that prevailed at the institutions where commutation was paid. A lot of the institutions have not drawn this commutation. They have taken the issue in kind.

Mr. BURTNESS. Of course, the gentleman realizes that $30 will buy only a very poor uniform and a couple of shirts, and that is all there is to it. It does not purchase anything else.

Mr. BARBOUR. Oh, there is no reason why the taxpayers should entirely clothe these students.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Perhaps the gentleman from North Dakota thinks that we should give them all a tuxedo and try to make hard-boiled soldiers out of them.

Mr. BURTNESS. Oh, the gentleman from North Dakota is not contending any such thing; but the gentleman does feel that this is the cheapest insurance the Nation has, and that it would encourage these young fellows going from their various homes to attend school if they could be given enough to at least buy a khaki uniform and a couple of shirts during the two years they serve.

Mr. BARBOUR. But they get those.

Mr. BURTNESS. Preparing themselves to defend the country.

Mr. BARBOUR. They get those.

Mr. BURTNESS. They can not get them for $7.15 a year.

Mr. BARBOUR. They get them. The hearings show that they get a complete outfit. Those who take the issue in kind get shirts and belt and hats and an entire outfit.

Mr. BURTNESS. That cost the Government $7.15?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is the value. Those things are purchased in large quantities and at a very low rate.

Mr. BURTNESS. I understood that that simply provided a pair of trousers and a jacket, and nothing else. If they take an issue in kind, of course, they take it out in money, and provide the uniform prescribed by the college. But the gentleman will readily understand that it will not be a proper uniform.

Mr. BARBOUR. If we are going to buy uniforms for all these young men, a very good argument could, perhaps, be advanced for providing uniforms for all students in all schools and colleges. Over $2,000,000 additional of the expense of the Regular Army goes directly to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps on account of the Regular Army officers stationed at these institutions for the purpose of training these students.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Do you provide for hostesses at these citizens' training camps?

Mr. BARBOUR. We provide the same amount as last year, but no special appropriation is made for the hostesses.

Mr. HUDSON. Does not the gentleman think there should be a fairly liberal appropriation for these hostesses? The States are now taking care of them, as they did in the war period; but I think Congress should be generous in this matter.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think Congress has been generous.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is their function in a military camp?

Mr. BARBOUR. Is the gentleman from New York asking me that question, or is he directing it to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. To the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HUDSON. I would reply to the gentleman from New York that the duty of hostess at these camps is the same as the duty of hostess in his own home. I do not think there should be any departure by the Committee on Appropriations on this matter from the proposition of last year.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have attended those camps where they did not have any hostess.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, the appropriation this year calls for exactly the same appropriation that was carried last year.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes, sir; for citizens' military training camps.

Mr. SNELL. And it is the expectation of the committee that that sum and any balance that may be carried over will enable them to train about 35,000 men in the coming season?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is correct.

Mr. SNELL. That is the fixed policy. That is, they will train about that many and not lower it?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes. That is a well-rounded program and it contemplates 35,000 trainees at the training camps.

Mr. SNELL. Under normal conditions that makes a reasonable number each year, with which every Member will be satisfied?

Mr. BARBOUR. I think so.

Mr. SNELL. I think if we do that each year we will be doing practically all that should be asked.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. This is a very important question. We all realize that this citizen military training camp is a tremendously important thing. As a matter of fact, we actually trained almost 40,000 last year. The effect of continuing the appropriation of last year will mean that fewer of the young men will be afforded the privilege of this training this year than last year. In my judgment we should continue this progressively and not stop at 35,000. I think we should this year provide for at least 40,000, and finally get it up to 100,000, which was originally contemplated.

Mr. SNELL. I am just as much interested in the citizens' training camp as any other man in this House. I think we should agree upon a moderate even number, and adhere to that every year, and not go up and down as Congress may happen to feel about it at the time. The chairman of the committee says that it will make a fairly well-rounded program if we train 35,000. So far as I am individually concerned, I would be satisfied better with 40,000; but, taking the country at large, I think the people regard 35,000 as a proper number. We should have a fixed policy of training 35,000, instead of going above or below. I think the committee has done very well. Although the largest training camp in the country is located in my district and my people are asking for more, I think the committee is right, and I will stand by its recommendations.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am as strong for the adequate treatment of this subject as anybody. Some want a very large Army. They say we have 110,000 reserve officers. A very large percentage of them are in the procurement divisions. They do not need any military training. They would not take any such training if we gave it to them. Then we train about 125,000 R. O. T. C. students and about 180,000 National Guards men in one way or another. We also train 35,000 in the civilian camps.

Well, the reserve officers are all lovely and fine, but they are getting a year older every year, and in time of war five years from now most of them would be of no use, and they would not be needed, and they would not be accepted, and any money spent upon them now would be that much money wasted.

We must have common sense about these matters. We have 6,000 men in the Philippine Scouts. We have an Army of 118,000. We have 17,500 marines. I do not know whether they belong to the Army or to the Navy. Sometimes it is claimed they belong to the one, and sometimes to the other. A lot of people would like universal military training at a cost of $900,000,000 a year. Others would like to have a half million or more men in the Regular Army. We are training now about 600,000 people a year for the Army, including the civil components. For God's sake, how many more do you want?

Mr. SNELL. That is exactly the point I was making. I want to train a reasonable number every year and not go away up one year and away down the next year.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. SNELL. We should adopt a national policy that is fair and one which represents a fair cross section of the extremists on one side and the extremists on the other.

Mr. MADDEN. I am sure that is what the gentleman wants, and he and I agree on it.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from New York for a moment, because I must proceed.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Why should we stop at 35,000? If you will examine the figures as to the number we have trained since this system was established you will find the number has increased every year.

Mr. SNELL. I know; but we have gotten it up to what is a fair number and it fairly fits in with the general proposition as to the whole country.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. But why should we stop at 35,000?

Mr. SNELL. You might say, why stop the Army at 115,000.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The number contemplated was 100,000. This year we trained nearly 40,000, and there were nearly 60,000 of these young men who applied for this training.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that the House understood 35,000 were to be trained and then the Army found some extra money which they used for the purpose of training more men? They should not have spent that money for that purpose, and that is the trouble with the situation now.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I am sorry they could not have spent more than they did spend.

Mr. BARBOUR. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that we provided last year for 35,000 trainees; then the corps area commanders found, when the time for the camps came along, that they had some money left over. Instead of turning that money into the Treasury and possibly making it available for this year they spent it in training more men, knowing that Congress had fixed the number at 35,000. They went ahead and trained something like 3,000 more trainees when Congress had fixed the number by its appropriation—at 35,000. Now, that was wrong and the Secretary of War says it was wrong and should not have been done.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. It was no more wrong than their coming back this year and asking only enough money with which to train 30,000.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not mean it was morally wrong, but it certainly was not good business to spend that money when Congress had authorized a smaller amount for the purpose.

Mr. SNELL. That is one reason why I say we should have some fixed policy and say we are going to train 35,000.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. As a matter of fact, the committee has increased the number over the number proposed by the War Department. The proposal of the War Department was for 30,000, while the committee has increased the number to 35,000.

Mr. BARBOUR. We have increased the Budget estimates which provided for 30,000 trainees and put in enough money to train 34,000 trainees. If they have a little more money than was necessary to carry them over last year then they can take care of the other 1,000.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I think the committee is to be commended for going ahead of the War Department.

Mr. BARBOUR. The idea of the committee was to carry out a program as suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and train about 35,000 men.

Mr. HUDSON. Has the chairman any data as to how many of these trainees repeat; that is, take more than one year's training?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; but many of them do. It is considered desirable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California has been greatly interrupted, and if it would accommodate him, I would be glad to yield him 15 minutes of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia yields the gentleman from California 15 additional minutes.

Mr. BARBOUR. I thank the gentleman. I have taken more time than I intended to take, but there are some important items in the bill which should receive consideration and I will try to pass over them as rapidly as I can. I will first refer to rifle practice. Most of the Members of the House have received communications from constituents with relation to appropriations for rifle practice. This bill provides for furnishing rifles and ammunition to the 1,560 rifle clubs that exist in this country. The persons interested in these clubs state they hope to have 1,600 clubs in the country. There are about 100,000 members of those clubs. This appropriation will provide 120 rounds of .30-caliber ammunition for each man firing and 200 rounds of .22-caliber ammunition for each man firing. Each club is furnished with two .30-caliber rifles and two .22-caliber rifles.

A good deal has been said about the fact that the bill does not make any provision for the national rifle matches this year. In the 1927 bill no provision was made for the national rifle matches. The War Department at that time recommended that the matches should be held biennially instead of annually and the War Department advised the committee that such arrangement would be satisfactory. No matches were held during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1927, which would have been provided for in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1927. We provided for national matches in the 1928 bill, and those matches were held during September, 1927, at Camp Perry, Ohio. Carrying out the program of the War Department the committee has not provided in this bill for national matches to be held at Camp Perry this year.

There is a rather decided difference of opinion as to the value of these national matches being held every year. They are an expensive proposition. They run into big money, and the committee thought that in making this provision for the home training of the members—a quite liberal training, let me say—we could very well dispense with the national rifle matches during the coming summer, as we did during the summer of 1926.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. I do not think I understand the gentleman exactly. The gentleman meant to say, I take it, that you had made no appropriation for any national match in the year 1928.

Mr. BARBOUR. In 1928; yes.

Mr. BEEDY. And I understand a proposal to provide for a national match in 1929 would be looked upon with favor by the committee.

Mr. BARBOUR. That would be according to the program; yes. Subsequent, of course, to June 30, 1929.

Mr. BEEDY. Now, may I ask what is the appropriation this year for the training of the clubs in the various States?

Mr. BARBOUR. Two hundred and six thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars.

Mr. BEEDY. And how does that amount compare with the appropriation made for that purpose in the last bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. The estimates for national matches run all the way from $500,000 or $600,000 up to $1,000,000. We can safely say, I believe, that the national matches will cost in money $575,000. I think this is a very conservative estimate. Then in addition, it is necessary to send a regiment of Regular Army soldiers to Camp Perry to man the rifle butts and the targets, and they are kept there for 30 days on a disagreeable service, a service that they did not enlist in the Army to perform and a service that they do not want to perform.

They are required to handle these targets and the other equipment at the rifle ranges. There is the expense of this detail, which the Secretary of War informed me is in addition to the direct expense for the rifle matches, and, of course, the expense of this regiment of Infantry would come out of the Regular Army appropriation.

Mr. BEEDY. I do not think the gentleman understood my last question. The gentleman has stated that there is appropriated in the bill $206,000 this year.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is for 1929.

Mr. BEEDY. For the national match?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; for the training of the members of these rifle clubs at their homes.

Mr. BEEDY. How does that compare with the same item in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. As I recall, it is a little more than it was last year.

Mr. BEEDY. And the last appropriation for the national matches was how much?

Mr. BARBOUR. I have not that information at hand, but it all appears in the hearings, I will say to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We passed a bill in the House a few days ago authorizing national matches; was that yearly or biennially?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yearly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So the committee will be confronted with that situation if the bill is passed at the other end of the Capitol?

Mr. BARBOUR. If that bill is passed by the Senate and signed by the President, the committee will have that before it next year.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLLINS. In this connection I might add that there were only 34 citizen teams of 13 men each, and these 34 teams would cost anywhere from $600,000 to $1,000,000 annually.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will say that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] went into this matter to a considerable extent. At any rate, the committee feels satisfied with the provision that has been made for national rifle practice.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman spoke of home training for these rifle clubs for the years when the camps are not held.

Mr. BARBOUR. The home training is every year.

Mr. LEAVITT. Of what does that consist?

Mr. BARBOUR. They are furnished with two rifles of .30 caliber, two rifles of .22 caliber, and 120 rounds of .30-caliber ammunition for each man firing, and 200 rounds of .22 caliber ammunition for each man firing. This is all given free by the Government. They are also furnished with targets and other equipment that they need in this rifle practice. It is all at the expense of the Federal Government.

In concluding the discussion of the military items I simply want to call the attention of the House to a few observations of the Secretary of War when he was before the committee as to the adequacy of the appropriations carried in the bill.

Speaking of the estimates for the Air Corps, he said:

> I feel that the estimates for 1929 are very fair. I think they are quite liberal.

With respect to the citizens' military training camps, the Secretary of War said:

> Thirty-five thousand trainees is the number the War Department has in mind as being reasonable in a whole, well-rounded scheme.

As to the training of the Organized Reserves, which we discussed a few moments ago, the Secretary said:

> We would like to train a few more men, but we thought the number provided for in the estimates about right in a rounded-out program.

And the committee has increased the number over the number recommended in the Budget estimates by 875 trainees.

As to the national rifle matches, the Secretary of War said:

> While rifle practice is a valuable asset, it is a rather expensive proposition, and we felt it would be fair to work out a plan by which these matches would be held every other year. I am inclined to think that is a sound decision.

These statements of the Secretary of War will be found in the hearings.

Mr. LETTS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LETTS. On page 44 I find an item for the Moline-Rock Island Bridge.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; that is provided for in this bill, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. LETTS. I would like to inquire if it is the opinion of the committee that the erection of a drawbridge at an expense of $50,000 at this point is in the interest of navigation?

Mr. BARBOUR. It was recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, and the testimony was that it was in the interest of navigation, because below the bridge there are industrial plants which can not be reached during high water under the bridge. It is necessary to have a lift in one span of the bridge. I do not want to enter into a discussion of this item now, because there are many more important items in the bill, but we can take it up under the five-minute rule.

Mr. LETTS. I want to make this observation, that there has not been a boat passed through there for so long that one can not remember when it did pass through.

Mr. BARBOUR. It could not pass until there was a lift put in.

Mr. LETTS. There is only one concern to be benefited, and if Congress is going to give $50,000 to a private concern I am satisfied that it should go to this powder company.

Mr. BARBOUR. It is also for the benefit of the Government-owned land on the island.

Mr. LETTS. It is for the benefit of this powder company. This may be in line with a protracted effort that has been made by the Moline Power Co. and the John Deere Powder Co. to throw the Mississippi Channel to the Illinois side of the Rock Island Arsenal rather than to the Iowa side.

Mr. BARBOUR. There is a dam built on the Illinois side.

Mr. LETTS. If this is permitted, the next thing will be to put a drawbridge between the lower end of the island and Rock Island.

Mr. BARBOUR. I would like to yield more time to the gentleman to discuss that, but we can take it up under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I want to remove a mistake made early in the debate. The statement was made that there was no provision for remuneration for useful inventions. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] has called my attention to a provision in the law under which the Secreary of War is authorized to offer annual prizes in the Ordnance Department for inventions in manufacturing processes which will effect economy, provided not more than a thousand dollars can be spent in one year for that purpose. It was a statute passed in 1912 at the instance of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am glad to know that that provision has been made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. My attendance this morning on a committee has prevented my being here in the early part of the debate. It may be the gentleman has discussed the item in the bill to which I wish to refer. I want to inquire concerning the size of the appropriation in reference to barracks for the Army. I do not believe in a large Army, but I believe in taking care of what we have.

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman refers to the appropriation for housing. We are appropriating $4,874,000 and providing a contract authorization of $2,115,000, making a total appropriation and contract authorization of $6,989,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. And the gentleman thinks that is adequate?

Mr. BARBOUR. That will take care of all housing that has been authorized up to this time—that and prior appropriations. That is as far as our committee could go.

Now, we appropriate for Alaska $90,000 over the Budget. Last year we appropriated a million dollars for roads and trails, and this year the Budget recommended $500,000. We have been appropriating money to construct a road between Fairbanks and Circle, 155 miles long. We have already spent $400,000 on that road and it is very nearly completed. There are 106 miles out of Fairbanks finished, and 40 miles out of Circle, and there is about 9 miles in between that is not finished. The Budget recommendation carried no money to finish this road. We have put in $90,000, which will open the road through at a cost of $10,000 a mile. It will not place it in first-class condition, but it will open up the road.

There is a question as to the amount we should spend in Alaska. Alaska is a great big Territory, vast in its dimensions. If you take a map of Alaska and superimpose it on a map of the United States you will find that the westerly part on the Pacific coast and the easterly part on the Atlantic Ocean, and the southern part runs almost to the southern boundary of the United States, and the northern part to the Canadian line. And yet in all that great Territory there are only 40,000 to 50,000 people, natives and white people. About 50 per cent native and 50 per cent white. We have been liberal in appropriations for Alaska; we have built a railroad 476 miles long from the coast to Fairbanks.

We have built other roads. There are great resources in Alaska, it is true, but it is an open question right now as to how much money we should continue to spend on this vast area where so comparatively few people will get the benefit of it. The $500,000 recommended by the Bureau of the Budget will maintain the roads now in existence, but the committee felt that having gone as far as they have with the Fairbanks-Circle road, we ought to provide the money to put through the last 9 miles of it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I suggest to the gentleman that in addition to this figure the Congress has authorized an expenditure of a vast sum of money for harbors in Alaska.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman said that there were only 40,000 to 50,000 people now in Alaska.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is the testimony given to our committee.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And that the population is rapidly decreasing in Alaska?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Then, it is indeed a serious matter as to whether we should continue to spend a large amount of money there.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And the gentleman's committee has raised the Budget figures by $90,000?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; in order to put through the last 9 miles of the Fairbanks-Circle road.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Is that one of the narrow dog roads?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; this is a wide truck road.

The bill carries a proposed appropriation of $50,000,000 on account of existing river and harbor works. Included in this amount is $250,000 for examinations, surveys, and contingencies, objects which previously have been appropriated for separately. It also includes a new survey item of $1,500,000, in pursuance of the river and harbor act approved January 21, 1927, to cover surveys in the interest of navigation, flood control, power development, and irrigation. The amount proposed is in agreement with the Budget. As previously pointed out, the current appropriation on account of existing river and harbor works was increased by $5,000,000 in the deficiency act approved December 22, 1927, to take care of extraordinary expenditures occasioned by the flood, and the original current appropriation for examinations, surveys, and contingencies was increased by $50,000 in such act partly to meet the added cost of making the 160 additional examinations and surveys entailed by the new projects authorized in the river and harbor act approved January 21, 1927.

There are 555 projects to which this appropriation is applicable, either for maintenance or improvement, or both. Of this number 363 have been completed so far as the present needs of navigation warrant and are on a maintenance basis. This leaves 192 projects on which improvement work remains to be done to the extent justified by commercial uses and the Chief of Engineers estimates that to complete these projects to the extent necessary to meet the demands of commerce will cost approximately $250,000,000. As a considerable portion of the appropriation annually made is devoted to maintenance expenses it is now estimated that it will take eight or nine years to complete the work on the basis of an annual appropriation of $50,000,000.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I understood the gentleman to say that the bill carried $50,000,000.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. In a lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. For general river and harbor developments, and the gentleman also says a million and a half dollars for surveys.

Mr. BARBOUR. No; that is included in the $50,000,000.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is what I understood. Out of the $50,000,000 must come the survey item which, of course, comes from the lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is right.

Mr. McDUFFIE. A million and a half plus a quarter of a million, which is used annually for making a preliminary study of given projects.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. So that there is a million and three-quarters that must come from the $50,000,000. In addition to that I direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that the last Congress authorized new work to the extent of $73,000,000, including the survey work.

Mr. BARBOUR. If the gentleman from Alabama will permit me, it will cost to complete the projects authorized by Congress up to the present time from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes; but much less than that to complete the more meritorious projects.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. There are many projects authorized throughout the country on which the War Department very properly has stopped work, because they have determined that in many instances the expenditure is not justified.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will say that in addition to the $50,000,000 there is each year in the river and harbor fund a large carry-over, running sometimes as large as $25,000,000 or more of unexpended prior funds.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But not unallocated. It is all allocated.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; but those allocations may always be changed. Where conditions would develop that would indicate that a certain project is not meritorious, or that it is not as much so as another one, the funds can be taken and allocated to another project. We feel under the circumstances that this money will take care of the rivers and harbors. It is the same amount that we have carried along from year to year for several years past. There is $1,500,000 in here for survey for power, water storage, navigation, flood control, and so forth, and the committee feels that if more is needed the Board of Army Engineers will be able to find it in the $50,000,000.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. For the purpose of getting the record straight, I notice that from the gentleman's report that the balance on hand is of July 1. The gentleman should bear in mind that that includes the $50,000,000 just appropriated.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is right.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And the real balance is only $19,000,000.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; but it sometimes runs as high as $25,000,000.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And I think the gentleman will find that we have expended $10,619,000 more than the $50,000,000 appropriation for 1927.

Mr. BARBOUR. They are spending on an average of something over $4,000,000 a month.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And that is all they can spend under the money that Congress appropriated for them; but the gentleman does mean to say that we could not use more in order to complete some of these projects which ought to be completed.

Mr. BARBOUR. I presume they could on certain projects use more money. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that $50,000,000 appropriated in this bill is part of the program adopted by the River and Harbor Committee; that they had a survey made or a calculation made in which there would be $250,000,000 needed for rivers and harbors improvement; and that under the five-year program that they have adopted each year we are to spend $50,000,000, and if we go above that we are breaking the rule that the River and Harbor Committee has imposed.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I suggest, if the gentleman from California will yield, that I do not understand that the Rivers and Harbors Committee adopted that rule, or that there was any agreement. I want further to suggest to my distinguished friend from Virginia that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, after this principle, as we will call it, was adopted by the White House or by the administration, $73,000,000 more work was authorized to be done.

Mr. HARRISON. These projects that have been certified and agreed upon and authorized by the Rivers and Harbors Committee are accepted, and we are simply carrying out the program that was provided.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But the gentleman seems to forget the fact that we have brought in new authorizations since that was embarked upon.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand, there was an agreement for one year, that particular year, and since then all these additional projects which the gentleman from Alabama has called attention to have been added to the bill, and there will probably be $50,000,000 more. My understanding was that there was brought before the subcommittee a list of authorizations amounting to $250,000,000, which I understood was a part of the program that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had agreed upon, and that $50,000,000 was to be appropriated each year.

Mr. BARBOUR. We were carrying appropriations for rivers and harbors at the rate of $40,000,000 per annum up to a few years ago, but I remember that at that time Members interested in rivers and harbors appropriations, whether they represented the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or not, came before our committee and suggested that this annual appropriation be increased from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000, and they assured us that that would take care of the matter satisfactorily. Since then we have done that, and nothing has been presented to the committee to change that situation.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman says that those gentlemen who came before the committee represented the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. BARBOUR. Certain Representatives interested in river and harbor improvements appeared before the committee. I do not know whether all of them represented the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or not. They may have simply been interested in these appropriations.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. The improvement of our national waterways is of vital importance and is much neglected by Congress.

Mr. BARBOUR. I yielded to the gentleman for a question only.

Mr. LOZIER. Does not the gentleman think that in view of the importance of the river and harbor improvements, the recommendations of the Board of Army Engineers when they asked for $55,000,000 for the next year should be followed? Does not the gentleman think that in view of the condition of the Treasury, the Budget and the Committee on Appropriations are not justified in refusing to give the Board of Army Engineers what they say they need to efficiently carry on the work?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I think that question might more appropriately be directed to the Director of the Budget. He has recommended $50,000,000.

Now, there is just one more item that I want to take up, and that is the Panama Canal. There is an increase of a little over a million dollars over the 1928 appropriation. This increase is to provide for overhauling the locks in 1929. They overhaul the locks every other year. It will cost $600,000 to do that work in the next fiscal year.

Then there is the Alhajuela Dam, about 12 miles up the Chagres River. It will form a vast storage reservoir at that point. The Governor of the Canal Zone stated to the committee that this dam would impound 23,000,000,000 cubic feet of water, and form a reservoir of 22 square miles, and furnish water for three and one-half to four times the present traffic of the canal. He says it will assure an ample water supply for the Gaillard Cut during all seasons of the year, will expedite the passage of vessels, and will reduce the possibility of accidents. It will also control floods and lengthen the period of operation of the hydroelectric plant at Gatun, and will reduce the cost of operation of the Diesel plant at Miraflores. The total cost of this project will be $12,000,000. It is hoped to finish it in six years. This appropriation will start the work.

The Panama Canal has just had a very successful year. The fiscal year 1927 was a record year, nearly equaling the year 1924, which was the peak. The average number of ships that passed through the canal during the first 10 days in December, 1927, was 20.2, as against 16 during December, 1926. The canal shows a profit from all activities for the fiscal year 1927 of $16,487,640. That is an increase over the total profits shown for the year 1926 of $494,652.25.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BARBOUR. Gentlemen, I thank you for your consideration and attention. [Applause.]

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. THURSTON. Will the gentleman's remarks show what portion of the appropriation is for purely military purposes as distinguished from nonmilitary purposes?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes. That also appears in the report of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. With reference to the power plant at the Gatun Lock and Dam, does the gentleman know how much power that plant generates?

Mr. BARBOUR. I could not say as to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is any of it used for commercial purposes, or is all of it utilized in governmental activities?

Mr. BARBOUR. I can get that information for the gentleman. It may be that it is in the hearings. So far as I can ascertain, this power is used exclusively for canal activities and Government purposes.

I could not give the gentleman that information offhand. I could get it for the gentleman or it may be in the hearings; but I doubt very much if it is in the hearings.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That has gotten to be a rather acute question in Congress now in connection with some legislation that is pending, and I was curious to know what the facts are with reference to it.

Mr. BARBOUR. It is my impression, from the testimony we have received from the Panama Canal officials, that it is all used in the Government activities down there.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would assume that; but if the contrary is true, I would like to have the gentleman insert it, if it is not too much trouble.

Mr. BARBOUR. I thank the committee for its attention. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER].

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, the Review of Reviews is one of the most widely circulated and influential publications in the United States. It is ably edited by Albert Shaw, an outstanding scholar and publicist, whose review of public problems is usually fair and well considered. But in the September, 1927, issue of the Review of Reviews—page 244—Mr. Shaw makes a grossly inaccurate and misleading statement when he says:

> Under the Coolidge administration the national debt has been cut down by $8,000,000,000, about one billion a year.

This misstatement of fact has been given wide publicity and extensively quoted by other publications, and, as a result, the real facts have been obscured and the American public has been led into a serious misunderstanding in reference to the payments made on our national debt by the Harding-Coolidge administrations. Doctor Shaw credits the entire $8,000,000,000 reduction on our national debt to the Harding-Coolidge administrations, ignoring the indisputable fact that of the $8,000,000,000 paid on our national debt two and one-half billion dollars were paid in the last 18 months of the Wilson administration. Doctor Shaw's misleading statement has not been corrected in any subsequent issue of the Review of Reviews.

I cheerfully acquit Doctor Shaw of having intentionally made a misstatement. His judicial temperament, intellectual honesty, preeminence in his profession, and his enviable and well-deserved reputation for accuracy and fairness justify the conclusion that he unfortunately relied on information supposed to be accurate, but which proved to be unreliable.

No doubt Doctor Shaw based his statement on a misleading report issued last June by Undersecretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mills, which in effect credited the entire debt reduction of $8,000,000,000 to the Harding-Coolidge administrations because Mr. Mills, in his statement, studiously omitted any reference to the uncontroverted fact that practically one-third of the reduction in our national debt was made during the last 18 months of the Wilson administration.

I desire here and now to correct these misleading statements and to present the official statistics in reference to the payments made on our national debt since the conclusion of the World War.

I desire to analyze the debt-reduction policy of our Federal Government under the Wilson and Harding-Coolidge administrations. Our Republican friends are vociferously taking credit for all the payments that have been made on our national debt and are claiming an efficiency and practice of economy to which they are only in part entitled.

It is not my purpose to withhold credit where credit is due, but I desire in an impartial manner to review the reductions that have been made in our national debt, and give to each administration and political party the credit to which such administration or such party is justly entitled.

The armistice was signed November 11, 1918. Prior to that time the United States Government had been expending many billion dollars annually to win the war into which we were reluctantly drawn. When the armistice was signed our Government was obligated for billions of dollars on uncompleted contracts previously made for war material. Billions of dollars' worth of armament, war equipment, and supplies had been manufactured and were ready for delivery, while many more billion dollars' worth were being processed for early or later delivery.

We could not safely assume that the temporary suspension of hostilities incident to the armistice would be followed by a speedy and permanent peace, and it was wise and necessary that the production of war material continue until the armistice ripened into a stable peace. Many of these Government contracts were for battleships then in the process of construction but which could not be completed for many months.

The treaty of Versailles between Germany and the allied and associated governments was not signed until June 28, 1919, and pending peace negotiations our production of war supplies, equipment, and battleships continued, though moderately abated. Many of these Government contracts could not be canceled without tremendous waste or loss to the Nation or without violating well-established and sound public policy. Consequently our national obligations continued to increase until the summer of 1919, a few weeks after the treaty of Versailles was signed.

Our national debt reached its peak on August 31, 1919, the gross debt at that time being $26,594,267,878.45. Six months thereafter, on February 29, 1920, it had been reduced by the Wilson administration to $25,401,760,888.52, which was a reduction of $1,192,506,989.93 in six months, or at the rate of $2,385,013,979.86 per year. This was an average monthly reduction of $198,751,164.98, a record not surpassed or even equaled during the same length of time under the Harding-Coolidge administrations. In this short period of six months approximately 4½ per cent of our entire national debt was liquidated by the Wilson administration, the reduction being at the rate of 9 per cent of the principal per annum. If this rate established by a Democratic administration had been maintained, the entire war debt could have been liquidated in approximately 12 years.

In the 12 months between February 29, 1920, and February 28, 1921, our national debt was reduced by the Wilson administration from $25,401,760,888.52 to $24,049,527,788.58, being a total reduction of $1,352,233,099.94, which was an average monthly reduction of $112,686,091.66 for the last year of the Wilson administration.

During the last 18 months of the Wilson administration, between August 31, 1919, and February 28, 1921, the Wilson administration reduced the national debt from $26,594,267,878.45 to $24,049,527,788.58, being a reduction of $2,544,740,089.87 in 18 months, which was an average annual reduction of $1,696,493,393.24, or an average monthly reduction of $141,374,449.43 during the 18 months preceding the retirement of President Wilson from the White House. This record has not been approached under the Harding-Coolidge régime.

On February 28, 1921, four days before President Harding was inaugurated, our gross national debt was $24,049,527,788.58, and on December 31, 1927, it was $18,036,352,451.81, which shows a reduction of $6,013,175,336.77 during the 82 months covered by the Harding-Coolidge administrations. This is an average annual reduction of $879,976,878.48, as against an average annual reduction of $1,696,493,393.24 during the last 18 months of the Wilson administration.

The average monthly reduction during the 82 months of the Harding-Coolidge administrations was $73,331,406.54, while during the last 18 months of the Wilson administration the average monthly reduction of our national debt was $141,374,449.43.

Or to state the facts in another way, the average annual reduction of our national debt during the 82 months of the Harding-Coolidge administrations was $716,515,414.76 less than the average annual reduction during the last 18 months of the Wilson administration, and the average monthly reduction in the 82 months under the Harding-Coolidge administrations was $68,043,042.89 less than the average monthly reduction during the last 18 months of the Wilson administration.

The Wilson administration set the pace by reducing the national debt at the rate of $1,696,493,393.24 per annum, while the Harding-Coolidge administrations can show only an average yearly reduction of $879,976,878.48, which is only about one-half of the average annual reduction in the closing years of the Wilson administration.

The Wilson administration set the pace by reducing our national debt at the average rate of $141,374,449.43 per month, while under the Harding-Coolidge administrations it has been reduced at the average rate of $73,331,406.54 per month, or approximately only half the average monthly reduction in the closing years of the Wilson administration.

If the Harding-Coolidge big-business administrations had kept the pace set by the Wilson administration and reduced our national debt at the rate of $141,374,449.43 per month, as was done in the last 18 months of the Wilson administration, instead of our gross debt on December 31, 1927, being $18,036,352,451.81 it would have been only $12,446,822,935.32.

Or, to state the proposition in still another form, in the 82 months between February 28, 1921, and December 31, 1927, the Harding-Coolidge administrations reduced the national debt from $24,049,527,788.58 to $18,036,352,451.81, a total reduction of $6,013,175,336.77, which was at the average monthly rate of $73,331,406.54. Now, if the Harding-Coolidge administrations had maintained the rate of reduction established by the Wilson administration, the total reduction in the 82 months of Republican control would have been $11,446,822,935.32, or nearly double the actual reduction accomplished under the so-called Hamiltonian administration of Secretary Mellon.

Since August 31, 1919, our national debt has been reduced $8,557,915,426.64, of which sum $2,544,740,089.87 was paid in the last 18 months of the Wilson administration, and the sum of $6,013,175,336.77 was paid in the 82 months of the Harding-Coolidge administrations. Thirty per cent of the total reduction was made in 18 months under a Democratic administration and 70 per cent of the total reduction was made in 82 months under a Republican administration. It requires no expert mathematician to demonstrate that the reduction of our national debt was comparatively more rapid under a Democratic administration than under the big-business, special-privilege administrations of Harding and Coolidge.

I now propose to analyze the reduction of our national debt by years. In the six months between August 31, 1919, and February 29, 1920, as I have already shown, the Wilson administration reduced the national debt $1,192,506,989.93, which was a reduction of 4½ per cent of the gross debt in six months, or at the rate of 9 per cent per annum, which was at the average monthly rate of $198,751,164.98.

Between February 29, 1920, and February 28, 1921, the Wilson administration reduced the national debt $1,352,233,099.94, being at the average monthly rate of $112,686,091.66, or 5.3 per cent of the gross debt.

Between February 28, 1921, and February 28, 1922, the Harding administration reduced the national debt only $570,469,432.06, although during the preceding year under a Democratic administration the reduction had been $1,352,233,099.94.

The reduction during the first year of the Harding administration was only 2.3 per cent of the gross debt, while in the preceding year, under a Democratic administration, there was a reduction of 5.3 per cent of the gross public debt. Moreover, the average monthly reduction during the first year of the Harding administration was only $47,539,119.33, a petty sum when compared with the $111,686,091.66 which was the average monthly reduction in the preceding year under a Democratic administration.

During the second year of the Harding administration, from February 28, 1922, to February 28, 1923, the gross debt was only reduced $761,772,737.22, which was only 3.2 per cent of the gross debt. This was at the average monthly reduction of only $63,481,061.43, approximately one-half of the average monthly reduction in the last year of the Wilson administration.

During the third year of the Harding-Coolidge administrations, from February 28, 1923, to February 29, 1924, the gross debt reduction was $934,631,306.14, which was an average monthly reduction of $77,885,942.18, but slightly more than one-half of the average monthly reduction in the last year of the Wilson administration.

During the fourth year of the Harding-Coolidge administrations, between February 29, 1924, and February 28, 1925, the national debt was reduced $802,068,099.30, which was an average monthly reduction of $66,839,008.27, or approximately half of the average monthly reduction in the last year of the Wilson administration.

During the fifth year of the Mellon régime, between February 28, 1925, and February 28, 1926, the gross national debt was reduced $704,458,022.76, which was an average monthly reduction of $58,704,835.23, less than half the average monthly reduction during the last year of the Wilson administration.

During the sixth year of Mr. Mellon's administration of the Treasury Department, between February 28, 1926, and February 28, 1927, the national debt was reduced $1,123,577,640.42, which was an average monthly reduction of $93,631,470.03, a decided improvement over Mr. Mellon's previous record, but still far below the average monthly reduction of $112,686,091.66 during the last year of the Wilson administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. LOZIER. In the 10 months from February 28, 1927, to December 31, 1927, the national debt was reduced $1,116,198,098.87, or an average monthly reduction of $111,619,809.88, a reduction substantially the same as the average monthly reduction of $112,686,091.66 during the last year of the Wilson administration. But only during these last 10 months have the payments been up to the standard set by the Wilson administration in the last 18 months it was in power.

In order that you may see at a glance the reductions of our national debt made under Democratic and Republican administrations, I have tabulated these payments. The first column of figures shows the reduction made each year—or parts of years—in our national debt, and the second column showing the average monthly reductions from year to year:

United States debt reductions

Year	Reductions on gross debt	Average monthly reduction
Aug. 31, 1919, to Feb. 29, 1920, 6 months (Wilson administration)	$1,192,506,989.93	$198,751,164.98
Feb. 29, 1920, to Feb. 28, 1921 (Wilson administration)	1,352,233,099.94	112,686,091.66
Feb. 28, 1921, to Feb. 28, 1922 (Harding administration)	570,469,432.06	47,539,119.33
Feb. 28, 1922, to Feb 28, 1923 (Harding administration)	761,772.737.22	63,481,061.43
Feb. 28, 1923, to Feb. 29, 1924 (Harding-Coolidge administrations)	934,631,306.14	77,885,942.18
Feb. 29, 1924, to Feb. 28, 1925 (Coolidge administration)	802,068,099.30	66,839,008.27
Feb, 28, 1925, to Feb. 28, 1926 (Coolidge administration)	704,458,022.76	58,704,835.23
Feb. 28, 1926, to Feb. 28, 1927 (Coolidge administration)	1,123,577,640.42	93,631,470.03
Feb. 28, 1927, to Dec. 31, 1927 (10 months; Coolidge administration)	1,116,198,098.87	111,619,809.88

I am dealing with stern facts and the statistics I am using are official, taken from the records of the Treasury Department and verified by Hon. Ogden L. Mills, Undersecretary of the Treasury, as the following letter will demonstrate:

THE UNDERSECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, January 25, 1928.

Hon. RALPH F. LOZIER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: For the Secretary, receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 23d instant, in which you ask for the amount of the national debt on certain dates.

The following gives the information you seek:

	Gross debt	Net debt
Feb. 28, 1919	$24,467,277,901.90	$23,082,449,606.41
Aug. 31, 1919	26,594,267,878.45	25,700,395,252.76
Feb. 29, 1920	25,401,760,888.52	25,204,078,491.53
Feb. 28, 1921	24,049,527,788.58	24,022,187,002.28
Feb. 28, 1922	23,479,058,356.52	23,248,582,775.02
Feb. 28, 1923	22,717,285,619.30	22,719,476,749.46
Feb. 29, 1924	21,782,654,313.16	21,678,975,646.77
Feb. 28, 1925	20,980,586,213.86	20,874,095,413.51
Feb. 28, 1926	20,276,128,191.10	20,047,911,322.55
Feb. 28, 1927	19,152,550,550.68	19,078,154,137.20
Dec. 31, 1927	18,036,352,451.81

In the first column the gross debt is stated and in the second column the net debt is stated, the latter being arrived at by adding certain items of matured interest obligations, etc., and deducting the net balance in the general fund of the Treasury. These figures are taken from the monthly statements of the public debt of the United States with one exception: For December 31, 1927, the gross debt only is stated on the basis of the daily Treasury statement, the final statement of the public debt not yet being available.

Very truly yours,

OGDEN L. MILLS,
Undersecretary of the Treasury.

The records speak for themselves. They can not be jumbled or misrepresented. The records of the Treasury Department show the amounts that have been paid on our national debt from year to year. No partisan bias or coloring can change these plain facts. I am willing to give the present administration full credit for all payments it has made on our national obligations, but I do insist that it is claiming credit for a record that suffers when compared with the accomplishments of the preceding Democratic administration.

The foregoing letter from Undersecretary Mills shows a reduction of $8,557,915,426.64 between August 31, 1919, and December 31, 1927, but practically one-third of this amount, or, to be exact, $2,544,740,089.87 was paid in the last 18 months of the Wilson administration, whereas it required 82 months for the Harding-Coolidge administrations to liquidate $6,013,175,336.77. Obviously the reduction of our national debt proceeded more rapidly during the last 18 months of the Wilson administration than since the wizard of Pittsburgh, Mr. Mellon, took charge of the Treasury Department.

May I call your attention to the interesting fact that the mandatory sinking fund law under which our national debt is being retired was formulated by a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, enacted by a Democratic Congress, and approved by Woodrow Wilson, a Democratic President. Under this prudent law, funds accumulated rapidly during the closing months of President Wilson's administration, and largely from the cash accruing under this law and supplemented by funds from other sources, more than two and one-half billion dollars of our national debt was paid in the last 18 months of the Wilson administration. Of the $6,013,175,336.77 paid on our national debt under the Harding-Coolidge administrations, approximately $2,000,000,000, or one-third, came from this Democratic sinking fund, $1,720,000,000 approximately, came from World War capital assets and back taxes inherited by the Harding administration from the Wilson administration, and about $800,000,000 came from interest and principal collected on loans made to Europe. This Democratic sinking fund law supplied approximately $333,588,400 of the amount paid in the fiscal year of 1927 on our national debt. Moreover, the Harding-Coolidge administrations have maintained an excessively high tax rate for years, which has taken from the pockets of the American people an amount far in excess of the legitimate needs of our Government.

After billions of dollars have been taken from the people of the United States by excessive taxation, it has required no extraordinary genius to apply a part of this tax money on our national debt, especially after a formula or system for the rapid reduction of this debt had been established under the preceding Democratic administration, and was working admirably when our Republican friends assumed control of the Federal Government in 1921.

The reductions in our national debt in recent years are not the result of economies in the administration of our national affairs, because the peace-time activities of our Government are now costing the American people more than at any previous time in the history of our Republic. While it is true there has been a reduction in appropriations for some years, such reduction has resulted from an abandonment of war-time activities and not from economy in the peace-time activities of the Government. An analysis of the expenditures for each year of the Coolidge administration will show that there has not been a year in which the expenditures for the ordinary peace-time activities of the Government have not materially increased over the expenditures for similar purposes in the preceding year. It is not hard to reduce the national debt as long as the American people are taxed unmercifully, as is being done under the present administration. Even now the President and his party associates are using every possible influence to prevent the enactment of a tax reduction bill that is manifestly just in its major provisions.

Mr. Chairman, the friends of the present administration should not misrepresent the facts in reference to the payments that have been made on our national debt. They should not claim credit for having paid $8,000,000,000 on this debt in the last seven years, when, in truth and fact, two and one-half billion dollars of this sum were paid during the last 18 months of the Wilson administration, which was a much more rapid reduction of the national debt than has been accomplished under the Harding-Coolidge régime.

I cheerfully accord to the present administration full credit for what it has accomplished in the way of liquidating our war debt; but, on the other hand, I insist that the Democratic Party be given full credit for the rapid and substantial reductions made during the last 18 months of the Wilson administration and for the enormous cash balance and capital assets it turned over to the Harding administration and for having originated and put into operation the well-considered and successful plan by which our national debt is being rapidly liquidated. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill carries the sum of $50,000,000 for rivers and harbors. This is the amount that has been carried for the past year or two. I do not recall just how many years. Out of this sum there is taken for surveys $250,000 and for additional surveys, for power and other purposes, of a number of rivers embraced in a document submitted in the last Congress, $1,500,000, making a total of one and three-quarter million dollars, which have not heretofore been taken out of the annual appropriation for river and harbor improvements. That really cuts down the sum to $47,250,000 for river and harbor improvements. This is a reduction of over 5 per cent from last year's appropriation, while the authorizations for rivers and harbors were increased by $73,000,000.

I want to submit a few remarks in regard to our waterways and the great service they are performing to this country. If you will refer to the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers, submitted to the present Congress, you will find that our waterways, including our ports, rivers, canals, and the Great Lakes, carried last year 540,500,000 tons of commerce, with the value of $26,722,000,000. The Chief of Engineers in his report states:

> This is the greatest tonnage ever carried on the navigable channels of the United States and supplies a convincing evidence of the increasing use of our waterways.

One not familiar with the handling of commerce in great volume has no conception of the enormity of this commerce. If you will make the calculation in carloads and trainloads you will find that it will make a solid train of cars many, many thousands of miles in length. The value of it exceeds by about $6,000,000,000 the total value of the class 1 railroads of the United States. Just think of it!

We have 200 ports under improvement. Sixty-two of these are on the Great Lakes, the others being on our Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts, as well as the island of Porto Rico, in Alaska, and in Hawaii. We are adding to these from year to year. We bring in a river and harbor bill every year or two. We take in new sections of rivers; we increase the depth of existing ports; and we are expecting in a short time a report from the engineers as to the improvement of the Great Lakes, whereby we hope to give greater depth to the connecting channels and the leading harbors of the Great Lakes that are now performing such an immense service to the commerce of our country. It will require many millions of dollars to carry it out. It is idle to say that we can rest on a standing appropriation from year to year of only $40,000,000 or of $50,000,000. Conditions are changing from year to year.

A few years ago a $1,000,000,000 appropriation served the purposes of all of our Government activities. Now we multiply that by four and then plus a good deal. Who wants to go back to the $1,000,000,000 Congress? Can we go back to $100,000,000 a year for the Army and $150,000,000 a year for the Navy? We are appropriating now three and four times that much annually for those necessary arms of our Government. Commerce is increasing more than the Army and the Navy are increasing. Our commerce, according to experts, is doubling every 12 to 14 or 15 years. It requires greater facilities for handling it. Our railroad mileage is not increasing, so that we have to care for this increase through our waterways. I want to call attention to the fact that where our waterways have been completed they are all producing results. Take the Monongahela River, for instance, carrying approximately as much freight as passes through the Panama Canal, a little river up in the Allegheny Mountains with a primary flow of about 200 cubic feet per second and a depth of only 12 inches in the shallow places, but by the installation of about 15 locks and dams it is now carrying from twenty to twenty-five million tons a year and supplying the great steel industries of Pittsburgh with their coal and the citizens of that city with their fuel.

This shows, gentlemen, that where money has been judiciously expended for this purpose it is bringing results, and results that this country can not now afford to do without. We are bound to have them. This program has got to be carried on, and as the demand increases from year to year ports have to be deepened. Ships draw greater depths now than they did before, and all this work must be done, but can not be done on an appropriation of $50,000,000 a year. It is absolutely impossible. Every engineer connected with the War Department of the Government will tell you this is impossible, and the report of the committee in connection with this bill shows that even if we do not increase a project, if we never have another river and harbor bill, it will take nine years to complete what we already have on the books with this appropriation of only $50,000,000 a year.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Does the gentleman think that under an expenditure of $50,000,000 a year as used by the engineers the Hoover dream of developing the waterways of the country will ever be made a reality?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is impossible, I believe, sir.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Does the gentleman believe the country will continue to remain contented as long as $50,000,000 are spent in the way they are spent, which really, while pretending to make for development, is just what the railroad interests of the country want, knowing they will never become competitors with the railroads?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I agree with the gentleman from Louisiana. I think the gentleman is eminently correct.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I ask the gentleman why he terms it the "Hoover dream"? That was dreamed long, long ago.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I gave it that appellation because it is the latest christening it has. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Oh, but it was dreamed before Mr. Hoover dreamed it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. And apparently will remain a dream under the present plan of making expenditures.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Answering the question of the gentleman from Louisiana as he did, did the gentleman mean to agree with him that the plans and recommendations of the engineers as to the development of our waterways are in keeping with the wishes and the demands of the railroads of the country?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I did not quite understand the gentleman and I may have misunderstood the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does the gentleman from Texas agree with the gentleman from Louisiana to the extent of saying that the plans and projects approved and carried on by the engineers are made and carried on in agreement with the railroads of the country?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Oh, no; and I did not so understand the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Nobody said they were made as a result of such an agreement, but is clear——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Or in keeping with their wishes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. It runs exactly parallel with what they would desire it to be; yes. But not as an agreement.

Mr. MADDEN. What are the facts to justify that statement?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. For the reason——

Mr. MADDEN. Give us the facts, not the reasons.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. For the reason that for a number of years past appropriations have been made and so-called improvements made that really make for no system at all, and as a consequence the waterways of the country have never become a real competitor of the railroads, and the inference is clear that the railroad interests could want no better system than that which prevails.

Mr. MADDEN. But inferences are sometimes misleading.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Oh, sometimes.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and I think in the case at issue they are misleading.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. But inferences are always made where the facts and the circumstances and the conditions will make for inferences.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the cheapest thing a man can do is to try to mislead anybody and the biggest thing he can do is to tell the facts as he finds them, basing his statement on the facts themselves.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Well, I would say to the gentleman from Illinois I have never attempted to be cheap at any time in my life, and I resent the term the gentleman applies.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman may resent it if he likes, but I made the general statement, and I repeat it. The cheapest thing a man can do is to decide questions on inferences. If that applies to the gentleman, of course, he will take it; and if it does not, he need not.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that I know he does not want to do the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR] an injustice. The gentleman from Louisiana never said this was in keeping with an agreement between the engineers and the railroad. The gentleman simply drew the picture and said that the railroads would not want any better system than the one prevailing. The gentleman has never charged that there was any collusion anywhere.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Of course I did not, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] knows that. What I did say, and what I reiterate, is that the result obtained up to date from our expenditures on waterways is exactly what the railroad interests might desire if they wanted to avoid competition.

Mr. MADDEN. No; the biggest thing a man can do is to be just as frank and free and fair as he can be and not decide questions on inferences. The smallest thing he can do is to decide them on inferences.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. If the gentleman is at all aware of the history of logic he will understand thoroughly that the finest decisions have been made by way of inference.

Mr. MADDEN. I can not agree with the gentleman's attitude, I will say very frankly.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have been knocked out of several minutes of my time here, but I hope it will result in the good of the cause. [Laughter and applause.]

I want to call attention to a few of the waterways that have been producing results, and in this connection we may take, for instance, the Mississippi River system, which in my opinion is going to be the greatest system of inland water transportation in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas five minutes more.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We find that last year on the Mississippi system there were handled 57,000,000 tons of commerce.

That is due to the fact that we have in the past few years been more liberal with our appropriations to improve the Mississippi, the Ohio, the Monongahela, and other branches of the great river system, and the fact shows that these expenditures are bringing forth results. It shows an enormous commerce being handled now that was not handled a few years ago, when it was impossible for it to be done. As the work is more nearly completed, it is a certainty that results will continue to increase.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What has been heretofore the highest tonnage in any single year on the Mississippi, covering the same territory the gentleman mentioned?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will get the figures, if possible, and place them in the RECORD. I have not got them now in my mind. In the early days the commerce was transported by the old packet system, but to-day one barge fleet will carry at one trip as much as was carried in the old packet steamboat in one year. I see General Jadwin states that 28,000,000 tons were carried on the Mississippi in 1889, and that was doubtless the record year under the old steamboat system. After that it went down to almost nothing until the past few years.

Commerce is altogether a different character from what it used to be. It would be impossible to carry the commerce of to-day in the old-fashioned steamboats that formerly plied on the rivers.

I call attention to the fact that the great business interests of Pittsburgh and other places are installing millions and millions of dollars' worth of steamboats and barges on the Ohio River—$25,000,000 worth or more in the last few years. That notwithstanding the fact the Ohio is not yet connected with the Mississippi, owing to the fact that three or four locks and dams in the vicinity of Louisville and from there to Cairo have not been completed and will not be for two or three years.

When those locks and dams are completed there will be a greater increase in the volume of traffic. Boats can only ply now through that section at certain seasons of the year, but still the commerce has increased enormously.

Now, take the inland waterways on the Atlantic seaboard with connecting rivers, which furnish 30,000,000 tons—the Great Lakes between 135,000,000 and 140,000,000 tons. I want to call attention to my own State in this connection. Some 30 years ago we had no deep harbors and all our water-borne commerce was handled at Galveston, and it consisted then of less than a half million tons, with a valuation of about $60,000,000. That port has been given a depth of 32 feet, Houston 30 feet, Port Arthur and other ports have been deepened, and last year the aggregate tonnage was more than 36,000,000 tons, with a valuation of $1,600,000,000. Houston alone the past year had more than 10,000,000 tons, though as a deep-water port it is not yet 10 years old.

I am sorry the interior part of the northwest section of the United States is not located on waterways that can be developed in the same manner that I believe is feasible in the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio sections. But with a proper adjustment of joint rail and water rates, as are now being applied in connection with the Mississippi system, that section will be greatly benefited by the improvement of the Missouri.

The Budget should yield to the reasonable demands of commerce, and that is the only way to secure its perpetuation. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, just before the Christmas vacation I stated on the floor that there was in existence a syndicate engaged in the wholesale importation of liquor. I then exhibited to you some original orders that I had obtained and gave you a graphic description of the system. I was first met with denial from the official sources, and then the denial was somewhat modified, and finally it was soft pedaled, and now it is admitted that the conditions I described exist. I am in receipt of a communication from the collector of customs, in which he states that he has asked for 450 more guards, and that he will change the system of custom stamps that I described to you before we adjourned for the recess. Let me read the collector's letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE,
New York, N. Y., February 1, 1928.

Hon. FIORELLO H. LAGUARDIA,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: I am in receipt of your communication of the 23d ultimo, forwarding a copy of your letter of January 3 to the Secretary of the Treasury containing your observations and conclusions regarding the smuggling of liquor at this port. These have proved most interesting to me.

For your information, I might state that I have recommended an increase of 450 men in the customs guard force at this port, and this is receiving the consideration of the Treasury Department.

I am also making a report to the department regarding the misuse of customs baggage labels in the removal of packages containing liquor from the piers. The matter of designing a new baggage label, one which will not lend itself readily to reuse, is receiving the consideration of my office, and I hope to be able very shortly to make a recommendation along that line to the department.

Very truly yours,

PHILIP ETTING, Collector.

The day I was investigating there were in the harbor of New York 202 ships—44 sailing vessels—all from foreign ports. Now, gentlemen, the collector of customs is absolutely helpless. He can not cope with the situation with the force that he has on hand. No military officer would undertake in the port of New York which includes North River, Hoboken, including the piers and docks, without having sufficient force to do it. It would take at least ten times as many men as the collector of customs has now.

He has a force of 400 guards which he must divide into three shifts, so that on each shift he does not have enough men to cover one man to a steamer. I believe instead of giving him 450 men that we ought to start him off with at least 750 men, so as to have sufficient men on each pier. That is, of course, assuming that you gentlemen want to enforce the law.

My charges that the customs officials of New York did not have sufficient personnel to even cover part of the docks and piers have been substantiated. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in a statement made in New York admitted that at least 450 additional guards were necessary. I state that at least 750 more guards are needed. However, as yet no action has been taken by the department to obtain these additional men. The same rotten conditions exist and the liquor is pouring in. I personally placed on the Assistant Secretary's desk a memorandum showing the intended importation of liquor from one of the French liners, and 48 hours afterwards several hundred cases of champagne were put off the French steamer and seized by customs officials. That performance can be repeated every week unless the customs officials in New York are given men to cover the ships.

A great deal is being said these days about planks and party platforms. Some one ought to have the courage to go before the American people with the proposition that it will take $150,000,000 to commence to enforce prohibition, that not even $150,000,000 a year can enforce the prohibition law and ascertain whether the American people want to continue this impossible and disgraceful condition.

Any avowed wet or any man who has taken the position for a repeal of the eighteenth amendment who accepts a nomination for President and consents to run on a platform that is silent on this point is insincere and deserves to lose the confidence of the people. That goes whether the candidate is a governor, a Senator, or a former bank president. [Applause.] This question ought to be decided by the American people, and if it is decided to keep and maintain the eighteenth amendment in the Constitution then a President elected on such a platform ought to come in here and demand $150,000,000 to $250,000,000 a year to enforce the law.

The eighteenth amendment is to-day disregarded as much as the fifteenth amendment, with all due deference to the gentlemen on both sides of the Capitol who have spoken on both amendments.

Out of the 250 largest cities in the United States over 200 are without any Federal enforcement at all. We have in all—just listen to these figures—we have in all 106 supervisory officers; that means administrators and assistant administrators, not enough for one in each of the 250 largest cities in the United States. We have in all as agents, inspectors, and chemists 2,043 men. Assuming that they were divided among the 250 large cities, not even 10 to a city. As a matter of fact, 2,043 agents, inspectors, and chemists are distributed in about 30 or 35 cities in the United States, leaving the rest of the 200 cities entirely without any attempt at Federal prohibition enforcement. There are literally thousands and thousands of counties throughout the United States and sections of the country entirely without any Federal prohibition enforcement. It is no alibi to say that many States have their own State prohibition laws and their own enforcement. There is no difference between the wet who says leave the enforcement of prohibition to the Federal Government and the dry who says leave the enforcement of the Federal law to the States. They are both dodging the question. They are both satisfied with permitting existing disgraceful conditions to continue. In one section of the country where every State has State prohibition laws and State enforcement it simply means that the white man can get all he wants and the colored man is sent to jail if he is found with a pint of gin in his pocket.

Mr. MADDEN. But is not seriously dangerous while it is in his pocket, is it?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. What is that?

Mr. MADDEN. It is not seriously dangerous while it is in his pocket, is it? Does the gentleman catch that?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I will get it pretty soon. Just give me time to think of it.

Mr. ARENTZ. He might fall down on it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I would, if I had it inside.

There seems to be a tacit agreement to let the law drift on with only spasmodic enforcement here and there from time to time.

Last month I gave the prohibition officials something to do concerning the importation of liquor. Now I will give them some domestic make to look after. At 1182 Broadway, New York City, is located the office of the clearing house for breweries.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. In a moment.

The sad feature about this is that a close investigation of this office will find several agents of the Government going there at stated intervals. Breweries in New York City, in Kingston, in Poughkeepsie, in Westchester County, and also in Erie and Monroe Counties operate through this clearing house. I will give the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of prohibition not only the names and addresses, but also the telephone numbers of the gentlemen in charge of this clearing house. I also want to point out that at the very time that one of these breweries was supposed to be under investigation a permit was reinstated to manufacture near beer and very little near beer ever came out of that brewery. I will give the name and address of this brewery to the Treasury Department if they want it.

Every now and then we hear and even see pictures of a supply of liquor that has been seized and destroyed. Why good liquor that has been seized and taken to the Knickerbocker warehouse has found its way out of that warehouse and back on the market.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Liquorbocker warehouse? [Laughter.]

Mr. LaGUARDIA. No; the Knickerbocker warehouse. A great deal of liquor has been destroyed from that warehouse, but most of it is the bad and impure liquor. Seizures are made in New York either by the police department or by prohibition agents and if the stuff is to be sent to the Knickerbocker warehouse in all likelihood the owner of the liquor is told he can have his stuff back and colored water is sent to the warehouse. This same warehouse which has had a permit from the Government for years, stores the automobiles seized by the Government agents. These automobiles are sold at auction and the proceeds go to the Government, but before they are sold at auction all the trimmings and spares are taken off and what becomes of them only the owners of the warehouse can tell, and that is no small item. This warehouse, I charge, has political protection here in the city of Washington. Complaint after complaint has been made by the various administrators in New York City and yet it has been impossible for any administrator—and we have had several bad, worse, and indifferent—to rescind the permit of this warehouse. It has made a fortune since prohibition. Only recently the Knickerbocker warehouse furnished the wrecking crew which accompanied the prohibition administrator in a raid he made of some night club. This wrecking crew literally demolished the place, tearing out fixtures from the wall, tearing out plumbing, even tearing out the telephone instruments, and finally when the telephone company went to salvage their telephone instruments they found all the nickels were removed from the coin boxes. I am writing to the Comptroller General of the United States, as I understand that the bill for the wrecking crew amounts to over $1,000. I do not believe that any money was appropriated by Congress authorizing a prohibition administrator to go out and hire a wrecking crew to unlawfully and wantonly destroy property.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the attention of the gentleman been called to the magazine article on this subject prepared by Miss Evangeline Booth, of the Salvation Army?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he does not believe that that article is destined to have a more profound influence on the sentiments of certain classes of people relative to this prohibition question than anything that has appeared for a long time?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Miss Booth in her article stresses some points. The gentleman has read the article. She overlooks entirely the fact that the economic condition to-day, compared with the economic condition at the time she compares it with, is not due to prohibition but to increased wages. Miss Booth overlooks the fact that at the time she takes for comparison bricklayers were getting $5 a day, whereas to-day they are getting $14 a day, and stonemasons were then getting $3.50, while to-day they are getting $15.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That which they were buying was also cheaper at that time.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Comparatively. Now, Miss Booth is frank enough to say, or rather is frank enough not to say, that drinking has stopped by any means. She gets her information from some of the workers. When she says the improved economic condition is entirely due to prohibition, there, I believe, she is wrong.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Speaking of that wrecking crew that the gentleman mentioned, the other day they went up to a store on Pearl Street, in Baltimore, and not finding anything there they broke up the marble counters and everything in the store, and this Herbert says that was right.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Who is that? Who is this Herbert?

Mr. LINTHICUM. He is superintendent of the Prohibition Unit in Baltimore city.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The professional dry does not want this matter discussed. He does not want to know the facts. The bootlegger to-day and the professional dry are absolutely satisfied with conditions. They say, "Let it go as it is." Why? Because the professional dry has a good thing out of it. The bootlegger is making money.

Now, just a few days before that raid that I referred to, the commissioner addressed a meeting of the Anti-Saloon League or some other organization, and at that meeting he said, "I am going to enforce the law." Then he goes out and makes that spectacular raid. They do that to cover up their doings. I suppose that is what happened in the gentleman's town. He went before some people and said, "I am going to make a showing," and then made a raid and made a spectacular showing, while wholesale violations are going on every hour of the day and night.

Mr. LINTHICUM. One of my colleagues from Maryland introduced a resolution to investigate this Herbert, and soon after that this spectacular raid was made.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. When I made the statement concerning importations of liquor and displayed some original orders and names, one of the newspaper boys in New York told me, "They are going to soft-pedal on this." One of these patrons of choice imported liquor during the month of October spent $109,000 in advertising. In November he spent $104,000 in advertising.

Mr. ARENTZ. What was the advertising?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Advertising his business.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is there any truth in the report recently appearing in the press that the mayor of the gentleman's city has been a recent convert to prohibition?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I am very sorry that Jimmy is sick. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, here is the attitude: I know it is not pleasant to some Members to hear of these conditions as I relate them to you from time to time. It must be tiring to you. But I will vote for every appropriation that you bring up, and will vote for every law that you ask to enforce this law, but I reserve the right to show you that you can not enforce it.

I now state that not only do you not want to enforce it but you do not want to talk about it. See the spectacle afforded by outstanding candidates for office, ducking the law about enforcement! It is like a man saying, "You should not beat your mother." If the law were really enforced, none of us can get anything to drink. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. How does the gentleman expect to enforce it when 75 per cent of the officials fell down in the intelligence test that was held here a short time ago?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That shows that it is difficult to get a good clean-cut American boy to go into that kind of work. Don't you see? A great many of the agents have a prohibition mind. They read the questions, and they thought of something else. [Laughter.] Have you got what I mean?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the average Member on the floor here has marvelous confidence in him in many directions, and particularly do we admire his common, everyday honesty. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York, if he would care to answer it, whether he and those for whom he speaks would enforce respect for the eighteenth amendment if they had it in their power so to do.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, I would not want the people who do not believe in the eighteenth amendment to be intrusted with the enforcement of it. I would turn it over to the Anti-Saloon League; I would turn it over to the driest of the drys; I would not have an administrator or an assistant secretary in charge of prohibition who did not sincerely believe in it; I would put the whole thing into the hands of the drys and let them do it.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. But I am asking now, Would he and those for whom he speaks enforce it if they had the power?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would not want to do that. I say to the drys, take it into your own hands and enforce it. We will abide by it.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I am asking what would be the attitude of my colleague from New York if he had the power?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, "we will not talk about that now."

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman spoke about turning it over to the Anti-Saloon League. Does not the gentleman know that the Anti-Saloon League has practically dictated all of the appointments made, that those appointees have not done anything, and that in the recent examination 75 per cent of them failed in the intelligence test.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Have not the biggest crooks found in the Prohibition Unit been those recommended and put in at the instance of the Anti-Saloon League?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We ought to keep driving that home.

Mr. SCHAFER. I think the gentleman went too far in saying he would put it in the hands of the Anti-Saloon League, because the Anti-Saloon League has dictated the appointment of these agents and they have fallen down on the job.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But they say they can enforce it, and I say give them all the responsibility and give them all the money they want. I say they can not enforce it because it is not humanly possible of being enforced.

Mr. CELLER. Would the gentleman say the prohibition agents fell down in the recent examination because, perhaps, they applied the honor system to the examination?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Those things happen, too, in the best of families. [Applause.]

From my observation it will take a Federal force of nearly 100,000 men to make a semblance of enforcement. Every wholesale and retail bootlegger of the country is satisfied with existing conditions. The drys are afraid to tackle the problem; the professional dry is afraid to admit conditions and to have to concede that it will take an enormous army and huge appropriations to commence to enforce this law. Politicians are ducking, candidates are hedging, the Anti-Saloon League prospering, people are being poisoned, bootleggers are being enriched, and Government officials are being corrupted. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to take this opportunity to extend my thanks to the Republican National Committee for having sent young Teddy Roosevelt on a nation-wide speaking tour, so that he can make untrue statements about the Governor of the great State of New York. I think that if the national committee is trying to block the nomination of our governor for President it is an indication that they regard him as the ablest and the strongest candidate that my party can nominate. In pursuing this course I fully agree with them that he is the ablest candidate, but there is an old saying that you should not send out a boy when you need a man to do the job. If the Republicans want to nominate Governor Smith, all they have to do is to keep young Teddy on the stump. My heart is with them in that. The boy bears an honest and respected name. I revere his father and all good Americans do, but the young colonel is in a fair way to dim the glory of his illustrious name.

Let me read to you an editorial that appeared this morning in the Washington Daily News. You know that the Scripps-Howard newspapers have established a reputation for political independence, fairness, and courage, and here is what they say about young Teddy:

TEDDY TAKES THE STUMP

Like the frosty robin chirping of spring's approach, the first spellbinder of the national political campaign has hopped into the headlines.

The man who thus early warns us to prepare for our quadrennial headache is none other than young Teddy Roosevelt. He is making a nation-wide speaking tour designed, it is told, to land himself a vice-presidential nomination. Before leaving New York, it was intimated by his "friends" that he had no choice for the presidential nomination, and was willing to be a running mate for "Hoover, DAWES, Lowden, CURTIS, or WILLIS."

He has taken an unusual course for a man seeking office. Instead of first getting the support of his home State, he has begun his campaign on the plains of bleeding Kansas. Topeka was his first one-night stand.

There may be a virtue, however, in running for office where one is not known. In New York, for instance, young Teddy is best remembered as the son of a distinguished American, the messenger boy who handled the Executive order turning the naval oil lands over to the clutches of Albert B. Fall, the official who ordered United States marines to drive honest squatters off Doheny's Teapot Dome preserves, and the candidate who lost by 107,000 votes to Al Smith in a year that saw New York go to Coolidge by 850,000.

It is to be hoped other prospective campaigners will read Teddy's Topeka speech to learn the kind of partisan, flag-waving oratory the public does not want to hear. There are too many great issues before the Nation for any time or breath to be wasted on the sort of stuff that was moss-worn when Blaine first ran for President.

Teddy's speeches are important for what they omit as well as for what they contain.

In eulogizing eight years of Republican rule Teddy forgot to mention such celebrities as Daugherty, Denby, Forbes, Fall, Jess Smith, Tom Miller, and the other best minds who guided the Nation's destinies from the little green table in the little green house on K Street. It would be interesting to know why, in his political reminiscences, Teddy blots this edifying scene from his memory.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT].

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I have asked for a few minutes in which to take issue with the Mississippi River Commission and with the Chief of the Army Engineers, General Jadwin, with regard to the place of forestry in any comprehensive flood-control program. I wish first to call attention to the position taken by the commission.

That part of the special flood report submitted by the Mississippi River Commission which deals with forestry as a factor in flood control constitutes a brief but amazing chapter to form part of a serious public document. After alleging that a careful study has been made of the possibility of obtaining flood relief from reforesting, the report states conclusions as follows:

(a) That reforesting would not be efficacious.
(b) That reforesting for flood control would be economically unsound.
(c) That the remedy sought in reforesting would be too slow in effect.

The conclusions of the commission are erroneous, uninforming, and are based upon a misconception of the facts. The commission states that for a forest to arrive at the full benefits for flood control requires "50 to 100 years, or even longer." This is an absurdity. To produce high-grade saw logs does require 50 to 100 years, or even longer, but the full benefits of forest planting in the form of stopping soil erosion are usually reached within 5 to 10 years, and full benefits in the form of water storage and stream-flow regulation are reached within 10 to 20 years. The commission has already been working on this problem since its creation by Congress in 1879, a period of 48 years—a period nearly five times as long as that required to check erosion by reforestation and more than twice as long as the maximum period required to secure full benefits from forest planting in the form of water storage and stream-flow regulation. There is nothing to indicate that the other necessary engineering works will all be completed at a date earlier than the maximum 20 years required for a forest.

Equally absurd is the commission's claim that reforesting for flood control would be economically unsound. It states:

> Even if it could be shown that reforesting would be beneficial in its effects on floods, it must be granted by its proponents that anything short of reforesting on a very large scale would not have a measurable effect on Mississippi River floods. Turning productive farm lands on such a large scale back to forests would be economically unsound.

Now, notice particularly that last statement from their report:

> Turning productive farm lands on such a large scale back to forests would be economically unsound.

I wish to call the attention of the Congress to the fact that no one in official position in the Forest Service, no one in the profession of forestry anywhere, has ever suggested the turning back of one acre of agricultural land to forest land. This has never been suggested from any source, but this is only one of the false assumptions to which attention could be called in the report of the Mississippi River Commission. The report shows absolute ignorance and misconception when it comes to treating the subject of forestry in connection with this great program.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LEAVITT. I will yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not the fact that the proposition is to convert waste lands into forests?

Mr. LEAVITT. That is exactly the point to which I was coming.

The Mississippi River Commission takes for its study two areas in the northern part of Minnesota. I am acquainted with them. One of them is an agricultural section and the other is a timbered section in the vicinity of Lake Superior. Their statement indicates an utter lack of knowledge of the effect of forests upon stream flow. No foresters advocate "turning productive farm lands back to forests." Productive farm lands, under proper cultivation and management, have a beneficial influence upon stream flow substantially equivalent to forest lands. They must have physical characteristics enabling them to take up a large part of the rainfall and utilize it in producing crops. Forests are most effective on steep land from which the rainfall otherwise would rush off, carrying with it the fertility of the top soil. Encouraging and protecting forests on such lands has a beneficial influence upon stream flow. It is the waste lands and lands which wash badly when denuded that contribute most largely to flood dangers and flood damage.

The report of the Forest Service, submitted to the House Flood Committee, indicates a total area of approximately 250,000 square miles of critical areas on the Mississippi watershed, embracing a total area of about 160,000,000 acres, or about 20 per cent of the total area of the Mississippi Valley. These lands contribute a large share of the burden of half a billion tons of silt carried into the channel of the Mississippi River each year. This silt increases the volume of the flood as well as increasing its destructiveness. The reasoning followed by the commission and the evidence submitted in attempting to prove that forests would not be efficacious is naive, to say the least. It bases its conclusions upon certain data obtained by measurements of annual run-off from the two watersheds in northern Minnesota. One watershed is largely farm land; in other words, the very kind of land that should be cultivated and the kind that foresters understand, with proper cultivation and the growing of farm crops, is not detrimental from a flood-control standpoint. The other area was in the lumber regions of the lake district of Minnesota, a region which because of its level topography, porous sandy soil, and innumerable lakes, was classified by the Forest Service as a region within which forests had little influence upon stream-flow regulation.

The commission states that its records show that there was some increase in the percentage of run-off from this timbered watershed during the period of deforestation, followed by a gradual recovery, until the run-off from the area with growth of young timber was no greater than it was in the virgin forest period. But the commission failed to carry its calculations to their logical conclusion. An additional column should be added to the table found on page 74 of its special report. The efficacy of a watershed is determined not by the percentage of the total rainfall which appears as run-off, but by the actual number of inches of rainfall actually retained by the watershed and reconveyed to the air without running off. Take the table on page 74 and add to it a third column entitled "Average number of inches of water actually retained each year." Making this calculation based on the commission's own figures, the number of inches of rainfall actually retained each year by the watershed was as follows:

Period ending—	Inches
1891	20.21
1898	20.42
1905	19.54
1912	18.66
1919	18.91

It will be seen from this that instead of there being the full recovery of the watershed, as reported by the commission, there has been a steady falling off in the actual amount of water retained by the watershed each year. The difference between the first seven-year period and the last seven-year period averages over 2 inches per annum. Applying this difference to the entire 120,000 square miles of forest land in the upper Mississippi and the Ohio River drainage we get a total volume equivalent to 12,466,000 acre-feet. According to General Jadwin's report 7,000,000 to 11,000,000 acre-feet of storage will reduce the flood stage of the Mississippi by 1 foot. By means of the vast potential storage thus indicated the flood crest might be reduced between 1 and 2 feet. Whether such a reduction would be important would depend upon how near the crest of the flood approached the top of the levees. At any rate, it can safely be said that the floods would certainly be diminished both in volume and destructiveness by preventing erosion. It is also certain that increasing the water-storage capacity of the forest would materially reduce the flood crest so that the run-off would take place during a longer period of time. And in addition to the claims made by the Forest Service the actual figures presented by the commission show a decided increase in the amount of moisture retained by virgin forests, which means, conversely, a decided decrease in the volume of run-off. Stated in its simplest terms, the influence of forests upon floods and run-off is that instead of a vast volume of muddy water rushing off in a brief period, the run-off is in the form of clear water of reasonably uniform flow. High levels are reduced, low-water stages increased. It seems in the interest of clear thinking and clear action upon our part, as a responsible body, that these facts should be known.

The Forest Service has not recommended to the Flood Committee that it specifically ask for the appropriation of a single dollar for flood control through forestry. It has urged upon the committee, however, that the proper protection of our forests and the intelligent application of sound forestry practice in the Mississippi Valley would give to the threatened region a considerable measure of flood relief without any expense being incurred directly for that purpose. The forests themselves will pay their way with timber and other products. I emphasize this statement. The Mississippi River Commission have begun by taking areas that no forester would take to prove the value of forest cover in flood control, and then they have disproved their own case with regard to that area, even though it could not fairly be taken as a characteristic area at all.

I am sorry I have not the time to discuss fully the report of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, General Jadwin, but I think it is fair for Congress to expect that when a report is made upon which the opinion of Congress may be formed and upon which the opinion of the Nation may be formed, it should contain only entire facts.

A study was made during the last year by the United States Forest Service in cooperation with the foresters of the various States in the Mississippi drainage, comprising about 100 men trained in that kind of work. There were brought in certain recommendations as to what might be done, not to solve the problem of the Mississippi floods—and let me pause at this point and emphasize that again—no forester in official position or out has ever claimed that forestry would or could solve the problem of the Mississippi flood. No such claim has ever been made by anyone, but any informed forester knows, and many who are not foresters by profession know, from their own observation that a comprehensive reforestation of lands that are more suitable for the raising of forests, particularly on steep areas, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] has said, will add materially to the control of flood waters in any drainage basin. The Chief Forester himself, Colonel Greeley, starts the statement he has made in connection with forests and floods, which was printed just this month, with these words:

> Now that the Mississippi floods have awakened us to the need for the most complete insurance possible against the recurrence of such catastrophes, it is essential that the true rôle of forests in flood control be recognized. Nothing will be gained by exaggerating the importance of that rôle. On the other hand, unless forests are permitted to play their part, much will be lost.

And Colonel Greeley closes his very comprehensive statement with these other words, that I wish to quote:

In order to get the maximum benefits of forest cover in the Mississippi Basin it is essential that public ownership of forests, especially in the mountains and swamps, be greatly extended; that cooperation in forest fire protection between the Federal Government, the State, and private owners be increased; and that the Government and States give more assistance to farmers and timberland owners in forest planting and better forest management. Engineering works are a primary essential in flood control, but vigorous, well-kept forests will supplement and protect them. The two methods of control should be developed together, a river being treated as a unit from source to mouth. The prudent use of forest land, like the prudent use of farm and grazing land, pays its own way, and the gain to flood control is a by-product without cost.

That is the position of the foresters, and words of other meaning should not be put into their mouths.

The forestry report placed in the hands of General Jadwin stated eight ways whereby forest practice and control of public lands might add to the solution of this problem, and among those eight ways there are seven that could now be handled under laws which exist.

Seven of these in their order of importance are adequate protection against fire of the forest lands within the Mississippi River watershed; increased activities in the planting land chiefly valuable for growing timber; proper management of farm woodland; extension of public forests to the extent of about 8,000,000 acres within the watersheds; continued protection of national forests and the reservation of adjoining forest acres of unreserved public domain; research to discover methods of preventing serious erosion in the Bad Lands and the Breaks; checking present destructive run-offs and erosion from public grazing lands by regulating their use.

There is no law which would allow the latter procedure, but all the others are covered as possibilities by existing law and require only more adequate appropriations.

But the general, listing only the item to increase forest areas by 8,000,000 acres within the watersheds by extension of public forests, says on page 19 of his report:

Studies of the reservoir board have shown that to reduce the flood stage of the Mississippi by 1 foot it is necessary to store from 7,000,000 to 11,000,000 acre-feet of water. The absorption and retention of one-half of an inch of rainfall on the 8,000,000 acres of land covered in the recommendation of the forestry report would therefore reduce flood stages by but one-half an inch.

General Jadwin has intimated that the forestry report comprises only the proposal to add 8,000,000 acres of public forest, which would reduce the flood crest only one-half inch, when the fact is that the forestry report made eight proposals, and these eight proposals together cover not 8,000,000 acres of land but twenty times 8,000,000 acres of land. Taking the figures of General Jadwin himself and applying them to this entire area it would have reduced the crest of the flood 10 inches instead of half an inch.

Also, in this report they have placed the forestry report as a suggested alternative. It has never been suggested as an alternative. It has been suggested as a supplement to the engineering work, which the forestry has always said is the prime necessity to meet the present situation, with forestry added to help keep the disaster from recurring.

Now, Members of Congress, the plea I am making at this time is that instead of our allowing a report of this kind to turn the attention of the Nation aside from the place which forestry should take in meeting this great problem of flood control, Members should have in mind that it has a definite and important place. At the headwaters of a stream it will help to stop erosion, and in the absorption of the rainfall and the snow, it will play an important part, though no one claims that it will solve the entire problem.

Let us keep in mind the statement made in the Saturday Evening Post back last year when the flood took place:

Perhaps the only beneficient effect traceable to the recent floods is the nation-wide publicity they have given to the needs for extensive reforestation in most of the 30 States drained by the Mississippi River. It is to be hoped that each of them will give the matter thoughtful consideration and take such action as will serve both ends—a better retention of local rainfalls and the upbuilding of a more adequate timber supply.

[Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, since the beginning of this century my State has lost a preponderance of one character of its population. We started in with 200,000 more colored people than white people. A shift of population has come along until now the white people are in the majority. This morning I received a communication from an organization in Chicago, which seems to me to be rather inclined to reflect on a lot of our people who have emigrated, who have hearkened to the call to go West.

I know nothing about this association beyond its name, the National Civic Welfare Association, which seems to be located at 1240 Grace Street, Chicago, Ill. It writes a letter to me, and I reckon all of the other Members, in which letter the association seems inclined to complain that our fellow citizens who have gone North are acquiring some little political power and some little of the profits of office. I bespeak for them a more kindly consideration than they are getting in this document, which is issued, and if the document is true, then I bespeak a little cleaning up in the Post Office Department of this great Government, which has been claiming that it is the most businesslike department in the world. They say in this communication that the population of Chicago according to the last estimate obtainable is in excess of 3,000,000 inhabitants, of which, they say, about 5 per cent, or 150,000, are of the Negro or colored race, and that out of the entire employment in the Chicago Post Office of 11,019 men and women, 2,950, or 31 per cent, are of the Negro race.

They are inclined to complain that our fellow citizens who went up there are getting six times as much office as they are entitled to. Well, they invited them to go up there, and they have been preaching to us ever since the Civil War that the negroes were just as good or a little better than we were. But, lo and behold, they now complain that these people can outdistance them in this quest for office.

This communication goes on to say that a great portion of these colored employees have been recently imported from the South. Well, there is no great harm in that. The South is a pretty good country. We do not lynch quite so many as we used to, and I think it is because most of those who might have been lynched have gone up North and gotten into the post office. Further, the communication says that many of those are ignorant, illiterate, and boastful and uncivil, and pugnacious, "and specially prepared for entrance to the Postal Service only."

Mr. Chairman, I do not know what special study it takes to prepare them only for the Postal Service, but if they have any more harsh adjectives in Chicago to use in respect to them I would like to see the document, because I think it would take a man like Governor LUCE, of Massachusetts, to enunciate any additional ones to the ones that they have already applied. [Laughter.]

The document then goes on to say that it is quoting from a report which they say was made by a board of efficiency experts, authorized by the Congress and employed by the Harding administration in 1921 to investigate the conditions in the Post Office Department, and to report any abuses that they found. So it is a matter which I shall lay at the doorstep of the present administration, in so far as any abuses found there are concerned, because these abuses were laid before the country and the Government in 1921 by efficiency experts employed by a Republican administration.

The document goes on further to say that it is a commonly known fact that where white employees would have been dismissed from the service for certain infractions, colored employees are protected from dismissal by the interference of a certain white political official who has even gone to the extent of having colored supervisory officials appointed in the Chicago post office in repayment of negro political support.

I do not know whether this refers to some Congressman from Chicago or to the mayor of Chicago; but that is a pretty serious charge when it says that with a white man and a colored man working along together side by side, and each does the same thing, that the white man is kicked out for it and then some politician comes in and saves the scalp of the negro.

It also goes on to say—and this is the report of the Richards Co., made to the Government of the United States in 1921:

From our observation, which is confirmed by the supervisory officials and station superintendents, the work of the 1,400 colored employees of the Chicago post office could be done by 900 average white employees. This makes possible a saving of five hundred times $1,400, or $700,000 per year.

That was in 1921. Since then, as the report goes on to say, the 1,400 have been doubled, and there are now 2,950, so that the saving by getting rid of them and letting 900 white men do what 1,400 colored men are required to do would be a saving of twice $700,000 a year, or over $1,000,000 a year. That seems to be the conclusion drawn by those experts. I do not know.

I am not prepared to give any such figures as that, but they are official, and the Government has had that since 1921. Instead of reducing, instead of increasing efficiency, they seem to have winked at Sambo and excused his derelictions and let the white men go and put the colored men in, and thereby recognized the truth of the statement which they used to make to us down South, that the colored man is better than we are anyway. That is a proposition that I do not know a thing about, but I thought that inasmuch as this apparently very patriotic association had taken the trouble to spend its postage and actually get the matter through the Chicago post office down here, it was as well that I might call the attention of Congress to the fact.

Mr. Chairman, I have read a large part of it, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein the entire document.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get five minutes in which to answer the gentleman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman has no views of his own on the subject?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have not any at all. I just called attention to the fact of what the Chicago people are saying about our former fellow citizens who have gone up there, and I resent some of it because they said that they were too many kinds of bad folks. I do not believe that they have gotten any worse since they left. They say that they are ignorant and illiterate. Perhaps they are, but then they say that they are boastful and uncivil and pugnacious and specially prepared to enter the Post Office service only.

As I say, I rather resent any adjectives of that kind being used against our former fellow citizens. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman is merely adding to the gayety of the Nation.

Mr. STEVENSON. No; I am not. I am calling attention to something that the gentleman from Chicago certainly needs to clear up if there is any truth in these statements. I do not vouch for them. I just got them from Chicago and I have let you have them.

I will say this in conclusion, that they have a mayor out there who would drive out the English from the public schools and the higher institutions of learning. According to these people here, he ought to get busy and eliminate a few Africans from the post office, if they are telling the truth. It is up to the gentleman from Illinois to take care of that. He is possessed of the facts. It is up to him to tell us whether they are true of not. [Applause.]

Following is the letter referred to:

NATIONAL CIVIC WELFARE ASSOCIATION, Chicago.

Hon. WILLIAM F. STEVENSON,
Member of Congress, State of South Carolina,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: We are writing this letter to you with a view of acquainting you with a most deplorable condition existing in the Chicago post office because of the excessive increase of employees of the Negro race, which is slowly disrupting the morale of the service, decreasing all standards, to the obvious detriment of the entire service, as was fully demonstrated by the investigation made in 1921 by the W. B. Richards Co., efficiency experts. This company was authorized by the Congress of the United States to make a survey of the leading post offices of the United States relative to the efficiency of the various post offices. We are herewith inclosing resolutions adopted at a recent meeting, which will in a measure acquaint you with the situation. Following are some of the facts brought to light by the aforementioned survey:

"The situation in respect to the growing number of colored employees in the Chicago postal service is a very serious one. When it comes to the practical handling of mail, the colored employees are inferior to the whites; this, of course, refers to the general average.

"When the importance of the Postal Service to the whole business and social life of the Nation is considered, this subject becomes worthy of discussion. Many of the white employees will not work at such close quarters with the negroes. Consequently the influx of negroes also results in lowering the standards of the white employees, due to the fact that those whites who do remain in the service are usually of lower caliber than those who go out.

"From our observation, which is confirmed by the supervisory officials and station superintendents, the work of the 1,400 colored employees of the Chicago post office could be done by 900 average white employees. This makes possible a saving of 500 times $1,400, or $700,000 per year. The enforcement of efficiency standards on daily work will automatically eliminate the bulk of these 1,400 negroes and will effect a saving of $700,000 per year."

We respectfully call your attention to the statements above and recommendations by the efficiency engineers. We wish to call your attention to this fact: When they figured up five hundred times $1,400 they figured the starting salary of the postal clerks. Since that time the salaries have increased $300 per year. Colored employees have increased to 2,950 instead of 1,400. To our mind it does not take much of a mathematician to figure what a saving the Government would enjoy if it were possible to enforce efficiency standards against this class of people, or eliminate them.

The approximate population of Chicago is 3,000,000 people, of which 150,000, or 5 per cent, are negroes. At the ratio of one out of every four being a male adult, there are 37,000 negro families.

There are 11,019 employees in the Chicago post office, of which 2,950 are colored, making a total of 31 per cent of the employees, or 9 per cent of the negro adult. There are eight colored foremen, appointed recently.

It is the experience of every supervisory official in the post office that the postal laws and regulations made to govern all employees do not function when any of the colored employees, as they usually do, appeal to the politician. He comes to the post office and has whatever disciplinary action has been taken against such employee removed, nullifying the duties of the supervisory official and making him a supervisor in name only. In fact, the 150,000 negroes dictate to the politicians anything that it pleases them to the elimination of 2,850,000 white people of Chicago. We wish to respectfully submit for your consideration these facts as all business men agree that in all organization we must have discipline. As discipline is productive of harmony and harmony is essential to efficiency, it is impossible to create efficiency under the conditions as stated above.

Your commission states that it has observed on the workroom floor of the mailing division that mail was often dumped on the facing table on top of mail that was being faced. This condition is illustrated several times during the tests we have made, for it often happened that several letters dropped in the mail box at the same time would receive post marks differing an hour or more in time. It was also observed that lack of proper supervision of these employees at the facing table resulted in their slow work on this operation. This is especially noticeable with those colored female employees who are employed on the facing tables.

We respectfully ask you how the supervisory official can exercise proper supervision of people who appeal to the politician and whose prayer is continually heard to the detriment of the service. We also call your attention to another fact: These same colored female employees have never qualified on a scheme, have never been made to do as the men do, white or negro, work from 10 to 15 years nights, but have been given preferred work, drawing top salaries for doing work that is customarily performed by beginners.

We believe it a significant circumstance that, although the investigation and report were made some six years ago, no effort has been made to correct any evil that might exist, and we further believe that this fact calls for additional investigation.

Trusting that the seriousness of the situation merits some thought and action upon your part, we are,

Most sincerely,

NATIONAL CIVIC WELFARE ASSOCIATION,
By L. W. GELBAUGH, Secretary.

Resolutions adopted by the National Civic Welfare Association, December 1, 1927

Whereas the Postal Department of the United States is an institution conducted for the benefit of the citizenry of the United States; and

Whereas the post office of the United States, located at Chicago, Ill., is a constituent and component part of the entire postal system of the entire United States; and

Whereas, in order to function properly with the best results obtainable, the mental and physical well being of the human element involved should be such as is conducive to the best results for the benefit of the general public; and

Whereas the population of Chicago under the latest estimation obtainable is in excess of 3,000,000 inhabitants, of which amount about 5 per cent, or 150,000, are of the Negro or colored race; and

Whereas, out of an entire employment in the Chicago post office of 11,019 men and women, 2,950, or 31 per cent, are of the Negro race; and

Whereas a great portion of these colored employees are recently imported from the South, and many are ignorant, illiterate, boastful, uncivil, pugnacious, and especially prepared for entrance to the Postal Service only; and

Whereas this condition has been brought about through certain political agencies in Chicago, Ill.; and

Whereas this condition has brought about and caused a low spirit and morale among the white employees at Chicago; and

Whereas this condition has resulted in the colored employees openly boasting that they can compel certain public and political officials to do any and all of their bidding, and that they at all times are well protected, politically, so that it has become traditional in the Chicago post office that those rules and regulations governing postal employees do not include colored employees, and has created a condition whereby no supervisory official dares apply to the colored employees those rules and regulations in full force for all postal employees; and

Whereas it is a commonly known fact that where white employees would have been dismissed from the service for certain infractions, colored employees were protected from dismissal by the interference of a certain white political official who has even gone to the extent of having colored supervisory officials appointed in the Chicago post office in repayment of negro political support; and

Whereas, after a thorough investigation of post offices throughout the United States, during the year 1921, W. B. Richards & Co., efficiency experts, authorized to make said survey, stated in their report "The situation in respect to the growing number of colored employees in the Chicago postal service is a serious one. When it comes to the practical handling of mail the colored employees are inferior to the whites" (referring to the general average); and

Whereas it was conservatively computed by the W. B. Richards Co. that 900 average whites could perform the work being done by 1,400 average negroes, this overemployment of negroes results in a loss in excess of $1,000,000 per year; and

Whereas we believe a serious condition prevails in the Chicago post office: Be it

Resolved, That all the United States Senators and Congressmen be advised of the condition prevailing in the Chicago post office, with a view of acquainting them of the seriousness of the postal situation at Chicago; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives be furnished with the facts connected with the situation and that a thorough investigation be made for the purpose of correcting an evil which, if permitted to continue, would become "cancerous" to the detriment of the Postal Service.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, is it clear that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] has no motive in presenting this case? Perhaps if he could look nearer home he would find better reason for clearing up things than he finds in the case of clearing up Chicago. Chicago needs no defense from me or anybody else. There she stands. [Applause.] Chicago is the imperial city of the great Central West.

Mr. MANSFIELD. She does not stand; she moves. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. She moves forward with advancing civilization. Her great activities and great industries need no defense from me, and her people need no defense at my hands, whether they be black or white. There is no greater American city than Chicago. It is true that Chicago has among her people a population representing all nations, but everything that moves them to action is strictly American.

The mayor of Chicago needs no defense at my hands. There is no more patriotic American than he. He is the descendant of a father who fought with Farragut, whose antecedents came over in the Mayflower. If he is not an American, who is? If these black people in Chicago are not Americans, where are Americans to be found? They were forced to come to America when they first came. They were put into slavery against their own will. They were freed from slavery against the will of those who now try to traduce them. [Applause.] They are citizens of the United States and recognized as such in Chicago.

The Chicago post office is the second biggest post office in America. The city has more than 3,000,000 people; not less. More than 14,000 Americans are employed in the Chicago post office. Three thousand two hundred of them are black. They are patriotic Americans. They do their duty as they find it. They are law-abiding citizens. They are recognized as law-abiding citizens. They have the respect of the community in which they live. There are more than 150,000 black people in Chicago; I should say 400,000. They have made more progress in Chicago than any other class of people I know. They are in the banking business and in the manufacturing business. They are in art; they are in education. They are in all the great activities that attract the best minds of the best people of the world. [Applause.]

I honor them. They have honored me more than once. I am proud to be here to speak for the black people of Chicago and of the Nation. I apologize to no man, wherever he may be, for my interest in the progress of the black people of America.

The people of the South naturally are a little chagrined because the black people are leaving them and forcing them to work. [Laughter.] They would like to have them come back, but the black people refuse to do it after they have obtained a single glimpse of liberty as it is to be found in the North; yes, in Chicago; put it in Chicago, the city of the greatest progress on the American continent, whose people dare to do and do; the city with more railroad terminals than any other city in America; the city that honors and respects every man, and honors and respects itself. A man does not have to come from South Carolina to be considered respectable enough to live in Chicago. He can come from any place, if he behaves himself, and can live there and be respected.

I am glad that Chicago is sufficiently liberal in its views to recognize the rights of citizens, whether they be black or white. The Chicago post office is a Government institution, and black people pay taxes to maintain it as much as anybody else does, and we have no right, neither has this organization, whatever it may consist of or whoever may belong to it, to say that a black man, a citizen of the United States, has no right to the consideration of a citizen of another color. We have them yellow, black, white, Chinese, Japanese—citizens. They are all treated with proper consideration. They are all honored as they deserve to be honored; and Chicago, the queen of the inland seas, pays no attention whatever to any protests from any crowd so narrow minded as those who sent this circular letter to the gentleman from South Carolina. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I certainly have no desire to become involved in any way as to the political aspects of the prohibition question. I was interested in the observations of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] a few moments ago, and while he was talking my mind reverted to an article which I had read within the last few days and concerning which I made an inquiry of the gentleman from New York while he was speaking. I was so tremendously impressed by that article that I felt I wanted to refer to it just a little further than I did in the inquiry I made of the gentleman from New York.

The article appears in a recent magazine. It is a copyrighted article, and I do not feel at liberty to quote from it because we ought to respect the copyright, even though we, perhaps, could put it in the RECORD without getting ourselves into trouble. It is because of the source of this article that, in my opinion, it is going to attract very widespread attention and have a tremendous effect. The article is by Commander Evangeline Booth, of the Salvation Army, and is entitled "Some have stopped drinking."

Of all the institutions ever developed by men concerning which I have never heard one word of criticism I think the Salvation Army stands single and alone. [Applause.] There is not a soldier of America but respects it and would fight for it to-day. There is not a man in the lowest part of the lowest slums of any city of these United States who does not feel, as he sees coming toward him or passing by him one in the uniform of the Salvation Army, that somehow or other there is the mercy of God incarnated.

The article speaks of a certain class of people, not those who gather in clubrooms, not those who speak in hotels, not those who rise at banquets to discuss personal feelings or talk about personal liberty and veer off into the political phases of this question, but a great mass of mankind which she says has been uplifted, bettered, regenerated, and the article, coming from that source, is going to attract widest attention; it is going to command attention and elicit respect from every class of American society, and it is not going to be challenged as to its facts, either, coming from the source that it does come from.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman know of anyone who could speak with more authority and with better experience with reference to the condition of the masses of the city of New York than the author of that article?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think unquestionably it comes from the best source in the world, and undoubtedly what is said of New York is applicable to other cities where conditions somewhat similar exist. It is going to command the respect and elicit the attention not of those who wish to involve the question in politics but of those sincere people, without regard to party politics or without regard to their own dispositions toward this question, who are interested in the uplift of humanity. Your great industrialists, your great economists, and your ordinary everyday man as he goes about the streets is going to read this and believe it, and he is going to rejoice that there has been this wonderful improvement in this condition. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak, in the few minutes I have, on one phase of this bill—the Army appropriation bill. I had thought for some few years past that the citizens' military training camps were a pretty good thing for the boys and young men of this Nation. I thought that until I read the hearings. Remember, now, that those boys only go to these camps for two weeks in a year, and never over four, yet the War Department asks for an appropriation to provide hostesses at each of these camps—30 for the citizens' military training camps, 13 for the Regular Army. They say, in the first place, that these boys are homesick. A great number of the boys come from colleges, and yet they say they are homesick after a two weeks' stay. They say, further, it is for their best interests and the good of their characters that these hostesses are provided. The inference is that conditions would be intolerable around each camp if these boys, only 17 years of age, are permitted to attend without the hostesses.

I am strongly convinced, after reading the hearings, that an amendment should be introduced and placed upon this bill not to permit any youth of the tender age of 17 to attend one of these camps.

Let me read from the hearings. Mr. COLLINS, of the Appropriations Committee, evidently had before him the statement which the War Department sent down:

Mr. COLLINS. I notice two statements here that rather indicated that it was on account of the youth. You state here that qualified hostesses are essential in the larger camps to supervise the social activities of the candidates, arrange amusement features, etc. Homesickness is quite prevalent in the camps among boys who are away from home for the first stay of any length and the work of the hostess is a large factor in combating it—

Thirty hostesses for 38,000 men!—

Again, you make the statement here that in the larger camps competent hostesses are essential to maintain the morale, supervise the social activities, and secure proper contacts with local civilian communities. I thought perhaps that was largely on account of the fact that they were youngsters of tender years.

Major PHILLIPSON. The minimum age is 17. These boys are away from home, and we have a responsibility to their mothers and fathers to see that their environment is a correct one. The hostesses, I think, are largely used in their contact with the civilian communities for that purpose. They see that decent girls come to the dances, and that when they go to town they are invited to a respectable class of parties, etc. There is a good deal of that besides the maintaining of the general social atmosphere of the camp.

In addition, the bill does not show it is provided for at all, because on page 923 of the hearings I find this:

Mr. BARBOUR. There is nothing in this item about hostesses, is there?

Major PHILLIPSON. It is in the appropriation, but the change of language is out.

Mr. BARBOUR. There is no change of language, you say?

Major PHILLIPSON. No, sir; because that went to the Military Committee for permanent law. They took the change of language out, but they left the item in the project.

Mr. COLLINS. You have hostesses in here?

Major PHILLIPSON. Yes, sir.

But yet the appropriation is in the lump-sum amount.

Oh, shades of Grant, of Sherman, of Lee, and Jackson! Hostesses for an army! To think that in training men for soldiers you have to provide them a hostess for a two-weeks' stay in camp for fear of homesickness. It is absurd upon its face. To provide for their social activities. What have we come to?

It reminds me of a time after the war when we had this great educational campaign on in the Army, when one general officer in the Artillery, wanting his mechanics found they were being educated three hours a day, and when he went to see where these two mechanics were, two mountaineers of east Kentucky, full-size men, if you please, they were being educated—they were being educated to play the ukulele. [Laughter.] This happened at a camp in Kentucky.

I think if the conditions are such that it is not proper on account of the moral effect upon these boys of 17 to have them go to these camps, then by all means an amendment should be introduced to keep these boys at home and not let them go to the camp. Provide that the age shall not be less than 18 or 19 or even 20. But please remember we do not want homesick boys.

Mr. BERGER. Until they grow up.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Until they grow up. And, by the way, they have 13 of these hostesses for the Regular Army. Thirteen hostesses for 118,000 enlisted men! [Laughter.] My goodness, that is a busy 13. Over 10,000 men to a hostess. We are paying them something over $125 a month in the Regular Army. Last year they were to take this item out of the bill, but they did not do it. I have looked in vain in the hearings to ascertain if the enlisted men of the Regular Army are homesick. I hope and pray that they are not. My impression has been that this Committee on Appropriations was hard-boiled. How in the world you ever permitted a thing like this to get in, for the life of me I can not tell. [Laughter and applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, complaint has been registered that the Radio Commission has not made an equitable distribution of wave lengths contemplated by the radio act of 1927. Some Congressmen have charged that New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Illinois, California, Florida, Nebraska, Washington, Virginia, Iowa, and New Mexico have more broadcasting stations than they are entitled to. I believe that these arguments are untenable. Section 9 of the radio act provides for an equitable distribution of radio services and not of stations. About one-quarter of the total number of families in this country comprise the radio audience and that audience uses seven and one-half million radio sets. Measured by service and considering its limitations and difficulties the Radio Commission has allotted stations equitably.

WEAF and WGY, which are New York's two largest stations, the first involving 100,000 watts and the second involving 50,000 watts, serve the entire country. They can be heard in every State. They are thus rendering a service to every State. WGY has been heard on every continent. You might say that every country on the face of the globe is being served by that station. Would the radio public be any better off if WEAF or WGY or the two large New Jersey stations, WJZ and WOR, were stationed at Kalamazoo, Oshkosh, or Painted Post? It may be that Arizona, Montana, Maine, Arkansas, Alabama, or Georgia have an allocation of stations or a maximum license power or a share of channels that is not commensurate with their radio populations. But that is not the test. The large eastern stations and far western stations supply sufficient and attractive services to those States which are deficient in number of stations and station power.

If some of the Congressmen, raising the shibboleth of "State rights," insist upon a numerical division of stations among the States in accordance with populations, then the country is faced with this dilemma:

First. Either the 700 stations existing must be reallocated with consequent taking away from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and so forth, and the giving to Texas, Missouri, Indiana, South Carolina, Utah, and so forth.

Second. Or the number of stations must be augmented to a number far above 700. To increase the stations would be to blur further the radio spectrum. The commission was set up to eliminate interference and has fairly succeeded in doing so. To increase stations would undo its work and would make confusion worse confounded. To follow out the first alternative and to take away stations from some States and add them to others would be most unjust and inequitable. The great advances made in radio has been due to those entrepreneurs who were willing to take a chance. They were willing to invest their money with no assurance of return. They were the pathfinders and inventors and pioneers. They established themselves principally in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Illinois. They invested millions of dollars. They have rights of priority. They have vested rights. Even the Government can not ruthlessly deprive them of that which they have acquired by patient endeavors. Priority in time gives them superiority in right. For that reason the commission must maintain the status quo as to the allocation of these stations.

Chairman WHITE, of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, who has given great study to the question, has criticized the commission for not reducing the number of stations. The commission properly replies that to do so would have tangled up the radio situation with lawsuits and injunctions. It is my belief that the commission was justified in refusing to take a station off the air, because it could not do so legally.

Even the power of Congress is not strong enough to take away a man's property in a radio station which was established before Congress legislated. Congress can limit for the future. It can not take away what the past has given. Furthermore, the commission wisely sought to cut down the use of various channels by persuading in some instances as many as four stations to share time on the same wave length. In New York, for example, many stations divide time on the same wave. That is equivalent to a reduction. Then, too, we can expect shortly inventions that will permit synchronized broadcasting, where the same channel and time is used by several stations by the use of what is scientifically known as matched crystals. WGHP at Detroit and WAIU in Cleveland have successfully experimented along these lines. I am opposed as much as anyone to the monopolistic tendencies of the so-called radio combinations, but would not wholesale reduction of stations play directly into the hands of this combine? It is much easier to gobble up and thus effect control of most of a few hundred stations than of 700 stations. In other words, reduce stations and the radio combine has its work simplified.

Furthermore, the life of the commission should be extended another year. One does not swap horses while crossing a stream. We have not as yet plumbed the depths of radio inventions. There are the questions of television, wireless telephony, and short waves, all of which bring in turn new and intricate problems. The commission has started on the solving thereof. It must be given time to bring about solutions.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. Does the gentleman think that this development of television will interfere with the alibi industry?

Mr. CELLER. I think the gentleman will have to answer that for himself. He needs no alibi. Of course, the members of the alibi industry will have to speak for themselves. They may have to consult their wives.

Mr. BLACK of New York. But we do not need any alibis in New York.

Mr. CELLER. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] suggests, we of the city of New York need no alibi.

Canada is insisting upon having assigned to it more than its present 12 channels. The commission is now working on that difficulty. The State Department is insisting that Canada have its way. American broadcasters are insisting that the commission intervene in their behalf to prevent more channels going to Canada. That problem alone would justify continued existence of the commission.

Recently public hearings were held by the commission on the subject of short waves. The public is not aware of its rights in this regard. Short waves have a high trajectory. They are lifted high into the air immediately upon being sent and come back to earth hundreds or thousands of miles away. They can not be readily used in program broadcasting, but they can easily be adopted for long-distance commercial wireless service between definite and fixed points. Short waves by suddenly being lifted high into the air suffer little from interference from tall buildings or the static usually caused by metal objects on the earth's surface or minerals below the earth's surface. The Radio Corporation of America has had already assigned to it some 57 short waves out of a total of 119. The Ford Motor Car Co. and the Firestone Rubber Co. have short-wave licenses for communication between their various plants. The Graham Bros. Truck Co., Elgin Watch Co., various pipe-line companies and airplane transport firms have short wave lengths for point-to-point use. The question arises, Shall these short waves be used by individual companies for purely selfish commercial purposes? What interest has the public in these short waves? That is a question fraught with great difficulty. The commission has the means of solving it. It is hoped, therefore, that Congress will not for the present pass any rigid laws concerning the short wave because so comparatively little is known about it. But in any event, in view of these pending and important problems, the life of the commission must be extended. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COHEN].

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I appeared before the Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations to object to an appropriation of $300,000 for Governors Island, and presented to the committee statements and arguments that I thought would amply justify the withholding of any additional appropriation of moneys to be expended on Governors Island until such time as I could convince the Members of this House that part of Governors Island is more valuable to the United States as an airport than as a military reservation. In this, I am sorry to say, I was not successful.

I have gone through the bill very carefully but find no mention of any such sum for Governors Island. I am told, however, that the amount is in the bill, and on that premise I am now speaking to you protesting against this appropriation.

Just as I entered the Chamber the gentleman from Chicago was painting the lily white. Of course, it does take considerable white paint to paint Chicago, but my mention of Chicago is only because I have before me an article about an airport in Chicago, in which it is stated that an island airport is the ideal airport. This article was written by Capt. H. J. Houghland, and appeared in the New York Times, August, 1927.

Captain Houghland is acting Air Corps officer of the Second Corps, stationed on Governors Island, and his statements should be given considerable weight. His article and arguments when talking in Chicago were all in favor of an island airport, but since then I have not heard of further comments from him in this connection. It is very strange, indeed, that when any members of the Army reach the confines of the city of New York the island airport is no longer superior to the inland airport. Governors Island, as its name indicates, is an island, but all sorts of objections are raised by the Army department to its use as an airport because it is the home of the Department of the East, and the Army does not want to transfer its headquarters from Governors Island to any other of the military reservations around New York.

Maj. Gen. Hanson E. Ely, commanding general, headquarters Second Corps, in a speech recently stated as follows in connection with the use of Governors Island as an airport:

> The troubles in an airplane engine, which cause many of the accidents, are found out very shortly after they rise. You will remember that last map, rising against the wind on a 75-acre tract where you have 500 or 600 feet of runway. If, after taking off the ground, you discover engine trouble you have not the altitude to turn around to make your field again, but you must get to land somewhere right away. That is a difficulty. The landing places are not there. The landing place is in the river, among the ships, or in the city. You have to go a long ways to get any kind of landing place whatsoever, and the result of these forced landings will be much more serious in crashed planes and casualties.

Evidently Captain Houghland does not agree with his superior officer, for he states that an island is the ideal airport. I also call to your attention that the island airport of Chicago is no larger than Governors Island.

It is most peculiar how the Army can stretch either its conscience or its tongue whenever a question arises that, in its judgment, will affect it favorably or adversely.

General Ely also stated—

> If they want to crash their ships a nice way to do it would be to try to land in a 75-acre area in a cross wind of 40 miles an hour, especially if it is a civilian company, the pilots, perhaps, not being as skillful as the trained Army aviators and their ships, perhaps, not quite as good.

He evidently is not familiar with the fact that in 1916 Governors Island was used as a training station for 16 young men who realized the possibilities of war and prepared themselves for airplane service. This squad was financed by Mr. Whitney, and among the young men were the late Quentin Roosevelt, Hobie Baker, Seth Low, and Philip A. Carroll. So, General Ely's arguments of better machines and trained flyers fall by the way, as, if these inexperienced men with the old Jenny planes could use Governors Island for training purposes, meaning that they took off and landed on the field, there should be no question of its suitability to-day with trained aviators and up-to-date machines.

Regarding General Ely's statement about rising against the wind on a 75-acre tract where you have 500 or 600 feet runway, may I insert a paragraph of "We," epic of the air, by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, reprinted in the New York American, as follows:

> The plane was off the ground in 6⅛ seconds, or 165 feet, and was carrying over 400 pounds in extra gas tank and equipment.

May I also read from an editorial of the New York Times of January 26, "Testing the air flivver," as follows:

> In his fragile ship Chamberlin rose into the air after a run of 75 feet along a street in Garden City.

This, of course, was a small machine, and perhaps not a fair comparison; nevertheless it shows that if one machine can rise in 165 feet and another one in 75 feet, there is no reason why a field of 75 acres should present any difficulties.

Postmaster General Harry S. New feels so assured that small landing places are suitable for airports that he made the suggestion to erect aviation landing platforms above railway terminals in large cities similar to the upper deck of aircraft carriers used by the Navy. By this means planes would be able to land much nearer to the business center of a city than at present. Mr. New said that he often traveled by air from Washington to New York, and though the actual flying time was less than two hours, getting to the flying field at Washington and from the landing field on Long Island took up so much time that the time saved in the air was practically lost in the street traffic. He pointed out that should a plane take off from a platform above the tracks of the Washington Terminal and land on a platform above the tracks at the Grand Central or Pennsylvania Station in New York this waste of time would be eliminated.

I quote from an editorial in one of the New York newspapers commenting on Postmaster General New's proposal, as follows:

Air transportation is used by persons in a hurry and for the carrying of mail and merchandise which must be rushed. If too much time is wasted in getting to and from a landing field, the purpose of such transportation is defeated. Railway terminals, as a rule, are very close to the business center of the cities in which they are located, and if landing fields were built above them the time lost in traffic would be eliminated.

It will be noted that Governors Island, on the very doorstep of New York City, is not mentioned, but evidently Postmaster General New does not desire to have any conflict with any of the other departments. As Mr. New said, the airport nearest to the center of the business section of any large city is the airport that gives the best service. Governors Island is within 10 minutes from the business center of the city of New York. Captain Houghland stated that an island is the most suitable place for an airport; consequently, in consideration of all factors, Governors Island presents the ideal location for an express airport to serve the business section of New York.

Everyone agrees that nearness to the business centers of the cities is a prime essential of the ideal airport, but the Army department does not want to give up Governors Island. Its objections are countered by statements of such distinguished aviators as Clarence Chamberlin, Commander Richard E. Byrd, Casey Jones, and other prominent and widely experienced aviators, who have repeatedly and publicly stated that Governors Island is suitable for an express landing station.

New York City's postal receipts are about $77,000,000 annually. Of this sum, $2,500,000 is derived from the Bronx, about $3,500,000 from the district north of Fiftieth Street, and the remainder—about $71,000,000—from lower Manhattan. Of course, I do not claim that these $71,000,000 are derived from air mail, but I do call these figures to your attention to illustrate the tremendous relative importance of the business section of the city of New York. To-day air mail is landed at Hadley Field, and it takes a minimum of one and one-half hours to two hours and thirty minutes to arrive in the main post office at Thirty-second Street and Eighth Avenue. At times it takes longer for air mail to reach the post office from Boston to New York via Hadley Field than it takes for trains to travel between Boston and New York.

With Governors Island as an airport this condition would not exist, and I can only repeat what I have stated many times: That because of the attitude of the War Department in not relinquishing part of Governors Island for an airport the business interests of the United States must suffer.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have picked a rather bad spot in to-day's bill, a spot where you are supposed to bring in a trapeze or a trained seal. The discussions to-day have been on various subjects, but I do not think the day has been badly spent, because we have achieved one result at least, a result which I think will mean a great saving to the country and with which I am particularly pleased. I refer to the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. He surely is as good as reelected on account of the speech made by him this afternoon. Certainly it guarantees to him a successful race in the coming election, and I, with other Democrats as well as Republicans, will certainly be glad to see it accomplished.

To-day, in our discussions, we have covered nearly all the wars of modern times. We have covered Bill Thompson and the Revolutionary War, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] has covered the Civil War, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has talked about the war that we are going to have later in the national campaign. He and other gentlemen have spoken of the impending war between the bootleggers and the grafters on the one side and the prohibitionists on the other.

That last-mentioned war is very interesting to me. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] stated that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is honest. Well, he has not been a Republican long enough to be anything else. [Laughter.] He is the latest recruit to the Republican Party, and he makes the admission on behalf of his party that prohibition can not be enforced. I would rather see that admission come from the commander in chief of the Republican Party, the gentleman in the White House.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] says that a candidate who states that he will enforce the law misrepresents the situation. Misrepresentation, gentlemen, is a serious thing. Misrepresentation as to the future is a very serious thing, but misrepresentation as to the past and present is a much greater crime than misrepresentation as to the future. A man should be given a chance to make good. The man most responsible for the present situation is the man in the White House. If the prohibition law is impossible of enforcement, as the major says, then the commander in chief of the Republican Party has the duty to tell the American people in so many words that it can not be enforced, instead of talking about economy over the radio, and at the same time throwing large salaries out to a lot of prohibition agents day after day.

I also commend my friend and colleague, BOYLAN, for his suggestion concerning Colonel Roosevelt. As a good friend of Al Smith I say, "Thank God for Teddy Roosevelt." I hope his leg will not be broken when he goes out over the country, but I hope the West will find somebody to heckle him as they used to heckle his father. I hope somebody will get up in every audience that he addresses and say, "Tell us, Teddy, about Teapot Dome."

Not long ago a committee was organized by me at the suggestion of William R. Hearst up in New York to make an inquiry concerning the housing condition in the forts around New York. On that committee was Congressman BOYLAN, Colonel Slattery, a well-known engineer, Mr. Banham, head of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, and William Siegrist, jr., a social-welfare worker. They visited a number of forts around New York, and found the conditions very bad; the quarters consisting of old shacks built for temporary purposes; shacks which are now supposed to house the Army of the United States.

They are badly heated, heated with antiquated stoves, and they are unsanitary. Yet this Government advertises for recruits in the Army, and prints and disseminates misleading pictures as to conditions of life in the Army. Men in civil life, getting good wages in a trade, are induced to go into the Army at a poorer wage, and do pretty much the same kind of work that they do in civil life. I am glad to say that this Appropriation Committee is doing something to improve that situation. I wish, by the way, to speak of a strange situation at Fort Hamilton. We have large guns there that cost this Government about a quarter of a million dollars apiece, and the administration has not yet installed an antiaircraft gun, costing $15,000, to protect them. If they want to have an antiaircraft gun there, they have got to get it from Fort Slocum.

But that is not the most serious reflection on that situation. You can go and see these big guns in those forts, and you will realize that they are only used to enable some human beings to destroy other human beings. Look backward over the development of mankind. One man had a club and a hammer, and then another man had a sling shot, and then another man had a bow and arrow, and then another one a musket, and now we have poison gas. The worst war weapon comes at a time when we are supposed to be most civilized. The trouble is that civilization has been too pedestrian. It has not kept pace with science. With the advancement of civilization human ingenuity has multiplied the mechanics of human destruction. I do not think we should give up every effort to get a world peace. The trouble has been in all conferences in the past that those who go to make peace are those who are interested in war; the executive branch of government, military and naval officers, diplomats, all interested in the war game. They are the men who are supposed to arrive at a solution of the troubles to bring about peace. That has been one difficulty. Another difficulty is that the peace conferences came right after the war, when bitterness was still in the air—and war hysteria.

Aristotle tells us that very early it was found that some people would not respect the rights of other men on any principle, but were only amenable to force. So society was organized. Everything in the world is organized but the world itself.

What this world needs is a constitution. How are we going to get such a thing? The people of every nation are opposed to war, yet the people of the nations have never had a chance to speak on this subject. I say there should be a general conference held of the peoples of the world, represented through delegates from the legislative branches of government of the different nations of the world. For the time being leave out the generals, leave out the admirals, leave out the diplomats, and send to this world conference for the purpose of establishing some basic international code men selected from the legislative branches of the governments.

Now, it is not an easy proposition. I realize that some governments do not give adequate suffrage and I realize that in some parliaments you find ministries, but it is not a hopeless proposition. We have an unofficial interparliamentary union trying to frame a code. That being so, why could not the legislators of the world send men to some central place where they could try to make a law for peace after the manner of the laws in their own individual nations? It will take time. It is not a thing which we should attempt to accomplish in a week, in a month, or in a year. There are a great number of things to be thought of, and I intend to try to formulate such a resolution for introduction into this House, so that we can create some kind of an official interparliamentary union and have a great parliament for peace; but at the same time, while we are trying to do this thing, there is no reason in the world why we should not live up to our first constitutional obligation, and that is to keep this country in a proper state of defense. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a determined effort is being made by the opponents of effective farm legislation to prevent the Committee on Agriculture from reporting out the Haugen bill with the equalization fee provision in it. The strongest force against this bill is the influence of the administration. The country is well advised, too, that the highly protected industrial interests and the dominating financial powers are against the bill. Recently there have been coming to Members of Congress protests and arguments against the measure from an association known as the Federated Agricultural Trades of America. All of this opposition is based on the conviction that the Haugen bill if enacted into law would give to agricultural producers a 100 per cent bargaining power in the sale of their products and the full benefit of tariff protection. The opponents of this proposed legislation do not want the farmers to have such advantage. The reasons for such opposition are obvious and they are not in the interest of the farmer. They are purely selfish. The farmer has been the football of commerce so long that the commercial and financial agencies think they have the right to kick him every time they come in contact with him.

The farmer produces wealth but he does not control the markets through which the profits on his production are realized. The Haugen bill would automatically bring the farmers into cooperation in the marketing of their products. It would do for them what they have been unable to do for themselves through voluntary organization. When the producers of a basic agricultural product can be united 100 per cent behind the bargaining power in the sale of their product they will be able to say what the price shall be, just as the merchant fixes the price of his merchandise. When the farmer can dictate the sale price of what he produces he will receive the profits which are justly his and which the consumer now pays to the middleman. No one will deny that profits are made on agricultural products, but the farmer does not get them. The profits are not made in producing crops but in marketing them. It is the most obvious thing in the world that if the farmers could be united solidly behind the bargaining power in the sale of their crops they could control the marketing and the price of their crops. The Haugen bill would enable the farmers to accomplish this object. It is, therefore, not surprising that there should be such violent and determined opposition to the bill on the part of those interests which have so long controlled the markets of agricultural commodities and reaped the profits thereon.

In a communication, dated January 24, 1928, which I received from the president of the Federated Agricultural Trades of America, there is disclosed the real objection of the dealers in agricultural commodities to the Haugen bill. At this point I want to read a portion of that communication to show you the real basis of alarm on the part of the Federated Agricultural Trades of America and why they are so panicky over the prospect of the enactment of the Haugen bill into law.

The portion I desire to read is as follows:

> The McNary-Haugen bill, which is again in Congress with some changes from last year, now takes in all agricultural commodities. It is predicated upon the equalization fee and the Capper-Volstead cooperative marketing act, etc., and in my opinion is nothing more nor less than compulsory cooperation in the marketing of agricultural products by the farmers—not by physical force, but by those prescribed economic methods which are part and parcel of the McNary-Haugen bill. This kind of legislation, coupled with the new ideas of cooperation promoted and fostered by the Department of Agriculture, namely:
> First. Local cooperative units, assembled into.
>
> Second. State cooperative units, then assembled into.
> Third. National cooperative units, > is for the purpose of ultimate monopolistic control of the price the consumer must pay for farm commodities—the price to be established by the producer on his own production, also on that of others—the right given him under the Capper-Volstead Act.

Now, that would be a terrible blow to the Federated Agricultural Trades of America, would it not? But it would be a wonderful thing for the farmer. And this legislation is supposed to be in the interest of the farmer, not the nonfarmer, who is dealing in agricultural products and reaping therefrom the profits which the farmer is entitled to receive.

> Compulsory cooperation in the marketing of agricultural products by the farmers and the ultimate monopolistic control of the price the consumer must pay for farm commodities—the price to be established by the producer on his own production.

That is the result which the president of the Federated Agricultural Trades of America fears should the McNary-Haugen bill become law. But his concern is not for the consumer. The consumer now pays a monopolistic price for farm commodities, but the monopoly is controlled by the Federated Agricultural Trades and not by the farmers. The consumer would pay no more and would probably pay less for farm commodities were the monopolistic control of the markets therein wrested from the Federated Agricultural Trades and placed in the hands of the farmers. The effort to make the consumer believe that the McNary-Haugen bill means higher food prices and higher living costs to him is pure camouflage to hide the real motive for opposition to the bill.

The opponents of this bill are not looking to the interests of the consumer, they are looking to their own interests. They are afraid they will have to release their hold on the profits of agriculture and let those profits go to the farmers, where they justly belong. They see in the McNary-Haugen bill an edict of emancipation that will free the farmers from the necessity of surrendering the profits of production to the market manipulators. That is why the opponents of the bill are in a panic and fighting so desperately to prevent its passage. They are not opposing it because they think it will not work; they are fighting it because they think it will work. Of course, they say it is economically unsound; but from their viewpoint any economic scheme is unsound that will give the farmers a square deal. Any economic plan that will tend to place agriculture on a basis of equality with other industries invariably meets with the objection that it is unsound.

It is the same old specious and stock argument that is always put forth to create public sentiment on a false basis to prevent union and cooperation among farmers. So long as the farmer can be kept on his present basis of marketing his crop individually and independently of other farmers, just so long will he be robbed of the profits on his production. His situation is intolerable. Congress can relieve it. I want to know what you are going to do about it. Will the Congress permit this economic outrage to continue?

I have been hammering on this proposition ever since I have been in Congress and long before. I have been trying to drive home to the people of my district the importance of farmers' organizations for the control of the markets of their own products and also as a political power to enforce their demands for just legislation. The only reason the McNary-Haugen bill has not heretofore been enacted into law is that the farmers have not been able to unite solidly behind it and show a unit of strength sufficiently strong to overthrow the political control of those opposing it.

But the farmers in my State are awake to the necessity of cooperation and are demanding the McNary-Haugen bill, which will bring about that result. I am receiving hundreds of letters from them. They are not being deceived by the enemies of farm adjustment legislation. I shall read two out of the mass of letters which I have received from my district and which are typical of the demands for farm legislation:

> SAM B. HILL,
> DEAR MR. HILL: We want a farm relief bill now. We don't want a compromise, because after election we won't get anything but promises.
>
> Yours truly,
> R. W. JOYNER.

> CRESTON, WASH., January 25, 1928.
> Hon. SAM B. HILL.
> DEAR SIR: I am writing my views on farm relief. I am for the McNary-Haugen bill, equalization fee and all.
>
> I believe it is the best measure yet offered. I would bitterly oppose any compromise on the equalization fee, as I believe it to be the heart of the measure, and when you take the heart out of a man he is ready for the undertaker. So would the McNary-Haugen bill minus the equalization fee.
>
> I feel that any attempt at compromise is only a political gesture on the part of the advocates to get by November, 1928.
>
> Respectfully,
> J. S. BARBRE, Real Dirt Farmer.

The farmers have thought this matter out and they are going to fight for their right to a square deal, and they will not quit fighting until they get it. They know now that they must be their own guardians and not rely for justice and protection on those who prey upon the farmer and reap the profits of his production. The farmers can have what they demand if they will present an organized force behind their demands. The wide-awake, thinking farmers are seriously and untiringly educating their brethren to the necessity of organization.

One of the finest and most forceful arguments for organization and cooperation among farmers that I have ever read is presented in a paper prepared and read before the Pomona Grange at Waterville, Wash., recently by Schiller E. Robins, who is a "dirt" farmer in Douglas County, Wash. This paper deserves to be published on the front page of every newspaper in the country, and I ask your attention to it while I read it:

DOES AGRICULTURE DESERVE HELP?

We doubt it.

Does it need help?

Most assuredly it needs help to remove the serious inequalities existing between agriculture and other industries which have reduced the farmer's dollar to 60 cents.

However, the question of needing help is quite apart from the question of deserving help. The drunkard in the gutter may need help as badly as anyone, but if he will not make any effort to help himself, but returns to his bottle and his evil companions, we can not say he deserves help.

So before we can say that agriculture deserves help, we should consider whether agriculture is willing to help itself.

A century ago the great majority of our citizens were engaged in agriculture, and the minority who were engaged in occupations, such as blacksmithing, cobbling, milling, etc., owned their own shops or mills. Each man made his own living and was largely independent of his neighbor. Then came the steam engine, bringing with it machinery and large factories, which drove the local cobbler out of business and which developed large bodies of working people. Through competition and unnecessary shutdowns, wages were kept at the lowest possible level until the condition of the man who had to depend on others for his employment became deplorable, and the labor union was the result. We all know what the labor union has done for the workingman. Some of their methods are controversial matters, but their results are no longer questioned. Organization has brought the workingman up from almost a hopeless condition to one of prosperity and independence.

No words are necessary to point out what organization has done for big business or manufacturers. When the manufacturers want changes in our taxation system they have their organization in working order and they go to Congress and get their income tax cut 33 per cent, while the farmer, who is now taxed more than three times as heavily, does not get a cent of reduction. Everywhere we turn we find all industry organized except agriculture, and every day the need for agriculture has been growing.

A century ago, when 75 per cent of the population lived on the farms, it was only necessary to market a small part of the crop, and most of that could be marketed directly to the consumer or the local storekeeper. To-day, with scarcely 25 per cent of the population living on the farm, it is now necessary to raise three times as much per capita, but practically all of the crop has to be marketed through complex channels of trade, for in order to raise the enormous crops the farmer has become a specialist—an orchardist, poultryman, stockman, or wheat grower. This shift in occupation and farming practice has given rise to a complex marketing system which is now taking a toll of double as much as the farmer receives for his goods. And through it all the farmer has gone steadily downhill, carefully cherishing the idea that he was the one independent man in the Nation. He has let the workingman form his unions and boost his wages. He has let the manufacturer form combines and boost prices after securing unreasonable tariff protection. He has let his banker combine to control his money. He has let the railroads combine to raise his freight. He has let marketing agencies of the Nation combine to receive double as much for marketing his crop as he receives for raising them, yet the farmer is the most numerous of any class; he works the longest hours of any class; he has the largest investment of any class; and he receives the least income of any class.

Undoubtedly he needs help, but he does not deserve it. There are roughly 22,500,000 people eligible to join farm organizations in the United States to-day. Approximately 5 per cent of them belong to any such organization, exclusive of strictly marketing organizations, which have been a recent and wholesome development, but which handle only one phase of the farmer's problems. When 95 per cent of those eligible to organize are indifferent, can one rightly say they deserve help?

In our own State we probably have 200,000 farmers eligible to belong to general farm organizations, which have a total membership of 10 per cent of that number. Over 80 per cent of them belong to the grange. Recent press comments invite comparisons. We read that there are 40,000 organized sportsmen in the State, paying dues (most of them) of more than the grange dues. They organize and pay dues to protect their interests in hunting and fishing, and there are more than twice as many of them as there are organized farmers. Their small task is to look after the hunting and fishing of the vacation hours of the members. Our task is to look after the buying and selling of the farmers' crops and supplies, taxation problems, transportation problems, all manner of legislative matters, recreation, education, and a hundred more things more important to the farmer than the pheasants and the fish are to the sportsman, yet they have the energy to organize themselves 40,000 strong and pay their money to look after their own interests, while all the farmers in the State do not do half so well.

Do you wonder that the farmer is paying three times his share of the taxes, according to the figures compiled by the Department of Agriculture?

Do you wonder that the middleman gets twice as much for selling the farmer's crops as the farmer gets for raising them?

Do you wonder that the farmer is at the foot of the list in the income-tax returns?

Do you wonder that the farmer is the poorest-paid individual in America?

No, indeed. The only wonderful thing about it is that the farmer, with more capital invested than any other three industries in America, and with more economic power than all the other industries combined, is so unwilling to help himself that he won't take this plain business proposition into his daily life and spend a portion of his time and his money in building an organization which will do for agriculture what other organizations have done for other industries.

There isn't a county in this State that is organized up to 30 per cent of its capacity. The average is about 8 per cent, and many are less than 2 per cent. Here is the place to begin. Each farmer must bear his share of the responsibility for the condition of agriculture, and if each would do just a little bit, we could soon put our industry in so dominant a position that we need seek favors of no one, but would be the most independent class in the Nation.

The question for each grange member to ask himself or herself is, "What am I doing to build and maintain an organization to study and work out these problems which must be solved?"

[Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, when I arranged for the time to address the committee at this hour I expected to speak on flood control. The Congress, however, seems to be pretty well convinced on this subject. I believe the majority of us agree that the great Mississippi Valley is a national asset, that the floods are a national calamity, that their prevention is a national responsibility, and that the people of the flood-stricken areas are not now able to pay any part of the cost of flood protection—nor justly obligated to do so. Every principle, both of mercy and of justice, demands that the Federal Government meet this obligation.

A recent cartoon in the Memphis Commercial Appeal made an unanswerable protest on this situation. It portrayed Uncle Sam out on the raging flood in his little boat presenting a tax bill to a poor fellow who was being swept down the stream on the floating roof of his wrecked home.

But I hope to say more on this subject at a later date. Some recent happenings and utterances have for the present turned me to another matter.

For many years—I suppose from the days of reconstruction—there have been some men in the Congress and elsewhere who seemed to enjoy the pastime of villifying the South upon the charge of unjustly disfranchising the negro. The number of these critics has grown "beautifully less" from year to year, and the sane people of the country have rejoiced to see their tribe decrease. Since I have been a Member of this House I once said to a Republican Congressman who had been reared and educated in New England, "The crime and the tragedy of American political history was the giving of the franchise with all the powers and obligations of citizenship to the great horde of ignorant, recently liberated slaves, soon after the Civil War." And he replied, "LOWREY, you do not know that, now, a bit better than some of us know it."

I am sorry to observe, however, that of late there seems to be an increasing tendency to attack and criticize the South on this false and groundless charge.

It should not be necessary to argue in the United States Congress or to explain to any Member of this body that my State and her sister States of the South do not evade nor defy nor in any sense nullify the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. I commend Senator SWANSON'S speech in the Senate on last Monday to anyone who thinks such things. His argument is clear and conclusive and unanswerable. The laws now in force in the various Southern States which define the qualifications of a voter are not only upheld as constitutional by all of the courts of the land, including the Supreme Court of the United States, but the original intention—the very spirit of those amendments is being scrupulously observed in all of the States of the South.

Those who point the finger of accusation at the South on this question are either uninformed or deliberately disregard the facts, and from dishonest motives attempt to mislead those who are uninformed. The fifteenth amendment was not designed to guarantee the vote to the negro regardless of everything, but rather to protect him against being denied the vote solely because of his race, color, or former condition of slavery. Efforts to frame the amendment so as to guarantee the negro the vote regardless of his educational qualifications and other qualifieations as a citizen failed by overwhelming votes both in the House and in the Senate. The laws regulating the registration of voters in Mississippi are framed for the purpose, and carry out that purpose in a practical way, of permitting only those to vote who are capable of casting an intelligent ballot. Multitudes of Mississippi's negroes are not qualified to do that, and are therefore disfranchised not because they are negroes but because they are ignorant and lacking in the qualifications that would make them good citizens. The States, North and South, hold, and have always held, the right of giving or withholding the ballot on any grounds whatsoever except the grounds of race, color, previous condition of servitude, or sex.

The South has for many years heard threats of force bills and of the cutting down of her representation in the National Congress because she "nullified" the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. We have not taken our accusers too seriously. We had a clear conscience, and we understood that men from other sections of the country could and would use that kind of thunder to impress a certain class of their constituents.

But the thing against which I now protest most vigorously is that a large volume of this criticism and accusation is coming from men of our own political faith. For many years the South has been the hope and the stronghold of our Democracy. It was the home of Jefferson and Jackson and other great apostles of our political creed. It is the section of this country in which there has been the most universal loyalty to the interests of the masses and to the eternal principle of government of the people, by the people, and for the people. It has stood as no other section of this country has stood against unjust tariffs, money trusts, and other instrumentalities for giving special privilege to the favored few and establishing a plutocracy of graft, greed, and selfishness. I make no apology for claiming that the South as the backbone of the Democratic Party has done much to keep the party erect for these principles. Again, it has been proved that the South and the West by combining their strength can elect a President without the generous cooperation of the East—as much as we may desire that cooperation.

Men who object to the eighteenth amendment have a legal and political right to oppose it, and if possible to change it by lawful and constitutional means. But they can not justify nullification of this part of the Constitution by the false and frivolous charge that the South has nullified the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. Nor can they by such false and groundless accusations intimidate or coerce the people of the South into joining hands with any faction or any man in any party that stands for the nullification of any part of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10286, the War Department appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

THE "S-4" DISASTER

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the resolution (H. J. Res. 131) providing for a commission to investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the S-4 and upon methods and appliances for the protection of submarines, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

I would like to say I have consulted the minority leader and also the ranking Democratic member of my committee, and this is agreeable to them.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SNELL, BURTON, and POU.

REREFERENCE OF A RESOLUTION

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, on the 20th day of January the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] introduced a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 175) to change the name of the Ancon Hospital in the Panama Canal Zone to the General Gorgas Hospital. In the regular procedure of referring bills and joint resolutions, this resolution was referred to the Military Affairs Committee of the House. On last Thursday that committee, after giving due consideration to the joint resolution, ordered it reported favorably to the House, and delegated me as a member of the committee to report the joint resolution. Due to the fact that the author of the resolution, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] wanted to prepare a rather complete and somewhat elaborate report on the resolution, the report was not made to the House; and on last Monday the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], asked unanimous consent that this joint resolution be rereferred from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. This consent was given. Later in the day, however, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], on learning that perhaps the Military Affairs Committee had ordered the joint resolution reported, and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], the chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, had not consulted with the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, asked that that order be vacated, and the House then and there vacated the order rereferring this joint resolution from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The Military Affairs Committee has a report on this joint resolution ready now to go in the basket. The Military Affairs Committee, however, desires to maintain its jurisdiction and yet at the same time not encroach upon the jurisdiction of any other committee of this House, and under the circumstances the Military Affairs Committee of the House has directed me to ask the opinion of the Speaker as to whether this joint resolution should go to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee or to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I now ask the Speaker his opinion on this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that when the resolution was introduced and came in due course to the Speaker's office for reference it was assumed that the hospital referred to was a military hospital, but the Chair is advised it is not a military hospital and is therefore of the opinion that under the circumstances, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce having jurisdiction over affairs relating to the Isthmus, the proper reference would have been to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, in view of the opinion of the Chair, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, will ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be rereferred from the Military Affairs Committee to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, there will be no objection on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 175 be rereferred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That means, of course, that the report will be abandoned.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. That means that the report will be abandoned and there will be no report from the Committee on Military Affairs on this resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I have received within the last 10 days quite a number of letters from prominent people in Texas advocating the passage of this bill as just recognition of the services of General Gorgas—a great man. I am wondering what is the attitude of the gentleman's committee in so strenuously insisting on getting hold of this bill. Are they going to kill it or are they going to pass it?

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state to the gentleman from Texas it is not the bill but a matter of principle that is involved.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a matter of principle only, and there is no antagonism in the gentleman's committee toward this bill?

Mr. PARKER. There is absolutely nothing of the kind, I assure the gentleman. It is simply a matter of the jurisdiction of the committee which I represent.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, in order that the RECORD may show the facts, I would like to state that the action of the Committee on Military Affairs in reporting favorably this joint resolution was unanimous.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. COOPER of Ohio, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on February 1, 1928, they presented to the President of the United States for his approval a joint resolution and bills of the House of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 81. Joint resolution for the amendment of the act of March 3, 1927, by authorizing an annual appropriation to carry out the cooperative experiments contemplated by the act;

H. R. 5725. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ouachita River at or near Monroe, La.;

H. R. 5726. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing a bridge across the Black River at or near Jonesville, La.; and

H. R. 5728. An act granting the consent of Congress to the police jury of Morehouse Parish, La., or the State Highway Commission of Louisiana, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew at or near Point Pleasant, La.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution for the appointment of Paul E. Divine, of Tennessee, as member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers;

H. R. 5657. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Monroe County, Miss., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Tombigbee River at or near Aberdeen, Monroe County, Miss.; and

H. R. 9142. An act to amend section 71 of the Judicial Code as amended by changing time of holding court at El Dorado and Harrison, Ark.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 3, 1928, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Friday, February 3, 1928, as reported by clerks of the several committees:

SENATE

FRIDAY, February 3, 1928

(Legislative day of Wednesday, February 1, 1928)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 131) providing for a commission to investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S–4 and upon methods and appliances for the protection of submarines; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SNELL, Mr. BURTON, and Mr. POU were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 5657. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Monroe County, Miss., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Tombigbee River at or near Aberdeen, Monroe County, Miss.;

H. R. 9142. An act to amend section 71 of the Judicial Code, as amended, by changing time of holding court at El Dorado and Harrison, Ark.; and

H. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution for the appointment of Paul E. Divine, of Tennessee, as member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

VOTE ON YESTERDAY'S CONFIRMATION

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in the RECORD to-day there occurs the roll call taken in executive session yesterday. It appears that it was printed by unanimous consent.

Senators will remember that ever since I have been a Member of this body I have uniformly objected to the printing in the RECORD of a roll call taken in secret, following a debate held in secret. I have taken the position that where the reasons for or against candidates or for or against treaties were given in secret session and were not available, the roll call following the discussion should not be printed.

After the roll call was taken in executive session yesterday I inadvertently left the Chamber, and while I was absent unanimous consent was obtained, through no fault of anyone except my own. I merely desire to have the RECORD state that had I been present I should have objected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, that roll call was made public upon my request. I desire to state for the information of the Senator from Connecticut that I made the request immediately following the announcement of the result, and there was no effort on my part to delay the request until he had left the Chamber. I made the request, and I should have made it if he had been present; and if he had been present and objected, I should have moved to make the roll call public.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ferris	McKellar	Sheppard
Barkley	Fess	McLean	Shipstead
Bayard	Fletcher	McMaster	Shortridge
Bingham	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Black	George	Mayfield	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

REPORT OF THE AMERICAN WAR MOTHERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the report of the American War Mothers for 1926 and 1927, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the National Academy of Sciences, transmitting the report of that academy for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1927, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

PANHANDLE CRUDE PETROLEUM

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting a report of the commission on Panhandle crude petroleum, dealing with the prices, transportation facilities, and quality of crude petroleum of the Panhandle oil field of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Women's Auxiliary, National Federation of Post Office Clerks of the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of the so-called Dale bill, providing increased annuities for retired Government employees, which was referred to the Committee on the Civil Service.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Harmony Council, No. 12, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Bridgeport, Conn., protesting against the repeal of the national origin provisions of the existing immigration law, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of New Haven, Conn., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Brookhart bill, relative to the distribution of motion pictures in the various motion-picture zones of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BINGHAM presented memorials of sundry citizens of New Haven, Conn., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Brookhart bill, relative to the distribution of motion pictures in the various motion-picture zones of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Bridgeport Council, No. 6, and Harmony Council, No. 12, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Bridgeport, Conn., protesting against the repeal of the national-origin provisions of the existing immigration law, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented the memorial of Varden Lodge, No. 257, Sons of Norway, of New London, Conn., remonstrating against the retention of the quota provisions of the existing immigration law and also against the passage of legislation decreasing the immigration quotas of the Scandinavian countries, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BRUCE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented a resolution adopted by the Arkansas Division of the Izaak Walton League of America, at Little Rock, Ark., favoring the creation of the proposed Ouachita national park in Polk and Montgomery Counties, Ark., which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. COPELAND presented a petition of 60 citizens of the State of New York, being immigrant inspectors stationed at Ellis Island, praying for the passage of the so-called Reed bill (S. 2370) to amend section 24 of the immigration act of 1917

(relative to salaries of immigrant inspectors), which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented memorials numerously signed by sundry citizens of New York, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, favoring the making of an appropriation for carrying out in its entirety the McKim plan for the treatment of the base of the Washington Monument and to insure its completion by January, 1932, in which year will be celebrated the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented resolutions adopted at the annual meeting of the Nassau-Suffolk Engineers (Inc.), of Garden City, N. Y., stating practical objections to the passage of the bill (H. R. 7480) to authorize the transfer of the geodetic work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey from the Department of Commerce to the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens held under the auspices of the Anti-National Origins Clause League at Detroit, Mich., protesting against the national-origins method of determining immigration quotas and favoring the prompt passage of legislation to eliminate the national-origin provisions from the existing immigration law, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Near East Democratic Organization, of New York, N. Y., commending leaders of the Democratic Party in the Senate for their opposition to the so-called Lausanne treaty between the United States and Turkey, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Joint Resolution 5, memorializing Congress to investigate the coal strike

Whereas a coal strike affecting nearly all of the great bituminous coal-producing areas of the country was started in April, 1927, by the attempt of the operators to reduce wages; and

Whereas while this strike has been settled in Illinois, Indiana, and some other fields by agreements continuing the old wage scale, it is still in progress in Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and elsewhere; and

Whereas there is intense suffering among the miners and their families in these fields after nearly 10 months of strike; and

Whereas there are complaints, which impartial newspaper investigators have found to be well founded, that the operators in these fields have imported negroes by the thousands and employed gunmen and detective agencies to break this strike, have ruthlessly evicted the families of the striking miners from their homes in the dead of winter, and through injunctions, unwarranted arrests of union organizers, and similar methods have set at naught the constitutional rights of these workingmen; and

Whereas it is charged that the obstinate refusal of the operators to meet the miners in conference or even to discuss terms of settlement with the conciliators of the United States Department of Labor is due to a great conspiracy inspired and supported by the railroads, the Steel Trust, and nonunion business interests bent upon destroying all trade-unions: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to create a special committee to thoroughly investigate the coal strike in all its phases; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented the following joint resolution of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Joint Resolution 9, memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact necessary legislation for a survey of the Wisconsin-Fox Rivers waterway

Whereas competent and disinterested engineers report that the nearest feasible connecting link between the Mississippi River and the Great Lakes is a direct route from Green Bay, Oshkosh, and Portage to the Gulf of Mexico; and

Whereas even a casual inspection of a map of this proposed route will show its many great natural advantages. It is a waterway already in existence and navigable for large boats for most of the route. From Green Bay to Portage there is a total distance of 156 miles and from Portage to Prairie du Chien of 117 miles. Between the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers at Portage there is a canal of 2¼ miles. In the Fox River portion of this route there are now 27 locks and 16 United States dams. There is an existing project for the improvement of the Fox River, which provides for a channel 6 feet deep from De Pere, near Green Bay, to Montello, and 4 feet deep from Montello to Portage. At Portage a new lock was ordered constructed in 1927 at a contract price of $163,700. In the Wisconsin River at a point 28 miles below Portage, in 1915, a power dam, which contains a lock, was completed, which makes the Wisconsin River navigable between these points, with the exception of about 6 miles. Six other dams are needed to make the entire distance to the mouth of the Wisconsin navigable, even in low-water stages. The construction of these dams, it is estimated, will produce 350,000,000 kilowatt-hours of water power, which will greatly reduce the net cost of this improvement; and

Whereas a great deal of tonnage has moved over the Fox River and big boats have traversed these waters by way of Green Bay, Oshkosh, and Portage, and a great deal more would be moved if the Government would build the necessary dams and complete the unfinished projects; and

Whereas the Government gets very little, if any, returns from the investments already made, because they do not represent a comprehensive program of improving the entire route; and

Whereas less than the cost of one Government battleship would be required to build the dams needed to make this route a success: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Wisconsin Legislature respectfully memorializes the United States Congress to authorize and direct a full survey of the Wisconsin-Fox Rivers waterway and to enact such legislation as will result in the completion of such waterway; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, properly signed by the presiding officers of both houses and attested by the chief clerks thereof, be sent to the Presiding Officers of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each Senator and Member of Congress from Wisconsin.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

[Subsequently duplicates of the foregoing joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin were presented by the Vice President and referred to the same committees.]

SESQUICENTENNIAL OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Printing. I hold in my hand the report of the Sesquicentennial of American Independence and the Thomas Jefferson Centennial Commission of the United States. It will be recalled that last year this commission was appointed and the report is now presented. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing. I am doing this in the hope and expectation that the report will come back and that it may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

SALE OF PRINTING INK

Mr. COPELAND. I would like to say further to the chairman of the Committee on Printing that I have had a number of letters of complaint about the business of the Government Printing Office selling printing ink to other Government departments. Many of my constituents are objecting seriously to this practice and think it is an invasion of a private field. I hope the Senator, who is chairman of the Committee on Printing, will feel free to make some explanation of this practice.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I say, in answer to the remark of the Senator from New York, that I also have received sundry objections from manufacturers of ink and have submitted the matter to the Public Printer. I have received from the Public Printer a letter in explanation of the entire matter, which shows that it is in accordance with the Public Act 222 of the Sixty-ninth Congress. In order not to take the time of the Senate at this late hour, I ask that the letter of the Public Printer be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

JANUARY 21, 1928.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 18, inclosing a communication from Charles Eneu Johnson & Co. relative to the supplying of printing inks to the Government departments by the Government Printing Office. Similar letters have been received from several other ink manufacturers.

The authority for the furnishing of printing inks manufactured by the Government Printing Office to other Government departments is contained in the legislative act (Public Act 222) of Sixty-ninth Congress, as follows:

"Provided, That inks, glues, and other supplies manufactured by the Government Printing Office in connection with its work may be furnished to departments and other establishments of the Government upon requisition and payment made from appropriations available therefor."

This office does not bid in competition with commercial plants. The ink is furnished at cost to Government departments, which, under a Comptroller General's decision of July 30, 1926, must purchase from the Public Printer such inks and other supplies which the Government Printing Office manufactures and is in a position to furnish. A catalogue, listing the inks manufactured by this office and stating the cost of same, is issued from time to time for the guidance of the departments, and inks not listed may be procured in the open market.

The cost of all work handled by the Government Printing Office, whether a printing job or the furnishing of supplies, is based upon definite methods of cost accounting, which includes labor, material, and proportionate overhead charges. All articles manufactured, whether printed matter or printing supplies, are required by law to be supplied to Government departments at cost. However, it is reasonable to suppose a substantial profit is added by the commercial manufacturer to his cost of material, labor, and overhead.

The total quantity of ink manufactured by the Government Printing Office in 1927 for its own use and other Government establishments amounted to 147,589 pounds. The quantity of printing ink supplied to the various Government departments is but a very small percentage of the total output of the Government Printing Office ink plant, as most of the production is required for use in the Government Printing Office.

During the year 143,073 pounds of ink-making ingredients, including varnishes, oils, and pigments, were purchased from commercial manufacturers at a cost of $21,182.91. This statement is submitted to show that commercial firms have a worth-while financial interest in the inks produced in the Government Printing Office, many of the ingredients being purchased from ink manufacturers.

The Government Printing Office and also the Bureau of Engraving and Printing have manufactured their own printing inks for many years. These plants have had to manufacture printing inks because of inability to secure inks of satisfactory and uniform quality from commercial manufacturers by competitive bids and the excessive prices previously charged for the same.

The Government has found that by the manufacture of its own printing ink a more uniform quality has resulted, the quality can be better controlled, and that it is the more economical and satisfactory procedure. The furnishing of ink by this office to the other Government departments has also resulted in a substantial saving to the Government. Beyond any doubt the Government Printing Office has the right to make inks for its own use, and it seems only fair and proper for this office to offer any and all benefits that may come from its work to other branches of the Government service.

The Government Printing Office is as much and as essential a part of the Government as any other branch of the service, and it is manifestly unfair for the ink manufacturers to deny this office the right to serve other branches of the Government with inks and other supplies as well as with printed products. Their argument against the making of inks, if sustained, would apply likewise against any and all work done by the Government Printing Office, and would tend eventually to the ending of all work by the Government on its own behalf. But it is absurd to say that the Government must cease printing for itself any more than it must stop all work that might be undertaken by private concerns, and thus dismantle all the great Government industries, including the navy yards and many industrial activities of other branches of the Government service. I believe that the best interest of the public and the vast majority of taxpayers should be given first consideration, and not the personal and private profits of a few individuals such as the ink manufacturers.

This office also manufactures all press rollers, glue compositions for adhesive purposes, and various type-metal alloys for its linotype, monotype, stereotype, and electrotype work. Considerable economy results from this procedure. It would be impossible to maintain uniform quality of any of these materials except by costly technical and practical tests if the same were purchased from commercial sources of supply by competitive bids.

Many large commercial printing concerns also manufacture their own printing inks and rollers because of the economy and uniform quality resulting therefrom. This procedure on the part of the Government is therefore not unusual in any way. In fact, the making of ink by printers has been an established custom since before the days of Ben Franklin, who was a notable maker of the inks used in his famous printing office.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the complaint of the ink manufacturers is wholly unfounded and should not be given any consideration. Their purpose is entirely selfish and, if accomplished, would seriously interfere with the proper functioning of this office as a Government establishment, and would result in greatly increasing the cost of its operation to the taxpayers of the country.

Very truly yours,

GEORGE H. CARTER,
Public Printer.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be glad to read the letter, and if there is any further question I shall be free to call upon the Senator at a later time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the statute applies not only to ink but to other items which the Government purchases.

SURVIVORS OF MEXICAN WAR

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in further reference to the five survivors of the Mexican War to whom I directed the attention of the Senate yesterday, I send to the desk the following brief letter and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, February 2, 1928.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Complying with your telephone request, I am listing below the names and ages of Mexican War survivors who are still on the pension roll:

	Years of age
William F. Buckner	100
Owen Thomas Edgar	96
Uriah Gasaway	97
Richard A. Howard	96
Samuel Leffler	98

I am also inclosing a copy of my annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1926, which contains the above information on pages 8 and 9.

Very truly yours, WINFIELD SCOTT, Commissioner.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Texas to offer that as the reason for the Democratic convention going to Houston, because people are so long lived down in Texas?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is one reason among many others. Only one of those survivors is a resident of Texas, I may say.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. DILL, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2317) continuing for one year the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 226) thereon.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the bill (S. 1168) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the collection and editing of official papers of the Territories of the United States now in the national archives," approved March 3, 1925, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 227) thereon.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) providing for the completion of Dam No. 2 and the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2 in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals for the manufacture and distribution of fertilizer, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 228) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAYARD:

A bill (S. 2997) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth M. Hayden (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STECK:

A bill (S. 2998) granting double pension in all cases where an officer or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps dies or is disabled as the result of a submarine accident; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 2999) to amend the act of February 28, 1925, fixing the compensation of employees in post offices; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3000) to amend the interstate commerce act as amended to permit common carriers to give free carriage or reduced rates to State commissions exercising jurisdiction over common carriers; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 3001) to revise the boundary of the Yellowstone National Park in the States of Montana and Wyoming, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

A bill (S. 3002) for the relief of Mina Bintliff; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3003) granting a pension to Antoine Claymore (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3004) granting a pension to Gus W. Peterson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 3005) granting an increase of pension to Nancy C. Clayton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3006) for the relief of the Indians of the Klamath Reservation in Oregon; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BRATTON:

By Mr. SCHALL:

A bill (S. 3009) for the retirement of employees of the Panama Canal and the Panama Railroad Co. on the Isthmus of Panama who are American citizens; to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3010) for the transportation of foreign mails of the United States, to promote commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (by request):

A bill (S. 3011) for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, mislabaled, or misbranded linseed oil, turpentine, or paint; to the Committee on Manufactures.

CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL FOR COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare a medal with appropriate emblems and inscriptions commemorative of the achievements of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, for reference to the Committee on the Library. There are a number of precedents for the bill.

The bill (S. 2996) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare a medal with appropriate emblems and inscriptions commemorative of the achievements of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7009) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SETTLEMENT OF ALIEN PROPERTY CLAIMS

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7201, the so-called alien property claims settlement bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

SARATOGA RECLAMATION PROJECT

Mr. PHIPPS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1135) to provide for the storage for diversion of the waters of the North Platte River and construction of the Saratoga reclamation project, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed.

CASPER-ALCOVA RECLAMATION PROJECT

Mr. PHIPPS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1136) to provide for the storage for diversion of the waters of the North Platte River and construction of the Casper-Alcova reclamation project, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed.

INESTIGATION OF SINKING OF SUBMARINE "S-4"

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 131) providing for a commission to investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S-4, and upon methods and appliances for the protection of submarines, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, accede to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ODDIE, and Mr. SWANSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

MAJOR GENERAL VON STEUBEN AND GERMAN BLOOD IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a brief article which gives a sketch of the Steuben Society and of General von Steuben. It is entitled "German blood in the United States potent factor in building Nation," and is by Frederick Boyd Stevenson. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GERMAN BLOOD IN THE UNITED STATES POTENT FACTOR IN BUILDING NATION—18,000,000 GERMANS HERE IN 1900 DIFFUSE THE STOCK THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY—STEUBEN SOCIETY OF AMERICA STANDS FIRST OF ALL FOR AMERICANISM

"We have the greatest nation in the world.

"We have a right to be proud of it.

"Every racial stock that forms a part of the population of the United States of America has due cause for being proud of it.

"So, all good Americans should appreciate the efforts of the Steuben Society of America in impressing upon the many millions of Americans with German blood flowing through their veins that first of all they are Americans and first of all they should stand for Americanism."

(By Frederick Boyd Stevenson)

When we understand the different nationalities that make up our population of 115,000,000 people in these United States, the better progress we shall make with the various types of people representing those various races.

In the course of time all bloods will be more or less blended into a common blood that will be designated as American.

To be sure, the bloods of many different races will form that American blood. Some will be more in evidence than others, depending upon the greater proportions of certain bloods over other bloods that have been diffused and are to-day being diffused in this country.

I am going to write now specifically of the German blood in the United States, because that special question has been lately revived by the Steuben Society of America, one of the strongest and most progressive German organizations in this country.

The Steuben Society of America was organized in the city of New York in May, 1919, by a small group of men who decided to arouse the citizens of German descent in this country to a greater sense of their political duties and rights.

BARON STEUBEN, TRAINER OF AMERICAN FORCES IN OUR REVOLUTIONARY WAR

The German element in the United States had been frequently criticized for its lack of interest and participation in public affairs. In this connection, however, it should be realized that as a racial stock in this Nation the Germans have not come from one country alone, but from many countries. As a matter of fact, they have come from every continent on the globe. They have lived under various forms of government. They follow their religious beliefs under various faiths.

The idea of the Steuben Society of America was to unite all the American citizens with German blood in their veins in the common cause of their race and in "loyalty and progressive usefulness as citizens of the United States of America."

The name for the society was suggested by a United States Senator not of German blood. He suggested the name of that eminent German, Baron Friedrich Wilhelm von Steuben, major general and inspector general of the Continental Army in the Revolutionary War. He was the drillmaster of our American forces. He made soldiers out of the raw patriot militia.

Baron Steuben met Benjamin Franklin in Paris, and Franklin induced him to come to the aid of the revolutionists. The baron came as a volunteer, ready to perform any duty to which he might be assigned by the commander in chief of the American Army. Commissions for his aids and the payment of his actual expenses were the only stipulations asked. And you need only to read your history to learn of the incalculable help furnished to struggling Americans by the Germans in those years of revolution.

Here are the five outstanding principles of the Steuben Society:

First. To foster a patriotic American spirit among all citizens.

Second. To guard the Nation's political liberty by maintaining an honest equality of citizenship, regardless of birth, origin, or religion of any citizen or class of citizens.

Third. To uphold the Constitution of the United States.

Fourth. To maintain the traditions of the Nation, to keep alive the memory of the achievements of the pioneers of this country, and to enlighten the public on the important part played by the Germanic element in the making of America.

Fifth. To guide our citizens through the intricacies of public policies, to warn them against political intrigues, and to oppose alien-influenced government.

So you see the Steuben Society means the acme of patriotism to the United States.

THOUSANDS OF PROMINENT GERMAN-AMERICANS TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE

But the name of Baron Steuben is not the only German name that will be ever honored in this country since the foundations of it were laid by patriots.

In Washington, D. C., there is a fine monument to Steuben erected by the Congress of the United States. And there are thousands and thousands of other Germans who have eternal monuments in the hearts of American citizens.

I can not name them all, because their names are legion, but a few will bring vividly to your minds the debt we owe to German immigration to this country.

Such men as Carl Schurz, educator and loyal citizen, and Theodore Thomas, born in Essen, whose orchestra thrilled millions, and Thomas Nast, the famous cartoonist, originator of the Republican elephant and the Tammany tiger, real founder of the cartoonist art, who was born in Landau, in the Bavarian Palatinate, and William H. Rinehart, the great sculptor, son of a German farmer, and the representative German-American writers of German descent—Bayard Taylor, Joaquin Miller, Nordhoff, Timrod, Saxe, Wister—and so I could go on and fill this page with names of famous Germans in this country alone.

The Steuben Society of America has done constructive work for all Americans in pointing out to us what we owe to the German people. It has shown this clearly and logically in its book, The German Element in the United States, by Albert Bernhardt Faust.

It is a lesson with which all Americans should become familiar.

HOW GERMAN IMMIGRATION STEADILY INCREASED IN THE UNITED STATES

It has been estimated that before the Revolutionary War there were 225,000 Germans in the territory of North America. For the most part they had settled on the frontiers extending from the Mohawk in New York to Georgia, then the most southern colony.

The German immigrants to this country were among the first to go to Kentucky and Tennessee from Virginia and the Carolinas, and they were the first to enter the Ohio Valley. In this State the Germans settled in parts of Dutchess, Ulster, Greene, Columbia, Montgomery, Fulton, Schoharie, Oneida, Herkimer, Schenectady, and Saratoga.

While several estimates as to the number of Germans in this country before 1776 are higher than the number mentioned, probably some of them are too high. According to the conservative estimate given those Germans were distributed as follows:

New England	1,500
New York	25,000
Pennsylvania	110,000
New Jersey	15,000
Maryland and Delaware	20,500
Virginia and West Virginia	25,000
North Carolina	8,000
South Carolina	15,000
Georgia	5,000
Total	225,000

In the nineteenth century there was another great German immigration to the United States far outnumbering the steady flow during the previous hundred years, reaching a total for the century of more than 5,000,000. During the nineteenth century the German immigration to this country outnumbered that of any other foreign nation. The figures show this comparison:

Germany	5,009,280
Ireland	3,871,253
England, Scotland, Wales	3,024,222
Norway, Sweden, Denmark	1,439,060
Canada and Newfoundland	1,049,939
Italy	1,040,457
Austria-Hungary	1,027,195
Russia and Poland	926,902
All other countries	1,726,913
Total	19,115,221

Previous to 1850 the immigration here from Ireland exceeded that from Germany, but from 1851 to 1860 that from Germany exceeded that from Ireland and all other countries, until the last 10 years of the nineteenth century, when it was less than the Italian and Slavic immigrations, although still higher than the Irish and English.

The heaviest German immigration, however, did not come until the years between 1831 and 1840, during which period more than 152,000 came here. From that time on there was a steady stream of immigrants from the fatherland, 57,500 arriving here in one year; the figures reached 215,000 in 1854. These large numbers were due to the revolutionary troubles in Germany in 1848 and the years following, during which period we received such great liberty-loving Germans as Sigel, Hecker, Blenker, and our beloved Carl Schurz.

BOCKH ESTIMATED 18,000,000 GERMANS IN THIS COUNTRY IN THE YEAR 1900

That a large part of our fine American stock is the result of German blood flowing in the veins of American citizens there is no doubt. Just how far that blood flows can never be satisfactorily answered. The Steuben Society of America takes up the question, but does not pretend to completely answer it.

It shows that the most painstaking attempt to reach a conclusion in that regard was made by Emil Mannhardt in his Deutsch-Amerikanische Geschichsblatter in 1903, but this work was reviewed by the German statistician, Richard Bockh, of the University of Berlin, who proved that Mannhardt's estimate of 25,000,000 was inaccurate.

Bockh placed the population in the United States with German blood in their veins at 18,000,000.

But even at this lower estimate, which was made about 1903, there has been of necessity a far wider diffusion of the German blood in this country during the last 24 or 25 years, owing to intermarriage and the propagation of species.

Then the Steuben Society of America in its latest edition of its book, The German Element in the United States, published recently, goes on to elucidate the question with the aid of the best American statisticians who have worked on the subject of alien populations in this country.

The society takes as a basis the Twelfth Census of the United States, which was taken in 1900. That gave a total of 6,244,107 of white persons of German parentage.

In addition there is given a total of 1,585,574 white persons in the United States with one parent German and the other native. The society, however, states that in order to be fair and to avoid counting any of these twice, this number should be divided by two, thus giving 792,787. The total of white persons having one parent born in Germany and the other born in some other European country is given as 410,566. The society reasons, we may assume, that mixed marriages were far more often contracted between persons of the same blood and speaking the same language than otherwise. For instance, a person born in Germany would marry an Austrian or Russian when that person was of German blood and spoke the German language. The fraction one-half would therefore not accurately represent the German blood in this class.

LOGICAL AND SCIENTIFIC ANALYSIS SHOWS WHERE GERMAN BLOOD FLOWS

Bockh carefully analyzes the figures furnished by the United States Immigration Commission and goes into detail, but for the purposes of this article it will only be necessary to give his deductions in general.

He shows that while 151,118 Germans came here from the German Empire during 1898–1904, more than twice that number—that is, 315,744 Germans (including 26,303 Dutch and Flemish) came from other countries, the largest contingents coming from Austria-Hungary, Russia, Switzerland, and the Netherlands. He points out that the Germans of Switzerland, Belgium, and some of the border provinces have immigrated in far greater numbers to the United States than the French contingent of those populations.

The German Provinces of Austria he takes to be completely German, and the total of white persons, with both parents born in Austria, living in the United States in 1900, was 408,566. Those with one parent born in Austria and one in the United States totaled 26,450, of whom one-half—13,225—should be added to the total Americans with German blood in their veins. Then there were 55,225 persons born here who had one parent born in Austria and the other in some other foreign country, which by his method of claiming one-third of pure German blood in such cases would give 18,520.

In the same manner he takes up other immigration here from other foreign countries. Poland, he says, in the German Provinces contains from 45 to 75 per cent of German stock. Seventy per cent of the population of Switzerland is of German blood. Holland, he says, is of as pure German (low German) stock as that of any part of the former German Empire. The German population of Belgium, he says, is about four-sevenths of the total number of inhabitants.

He finds that the number of descendants of the German immigrations to the United States between 1790 and 1900 not enumerated as a foreign element in the census report of 1900 was 3,370,000.

By these methods he computes that there were 18,406,000 persons of German blood in the United States in 1900.

GREAT CHANGES IN 27 YEARS, BUT GERMAN BLOOD TO THE FRONT

But that was 27 years ago.

During those years many of the pure-stock Germans in this country have died. Their descendants still carry on, but while the number of descendants is constantly increasing and adding to the population, as they increase the German blood becomes more and more diffused with the blood of other nationalities.

The only way that blood could be kept pure German would be by marriages between persons of pure German blood. The pure German stock that has been added to this country in those 27 years is by immigration. In that period 778,547 German immigrants were admitted to the United States. Those immigrants added to the 18,184,547 persons of pure German stock said to have been here in 1900 would make a total for 1928 of 19,184,547, if none of them had died.

So logical estimates of the number of persons of pure German blood in the United States to-day can not be made with any degree of accuracy. An up-to-date special census would be the only means of correctly ascertaining that fact.

But the big point is here: The German blood is widely diffused throughout the people of the United States to-day, and it has had a potent effect in making this country one of the finest and most efficient of this great earth.

EFFECT OF MONROE DOCTRINE

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Col. Sidney Story, appearing in the Gaelic American, of New York, under date January 21, 1928, entitled "Monroe doctrine preserved the independence of the South American countries—European propaganda tries to poison minds of the southern nations against the United States—Papers are subsidized by the jealous English traders—The Civil War and the Maximilian fiasco—Field for genuine American diplomacy." I take the liberty of commending this article to the thoughtful attention of the Senate.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MONROE DOCTRINE PRESERVED THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE SOUTH AMERICAN COUNTRIES—EUROPEAN PROPAGANDA TRIES TO POISON MINDS OF THE SOUTHERN NATIONS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES—PAPERS ARE SUBSIDIZED BY THE JEALOUS ENGLISH TRADERS—THE CIVIL WAR AND THE MAXIMILIAN FIASCO—FIELD FOR GENUINE AMERICAN DIPLOMACY

By Col. Sidney Story

The Chicago Tribune of January 2, 1928, refers editorially to "President Coolidge and the new Americanism."

The Monroe doctrine, as the Tribune well states, has been a blessing to the Western Hemisphere. It has stood like a flaming sword at the gateways of the Americas and warded off the attempts of ambitious, selfish, and land-grabbing nations from exploiting the small and weaker nations of the western continent. This policy, initiated by the Monroe administration, has for a century withstood the envy, jealousy, and attacks of the Old World. In spite of the refusal of European nations to acknowledge the Monroe doctrine as international law, yet have they been forced to respect it.

Both England and Germany tried to trample it under foot, but in language most emphatic President Cleveland brought England to her senses, and so did President Roosevelt at a later period Germany.

European propaganda in South as well as in North America has sought to belittle the doctrine in an effort to impress upon the North American mind that it was a hurtful policy and ought to be abandoned, and on the Latin-American mind that it was a big club which the arrogant and selfish land-gobbling Yankees held ready at every opportunity to beat them into submission so as to rob them of their territory.

There have been and are still a few people in Latin America who innocently fall for this stuff, just as there are people in North America who are saturated with European sophistry and who are always ready to agree with our Old World commercial rivals and political antagonists that whatever move America makes, or whatever policy she initiates, Uncle Sam is always wrong.

OLD AND NEW WORLD DIPLOMACY

The difference between the diplomacy of the Old and New World is that the new is of the shirt-sleeve order. It crudely but openly advocates its policies, whilst the Old World for centuries immemorial has been accustomed to the Machiavellian school, which uses sophistry, deception, and whatnot on the theory that the "end justifies the means."

The writer, in his travels throughout Latin America, was agreeably surprised to note that in spite of the daily attacks on North America by the subsidized European press in Latin America, that the people of the Republics of Central and South America held the United States in high esteem and admiration. One thing in particular impressed him with astonishment, and that was the realization that the leading classes in South America are not only as a rule better educated than the average North American but have more polish, more respect for family, flag, and country and a better knowledge of world history than the average North American. Their statesmen and diplomats, as a rule, can give ours cards and spades and beat them at the game, and, as in the case of the Monroe doctrine, the Latin American understands better than we do international law and the multitudinous phrases of world diplomacy.

A BULWARK OF PEACE

The people and governments of Latin America have not only a better understanding of the Monroe doctrine than the average North American, but he holds the doctrine to be a cardinal principle of Latin America's policy. Why? Because he knows, in spite of the venomous attacks of European land-grabbing politicians, that the Monroe doctrine has been a bulwark of peace for the nations of the Western Hemisphere and an impregnable barrier against the selfish land-grabbing proclivities of the Old World nations. In proof whereof, at every Pan American conference on this hemisphere, whether held in North, Central, or South America, the nations of Pan America have at every session reaffirmed the abiding faith in the Monroe policy, and have at each meeting pledged over and over again their adhesion to it as well as their right, if need be, to protect it and to insure its observance and perpetuity.

Brazil, in the city of Rio de Janeiro, her federal district at the junction of the Beire-Mar and the Avenida Rio Branco, the two most prominent boulevards of that nation's federal capital, has erected, at a cost of over a million dollars, the Palaccio Monroe, a palace or temple dedicated to the Monroe doctrine; and to the proposition that this doctrine, in spite of European propaganda to the contrary, is the fundamental policy of Pan America. The European subsidized press in Latin America and in North America has sought to mislead the public mind. There are certain nations in Europe who pay well for such propaganda because the Monroe doctrine halts them from grabbing territory in the New World.

They have tried time and again to grab, but they were warned off when the Eagle screamed and showed its talons.

THE MAXIMILIAN FIASCO

During the Civil War in America, 1861–1865, the European nations took advantage of our troubles and France was urged by them to invade Mexico and there establish the throne of Maximilian on the ruins of the Mexican Republic. Had the Southern Confederacy succeeded, our North American Union would have been broken and scattered, and in due time France, England, Germany would have gradually absorbed Central and South America and eventually the weakened States of the North.

All this is known to the high-minded people and statesmen of Central and South America and, therefore, when we read in a Spanish or Portuguese Latin-American newspaper venomous tirades against North America on the Monroe doctrine, we must first ask ourselves the questions: What is this paper and who owns it? Ninety-nine instances in a hundred you will discover it is owned by European capital, and it is the mouthpiece or propaganda of this or that prominent and aggressor European nation, who looks with envy, jealousy, and apprehension on the ever increasing trade relations and social and political cordiality existing between the nations of the Latin Americas and Uncle Sam.

Such is international politics and rivalry. It is a fight for trade and for existence. This is a convincing reason that whilst talking peace, humanity, and civilization we must keep our powder dry, for were it not that behind us is force to protect what rights are also our we would be kicked, cuffed, and robbed, just as is defenseless, peace-loving, and altruistic China.

PROPAGANDA IN SOUTH AMERICA

In every Latin-American country European nations have newspapers published in Spanish and Portuguese, and those newspapers are supported by the governments and exporters of Europe to continue the fight for European and financial interests and to keep out the North American rival, even, if necessary, to fabricate stories to prejudice Latin America against Uncle Sam.

What is necessary to foster the spirit of Pan Americanism is for exporters and shipping interests in the United States of America to encourage the development of American publications in Spanish and Portuguese for the purpose of acquainting Latin America with the truth concerning our feelings and benevolent policies, so as to neutralize the vast amount of anti-American propaganda which for the past 25 years has sought to prejudice and inflame the Latin-American people against the United States.

Since the World War another more vicious brand of propagandists has arisen and developed unopposed against not only North America but against the social, religious, and political institutions of the Latin-American nations. The propaganda I refer to is the Moscow poison, which seeks to subvert the governments of the Western Hemisphere and to substitute for our representative form the autocracy or dictatorship of the mob, such as has made of Russia a nightmare of blood and destruction.

The red activities in Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, and Mexico at the time of the Sacco-Vanzetti incident, the Mexican Calles documents published in the Hearst papers are the warnings to all lovers of liberty, law, and order to cooperate and prepare to not only meet the powers of evil and destruction, but to drive them out of this Nation as well as to assist our brothers in Portuguese and Spanish America to do the same.

Moscow sovietism is an insidious enemy which has all the suavity of the devil, the cunning of the fox, the fawning of the spaniel, and the venom of the rattlesnake.

The Monroe doctrine was launched for the purpose of enfolding all the Americans in the protecting arms of pan Americanism against the Old World ambitions.

The Holy Alliance, formed after the Napoleonic wars, was for the purpose of restoring Spanish misrule by conquest over the Latin-American nations, which they had thrown off under the leadership of Bolivar, St. Martin, and Sarmiento, names written in letters of gold alongside of Washington's and Franklin's upon the starry scroll of immortality.

THE LOGICAL FIELD

Latin America is the logical field for North America to expand its commerce and extend its brotherly influence. It behooves us to cultivate closer friendship with our sister republics to the south by the study of the history customs, as well as requirement, and to use every effort in the way of high-class publicity to prove to them that we are not the land-grabbing sort which those who are envious and jealous of us would have them believe. Prove to them that our vast North American area is yet not 10 per cent developed, and that it will suffice for all our needs and expansion for a thousand years to come. Our motto is "Live and let live," and all propaganda such as referred to is intended to disrupt the cordial relationship between Uncle Sam and the Latin Americas, so as to furnish certain nations an excuse to exploit the Portuguese and Spanish Republics of this continent and absorb their territory, as they did in the past.

To the Latin American our Government should accredit statesmen of the broadest vision, and our consular and diplomatic servants should at all times be supported and encouraged in their work, and we should not permit European chancellors to outwit us in those Latin-American fields by discrediting our representatives, as has often been the case.

All Latin-American countries should be encouraged to send their young men to study in our colleges, and we should also urge as many of our young men to go to the colleges of South America and perfect themselves in the study of those nations, their languages, customs, traditions, economics, religion, and transportation.

Last, though not least, we must develop more and more an adequate and efficient mail, passenger, and cargo service by sea, rail, and air between North, Central, and South America.

We must also develop our cable and wireless service absolutely under our control, and not through the territory and under the supervision of the Europeans, our rivals in trade, and who in a great measure, because of their propaganda against the United States, are responsible for some of the ill feeling that creeps up now and then.

Our diplomacy with the Latin-American countries, as with most of the world, is still crude and of the kindergarten class.

When we cut loose from certain European diplomatic entanglements and run our own diplomacy irrespective of whether it steps on this or that so-called European cousin the more will the Latin Americans cuddle up to Uncle Sam, in spite of the red propaganda from Russia or the offensive tactics and publicity of our so-called European cousins.

DISTRIBUTIONS TO STOCKHOLDERS BY CORPORATIONS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, one of the principal controverted provisions of the pending revenue bill relates to the distributions made by a corporation to its stockholders out of earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913. I desire to have printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks a brief on this subject by Mr. A. L. Burford. I am satisfied that the brief will prove very helpful to those who study section 115 of the bill as it passed the House of Representatives. Let it also be referred.

There being no objection, the brief was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DIVIDENDS UNDER THE REVENUE ACT OF 1928

Brief by A. L. Burford

Section 115 of the bill passed by the House and now pending in the Senate repudiates a principle expressly recognized in all prior revenue bills from 1916 to 1926, inclusive. Distributions made by a corporation to its stockholders out of earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, are now to be taxed as income to the stockholders. Previous statutes exempting such distributions have only been a recognition by Congress of the fundamental principle that property owned on March 1, 1913, when the income-tax amendment became effective, is not converted into income by mere transfer or delivery. The proposition now is that all accumulated surplus and accrued increase in value owned by a corporation March 1, 1913, is capital to the corporation only, but taxed as income to the stockholders when distributed. The proposed change is shown below:

Present provisions revenue act 1926	Proposed revenue bill 1928
SEC. 201. (a) The term "dividend" when used in this title (except in paragraph (9) of subdivision (a) of section 234 and paragraph (4) of subdivision (a) of section 245) means any distribution made by a corporation to its shareholders, whether in money or in other property, out of its earnings or profits accumulated after February 28, 1913.	SEC. 115. (a) Definition of dividend: The term "dividend" when used in this title (except in section 203 (a) (4) and section 208 (c) (1), relating to insurance companies) means any distribution made by a corporation to its shareholders, whether in money or in other property, out of its earnings or profits.
(b) For the purposes of this act every distribution is made out of earnings or profits to the extent thereof, and from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits. Any earnings or profits accumulated, or increase in value of property accrued, before March 1, 1913, may be distributed exempt from tax, after the earnings and profits accumulated after February 28, 1913, have been distributed, but any such tax-free distribution shall be applied against and reduce the basis of the stock provided in section 204.	(b) Source of distributions: For the purposes of this act every distribution is made out of earnings or profits to the extent thereof, and from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits.

The 1926 act above quoted, with one exception, is but an elaboration and a reenactment of a similar provision contained in all revenue acts passed since 1913.

Revenue act 1916 (39 Stat. L. ch. 463, p. 756, sec. 2 (a)).
Revenue act 1917 (40 Stat. L. ch. 63, p. 300, sec. 31 (a) (b)).
Revenue act 1918 (40 Stat. L. ch. 18, p. 1057, sec. 301 (a) (b)).
Revenue act 1921 (42 Stat. L. ch. 136, p. 227, sec. 201 (a) (b)).
Revenue act 1924 (43 Stat. L. ch. 234, p. 253, sec. 201 (a) (b)).

The provision that every distribution "is made out of earnings or profits and to the extent thereof, and from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits," was first contained in the act of 1917, made retroactive to August 6, 1917.

Not since 1916 has any such assault been made on the principle first definitely announced in the act of that year.

The purpose of the 1928 act is not to limit the principle involved, as has sometimes been done since 1916 in connection with the provision quoted, but to eradicate it entirely from the law.

Two questions are presented:

(1) What purposes and reasons prompted the elimination; and

(2) What will be the effect of the change?

This radical departure from all prior revenue acts was not discussed in any of the hearings of the Ways and Means Committee. No advocate was heard in its support. No notice was given that any such change was contemplated. The provision as now written appeared for the first time in the bill reported to the House and those affected by it have had no opportunity to present their objections thereto.

The purposes and reasons actuating the modification of the existing law are only shown in the report submitted to the House with the bill. On page 20 of the report is the following:

"SECTION 115.—DISTRIBUTIONS BY CORPORATION

"Under previous revenue acts corporate distributions from surplus accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, were exempt from tax. There appears to be no reason for continuing this exemption indefinitely. Over 14 years have elapsed since March 1, 1913, and most corporations have distributed the surplus accumulated by them prior to March 1, 1913. It seems an appropriate time (particularly in view of the resulting simplification) to eliminate this exemption."

The first sentence in this part of the report is, of course, correct. It is then stated that there appears no reason for continuing the exemption indefinitely. No attack is made on the principle underlying the exemption. It is not contended that such principle is unsound. Two far different reasons are given: (a) That over 14 years have elapsed since March 1, 1913, during which period most corporations have distributed the surplus accumulated by them prior to that time; and (b) that the change will result in simplification.

The first of these reasons in effect admits the soundness of the exemption and expressly says that most corporations have taken advantage of it. Only stockholders in corporations that have been dilatory and in those unable to make distributions are to be taxed. If it was ever fair and just to exempt these distributions—and Congress has expressly so stated on six different occasions—it is now unjust to tax such stockholders, many of whom have had no voice in the matter.

The report intimates that corporations have had over 14 years within which to make distribution. This is hardly correct. In the act effective March 1, 1913, no reference was made to this question. The Treasury Department ruled that profit or loss on a sale or other disposition of capital assets should be determined by comparing the price received with the original cost, even though such acquisition antedated 1913. It also held that all dividends, irrespective of the source, were taxable to the stockholders. Much litigation followed, none of which had been finally decided when Congress came to consider the 1916 act, and it then definitely settled the controversy by incorporating into that act the principle that property on March 1, 1913, was capital and not income. It also announced at that time the further principle that accumulated earnings and surplus of a corporation on March 1, 1913, was capital of the stockholders and not income to be taxed when distributed.

The period of 14 years mentioned in the report has been further shortened, to some extent, by the provision of the 1917 act, forbidding the distribution of surplus and earnings accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, until all earnings subsequent to that date had been distributed. This provision became effective as of August 6, 1917.

But has 10 years been a sufficient time for corporations to distribute this prior surplus and accumulated profits? Speaking for the lumber companies I represent, and for many other lumber companies with which I am familiar, this has been entirely impossible. Such companies and other corporations manufacturing natural resources such as lumber, limited in amount, occupy a very different status from the ordinary manufacturing or trading corporation. In a sense the first class may be called "wasting corporations," while the latter class are more or less perpetual. When the natural resources of the one are exhausted it must necessarily cease business. Its existence is limited.

In the case of lumber companies it was necessary for them long prior to 1913 and before any income tax was in existence to acquire standing timber to prolong their operations. Practically all the earnings of many such companies were used for this purpose, and so used until all timber available to their plants had been secured. Their surplus and undivided profits were then so invested when the income-tax amendment became effective, and has only become available for distribution since that date as the timber has been converted into lumber and sold. In most cases these companies have done this as rapidly as possible, but the fact is that the majority of all lumber companies of any sizable investments acquired their timber holdings prior to 1913, and it has been physically impossible since that time to manufacture and convert same into distributable assets.

Furthermore, as above stated, it has been impossible for any corporation to distribute this pre-1913 surplus until all earnings and profits accumulated subsequent to August 6, 1917, had been distributed.

The second reason given in the report is that the change will simplify procedure. No data is given in support of this statement. Its correctness has been challenged and is now challenged. I have been informed from sources I consider reliable that the Treasury Department is not of this opinion.

Since the bill passed the House and opposition has been voiced to this provision it has been said that the change will make valuations of property owned on March 1, 1913, comparatively unimportant. Of course this is not correct. As a matter of fact, these valuations are now almost if not entirely complete. The timber of all lumber companies that I know anything about has been valued by the department and valued at a figure considered in most instances at less than its actual value. These values have been set up on the books so that it is not only a mathematical calculation to determine whether a distribution is from property owned on March 1, 1913, or earnings since that date.

But if the provision is unsound, unjust, or inequitable, even if it be admitted that it simplifies procedure, surely this is not justification for its final passage.

Coming to the next question, the unjust and unfair effect of the change is obvious. A concrete example will show it.

Three individuals formed a partnership in 1900 and invested $200,000 in timber. Later they invested $100,000 in a mill and equipment and began the manufacture of this timber. Prior to March 1, 1913, out of earnings they had invested $50,000 in additional timber; and on that date the timber owned had increased in value so that their property was, when the income tax amendment took effect, of the actual value of $400,000. Under the law now, and as it has existed since 1916, these partners are not taxed on any part of this surplus or any part of the increased value of their timber. They are only taxed on earnings and profits subsequent to March 1, 1913.

On the other hand, if the same individuals had formed a corporation and through this agency had carried out the same plans, the result, under the section now proposed, would be radically different. Under the section as it now reads in the 1928 act, distributions of this surplus and undivided profits is taxable to the stockholders, who will have to pay surtaxes on the entire amount when it is distributed.

Congress has heretofore had occasion to consider the injustice of the change now proposed. It has also properly protected the Government by provisions now in the law.

At the time the act of 1921 was before the Senate, attempts were made to amend or modify the 1918 act, which was substantially as the 1916 law, with reference to distributions of March 1, 1913, surplus. The amendments then proposed contemplated no such drastic action as is now done. While not adopted in 1921, the amendment, in substance, was adopted in 1924 and is now in the act of 1926 as subdivision (b) of section 201, and provides:

"but any such tax after distribution shall be applied against and reduce the basis of the stock provided in section 204."

During the period this amendment was being considered by the Senate the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, by Ruling No. 1873, construed the act of 1918 as permitting distributions to be made tax free out of realized earnings and profits prior to March 1, 1913, but as taxing distributions out of increase in value prior to that date. This question was debated in the Senate at some length, and the debate is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 61, part 7, pages 7299–7305. The result was that the Senate, by a decisive vote, overruled an amendment carrying out the solicitor's ruling and adopted the amendment exempting from taxation "increase in value of property accumulated."

In so far as Congress may have been said to have a fixed policy, it would appear that since 1916 it has been its policy to exempt from taxation surplus and profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913. No valid reason has been advanced why this policy should now be completely reversed. Certain it is that many stockholders, with entire justification, have relied on it since 1916. It has been impossible for others to adopt a different course, even had they been so disposed. The injustice of the proposed change is apparent from a simple application to concrete cases. The proportion of the entire revenue to be raised by the 1928 act which will be paid under this provision is small, but the tax on individual stockholders in corporations manufacturing lumber will be great. Surely no small class of taxpayers should be singled out and made to pay more than their proportion of taxes.

Respectfully submitted,

A. L. BURFORD.

NEW LAWYERS' CREDO

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have also a short article from today's New York World relating to an address made yesterday by Justice Joseph M. Proskauer, of the appellate division of the Supreme Court of New York on a "New lawyers' credo." It struck me as being such a splendid article that I felt every Senator would like to read it. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW LAWYERS' CREDO URGED BY PROSKAUER—JUSTICE SUGGESTS OATH TO MAKE LAW'S MACHINERY RUN SMOOTHLY

Justice Joseph M. Proskauer of the appellate division of the supreme court, addressing the bar association on law reform last night, proposed the following credo for members of the legal profession, to be supported on oath in much the same manner as a physician now takes the Hippocratic oath:

"I will join with my adversary in waiving a jury trial wherever and whenever it can possibly be done without the sacrifice of a fundamental right. I will join with my adversary in supporting a trial justice in fair comment upon the evidence and reasonable direction to a jury on the facts. I will join with my adversary in fair concession of undisputed facts. I will not put an adversary to his proof in respect to facts whose existence my client admits. I will refrain from merely formal or technical objection to the admission of evidence. I will cooperate with the trial justice and my adversary to secure a speedy, prompt, and complete presentation of the facts of the case. I will neither make nor oppose interlocutory motions unless they are of real and practical importance. I will take no appeal unless I am satisfied that substantial error has been committed and that a new trial should reasonably give a different result."

Justice Proskauer added that he profoundly believed "that there is no one within sound of my voice who does not know that if we were called upon to take an oath to support this credo, as the physician takes the Hippocratic oath, the machinery of justice would once more run smoothly."

He proposed that bar and bench organize to bring this about and to translate this new spirit into their everyday lives.

He expressed the opinion that workable law reform would not be accomplished merely by specific change in statute and rule, but that it must rest largely upon a fundamental change in the group psychology of the legal profession toward its function and of the lay psychological attitude toward the administration of justice.

"I disclaim any intent to attack bench or bar," he said. A great difficulty in the effectuation of law reform has always been a tendency of organs of public opinion to describe every constructive effort of a member of the profession as an attack upon his fellows.

Judge Proskauer maintained that the system of jury trial in civil contract cases "had been transformed from a useful process into a wasteful, ineffective, and outworn fetish." He contended there was no more practical reason for persistence in jury trial in this type of case than there would be for the continuance of trial by battle, and characterized it as the survival of an organism which has ceased to be useful, a "kind of political vermiform appendix."

He also suggested a sweeping change in the attitude toward the law of evidence. "The law of evidence," he said, "is not an end in itself, and we should cease making it our objective."

Furthermore, Justice Proskauer maintained that the profession must restore to the judge his power to function as a minister of justice and not as a mere presiding officer. And finally he criticized the tendency of lawyers to appeal.

"The overcontentiousness of the profession," he said, "is seen again in the number of appeals generally. We are appeal mad in this country. There is no disposition on anybody's part to let well enough alone. An appeal on the off chance that some error may somewhere be found is a matter of course."

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin wishes to address himself to the appropriation bill which is now before the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE resumed the speech begun by him yesterday. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McLean	Shipstead
Barkley	Fletcher	McMaster	Shortridge
Bayard	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Bingham	George	Mayfield	Smoot
Black	Gerry	Metcalf	Steck
Blaine	Gillett	Moses	Steiwer
Blease	Gooding	Neely	Stephens
Borah	Gould	Norbeck	Swanson
Bratton	Greene	Norris	Thomas
Brookhart	Hale	Nye	Trammell
Broussard	Harris	Oddie	Tydings
Bruce	Harrison	Overman	Tyson
Capper	Hawes	Phipps	Wagner
Caraway	Hayden	Pine	Walsh, Mass.
Copeland	Heflin	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Couzens	Howell	Ransdell	Warren
Curtis	Johnson	Reed, Mo.	Waterman
Cutting	Jones	Reed, Pa.	Watson
Dale	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Deneen	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.	Willis
Dill	King	Sackett
Edge	La Follette	Schall
Ferris	McKellar	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SACKETT in the chair). Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

PROPOSAL FOR A PAN AMERICAN POLICY

Mr. BLAINE resumed and concluded his speech, which is entire as follows:

Thursday, February 2, 1928

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, upon entering the Chamber a few moments ago I heard a suggestion made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] with respect to standing by the President. I submit that if we knew just where the President stands upon our international questions, and particularly in reference to Central and South America, then we might be in a position to determine whether or not we should stand by the President. But I have observed that the administration on this question is very much at sea. It is a craft without a rudder and without a captain.

I had hoped that the President of the United States, when he had that splendid opportunity to advise America and advise the world of exactly what is the American policy with respect to our southern neighbors, might take advantage of the situation and do this. He signally failed to indicate in his address before the Pan American Conference at Habana even the suggestion of a hope that we might have a policy. I want to quote to the Senate briefly a few statements coming from the administration as the President spoke before that conference. Here the whole world was his audience. Men, women, and children were awaiting a voice from America that might offer some hope for peace in the world, and what did they get?

A determination to adjust differences among ourselves, not by a resort to force, but by the application of the principles of justice and equity, is one of our strong characteristics.

So said the President at Habana. With Haiti and San Domingo in the background, the President uttered those words at the moment when, without the consent of Congress, he was maintaining an army in the field to crush a nation with which we are not at war.

The other day in a colloquy upon the floor of the Senate, when I questioned the President's great desire and great consideration for the Senate with respect to the S–4 inquiry and his lack of confidence in Congress with respect to the Nicaraguan question, a Senator said in effect, "Why, if the President had sent an army to Nicaragua, that would not be authorized, as the sending of an army would be an act of war and would require the consent of Congress. But he sent the marines." Ah, wherein is the distinction? Here were war vessels carrying all the implements necessary for war. Upon those war vessels were men in the panoply of war.

They were put upon the shores of this small, weak, defenseless, disordered country, armed with field guns, machine guns, and airplanes, and then it is said that that is not an act of war. I can see no distinction whether those armed forces be the Army, the militia, the Navy, or the marines. It is idle to undertake to defend the President's course in this particular instance by saying that the sending of the marines to Nicaragua was perfectly proper and that had he sent the Army that would have been contrary to the mandates of our Constitution.

Another paragraph from the President's address:

To-day—

He said, speaking at the opening of the Pan American Conference—

To-day Cuba is her own sovereign. Her people are independent, free, prosperous, peaceful, and enjoying the advantages of self-government.

"Independent" under the Platt amendment and a treaty with respect to Cuba which forbids her full sovereignty and her independence. "Free!" The United States reserves the right to intervene for the preservation of her so-called freedom. "Peaceful" she has to be, or the United States marines will step in, as they have stepped in heretofore. Cuba has not her sovereignty; it is denied to Cuba, although she has made efforts to withdraw herself from the guardianship of the United States.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BLAINE. I am sorry not to yield, but I will say to the Senator from California that I have learned a very splendid lesson from him, and that is not to permit interruptions during the course of my remarks.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I can ask the question and the Senator from Wisconsin can answer it later on.

Mr. BLAINE. I must charge the Senator from California with the responsibility for my attitude, and I must, therefore, decline to yield.

Another sentence of beautifully spun phrases from the voice of the President at that conference, I quote:

But we have put our confidence in the ultimate wisdom of the people. We believe we can rely on their intelligence, their honesty, and their character. We are thoroughly committed to the principle that they are better fitted to govern themselves than anyone else is to govern them.

What are the facts? We relied on the intelligence of the Haitian people to such a degree that we did not allow them to choose between two colored slips—ballots—at the time the Haitian constitution was adopted, but had the marines hand them a slip of the proper color. Yes; we believe they are fitted to govern themselves, but Haiti has not had a congressional election since the adoption of that same constitution, a constitution written by the representatives of the armed forces of America and jammed down the throats of the people of Haiti at the point of a gun. If such an election had been held in America for a United States Senator, and such Senator had come to the Senate knocking for admission, the Senate would have said: "No. There was no free election; military force controlled the polls; the people did not have an opportunity to express that free choice to which they are entitled under our Constitution, and therefore the election is void"; and, indeed, it would have been void. No election is valid unless it is a free election; and there can be no free election where force is in evidence. There must be that untrammeled freedom of the individual, where he may express his choice according to the dictates of his own judgment, without the intervention of coercion. Again said the President:

It is better for the people to make their own mistakes than to have some one else make their mistakes for them.

And this the President said in face of the fact that his representative in Nicaragua, Mr. Stimson, a special envoy, speaking to the Nicaraguans, said:

I have the honor to inform you—

He was speaking to both parties down there—that I am authorized to say that the President of the United States intends to accept the request of the Nicaraguan Government to supervise the elections of 1928; that the retention of President Diez during the remainder of his term is regarded as essential to that plan and will be insisted upon; that a general disarmament of the country is also regarded as necessary for the proper and successful conduct of such election; and that the forces of the United States will be authorized to accept the custody of the arms of those willing to lay them down, including the Government, and to disarm forcibly those who will not do so.

And yet there are those who claim that America is in Nicaragua by the invitation of the Government of Nicaragua, an invitation extended, sir, under pressure of armed force.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator relent and allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BLAINE. I must decline to yield. I appreciate that the Senator has served long and faithfully, and I am trusting to the good advice that he gave us a few days ago with respect to his own position regarding interruptions during the course of his remarks. So I must decline to be interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES in the chair). The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I observe that he declines to yield.

Mr. BLAINE. There will be sufficient time afforded the Senator from California to answer, as he challenged me the other day and said he would answer me at some length at some future time.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I did not understand the Senator was going to make this address. I made no challenge to the Senator, and at the moment I merely wished to ask a simple question whether or not both parties——

Mr. BLAINE. I prefer not to be interrupted at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. BLAINE. I will be very glad to answer the Senator's question when I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I wish to say that I did not challenge the Senator. The Senator, I am sure, will say that I did not challenge him.

Mr. BLAINE. If that is what the Senator says, I withdraw the suggestion, but I understood him to say that at some future time he would reply at length.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, that is granted; that I would speak on the subject.

Mr. BLAINE. That he would reply to my suggestions, and I took that as a challenge.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I did not challenge the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. I informed the Senator privately that I accepted the challenge and that I expected to address myself at some future time at length to this question. It was a perfectly friendly suggestion on the part of the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Of course, there is no feeling.

Mr. BLAINE. I appreciate that.

Mr. President, here is another quotation from the President's address at the Pan American Conference at Habana:

> It is a high example that we have set for the world in resolving international differences without resort to force.

In the last quarter of a century the example of America—and it has not been the heart of America that has spoken; it has been those who have represented America temporarily—has been a history of force, unrelenting force, imposed on small and weak nations unable to defend themselves. I am going to discuss that feature before I conclude.

> It is a high example that we have set for the world in resolving international differences without resort to force.

Yet, during the last 25 years some 14 out of the 20 republics to the south of us have had the hand of force placed upon their ambitions, their governments, their sovereignty by those who were our temporary rulers.

I say it is not the voice of America that has spoken in the words of force but the voice of those who, under the changed conditions of commercial intercourse, have taken the position that commerce is more precious than liberty, who have not been willing to take a position in accordance with the traditional history of America, a tradition which had kept this country at peace and amity with all her neighbors for over a hundred years.

We have heard much about the Monroe doctrine as though it were a mere abstraction, something that was said by a President at some time that had relation to only one situation. I am not going to discuss the Monroe doctrine from that standpoint. I wish to discuss, however, the principles underlying the Monroe doctrine, which form the background of that doctrine. Mr. President, the principles of the Monroe doctrine, a vital force for over a hundred years of America's history, were supplemental to the doctrine of inherent fairness and justice that the strong must not ride down the weak. That is the Monroe doctrine, no matter what interpretation may be applied to it by this administration. The circumstances under which those principles were announced did not limit their application. These principles were not unknown to the centuries of the past. Their essence was self-preservation inherent in individuals and in groups of individuals, whether organized under a tribal system or as a governmental unit. They have neither a beginning nor an end, for they antedate all governments and will project themselves into the future so long as there may be a human being needing self-protection.

The misconstruction placed on these principles in modern times and their maladjusted enforcement do not limit them. They are unrimmed by time or circumstance.

Latter-day statesmen have abused them, as have been abused the finer sentiments of all mankind. In their name tyranny has been practiced, and injustices and wrongs have prevailed. The doctrine of inherent fairness and justice has been a shield, and on other occasions it has been used as an instrumentality for usurpation. It has struck down innocence and exalted greed. Misguided men have quoted and twisted the doctrine as the devil has quoted and twisted the Scriptures, and to the same purpose.

In America in the last quarter of a century its misconstruction and its modernized maladjustment are a betrayal of our traditional policy. We have departed from it as our own protective measure, and it has ceased to be our shield, and is rapidly becoming an engine of mischief if not of destruction.

The repudiation of this fundamental Americanism which brought to us peace, happiness, and prosperity finds America's diplomacy and international policy a drifting one. In fact, America has no policy except such as may be the passing whim of a President or a Secretary of State, or their ill-conceived notions. Such lack of policy promises nothing for the future but the possibility of wars in which we should have no concern, but into which we are dragged without the consent of the American people acting through their Congress.

Loyalty to the cause of America, to her fine traditions, finds no place in the dealings of our rulers with the weak or disordered States of the Western Hemisphere. Oil, metals, landed estates, plantations, concessions, foreign loans, protectorates are the only language in the lexicon of those whom we have trusted with America's destiny. Loyalty to a proud past, adherence to fundamental Americanism, no longer prompt those who are guiding America to a destiny of imperialism instead of independence.

A brief review of the principles of the Monroe doctrine as they have been conceived and officially proclaimed by the Presidents who knew them and had the courage to enforce them is not out of place here.

Washington foresaw the struggle for oil, for plantations, for concessions. He pointed to our duty to guard against acts of our own citizens which might tend to disturb peace with other nations. He said:

> Observations on the value of peace with other nations are unnecessary. It would be wise, however, by any provisions, to guard against those acts of our own citizens which might tend to disturb it, and to put ourselves in a condition to give that satisfaction to foreign nations which we may sometimes have occasion to require from them.

President Monroe, in enunciating the Monroe doctrine, emphatically declared that we should consider any attempt on the part of a European power "to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety." He proposed that no European nation should interpose for the purpose of oppressing any government upon the Western Hemisphere, and declared against the controlling of their destiny in any manner. He said:

> We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the Governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

He was not talking about political control alone. He proposed that no European nation should use any manner or means to control the destiny of the people to our south. President Monroe broadened his language to exclude every pretense of any European nation from gaining a foothold upon this hemisphere in any manner. He declared that it is equally impossible that we should behold any interposition by European governments in any form with indifference.

President John Quincy Adams knew of the temptation of a strong nation to bulldoze, to beat down and to subjugate weaker peoples, and declared that the cornerstone of all of our future relations with the southern Republics was "disinterestedness"; the next was "cordial good will to them"; the third was a claim of "fair and equal reciprocity." He left it to those Republics to regulate as to them shall seem fit those concerns which are "the prerogative of their independence."

President Jackson, courageous and independent, referred to the long-standing claims of our citizens against governments to the south as sources of dissatisfaction and complaint, and recited a long list of irritating circumstances, though he never hinted that force should be interposed, and proclaimed that "With Brazil and all our neighbors of this continent we continue to maintain relations of amity and concord."

President Polk, in a message to the Senate on April 22, 1850, said:

If there be any who desire to seize and annex any portion of the territories of these weak sister Republics to the American Union, or to extend our dominion over them, I do not concur in their policy; and I wish it to be understood in reference to that subject that I adopt the views entertained, so far as I know, by all my predecessors.

I respectfully call to the attention of our State Department President Fillmore's declaration that "the great law of morality ought to have a national as well as a personal and individual application." There ought to be emblazoned over the entrance to the White House, to the Department of State, to the Commerce Department, in letters that even officials who may be blinded by the "almighty dollar" could read, President Fillmore's challenge at any attempt to veer from the course pursued by America for then over half a century. I quote the salient portions of his message. Had this message been read by our President before he went to Habana, the prayers of the people of the world for some step toward peace might have been answered.

President Fillmore said:

Among the acknowledged rights of nations is that which each possesses of establishing that form of government which it may deem most conducive to the happiness and prosperity of its own citizens, of changing that form as circumstances may require, and of managing its internal affairs according to its own will. The people of the United States claim this right for themselves, and they readily concede it to others. Hence it becomes an imperative duty not to interfere in the government or internal policy of other nations; and although we may sympathize with the unfortunate or the oppressed everywhere in their struggles for freedom, our principles forbid us from taking any part in such foreign contests. We make no wars to promote or to prevent successions to thrones, to maintain any theory of a balance of power, or to suppress the actual government which any country chooses for itself. We instigate no revolutions—

Fillmore could not have said that in the beginning of this century truthfully; but he said it as the then policy of America as it had been observed for over half a century.

We instigate no revolutions, nor suffer any hostile military expeditions to be fitted out in the United States to invade the territory or provinces of a friendly nation. The great law of morality ought to have a national as well as a personal and individual application. We should act toward other nations as we wish them to act toward us, and justice and conscience should form the rule of conduct between governments, instead of mere power, self-interest, or the desire of aggrandizement.

A quite different message from that we had in the year 1928 at Habana? I read further from President Fillmore:

It has been the uniform policy of this Government, from its foundation to the present day, to abstain from all interference in the domestic affairs of other nations.

But it is now said by some that this policy must be changed.

The same cry is made to-day as was heard back in Fillmore's time. He recognized it—he denounced any attempt to interfere in the affairs of other nations.

(At this point Mr. DILL suggested the absence of a quorum, and the roll was called.)

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I had been quoting from a message of President Fillmore, and I want to continue to read a few more paragraphs from that great patriot, that man who looked into the future, not for a generation but for centuries. He thought of his country and not of commerce.

The truth is that the course which they—our forefathers—pursued was dictated by a stern sense of international justice, by a statesmanlike prudence and a far-seeing wisdom, looking not merely to the present necessities but to the permanent safety and interest of the country.

Our policy is wisely to govern ourselves, and thereby to set such an example of national justice, prosperity, and true glory as shall teach to all nations the blessings of self-government and the unparalleled enterprise and success of a free people.

To-day "dollar diplomacy" gives the lie to President Fillmore.

No longer is there "a stern sense of international justice"; "statesmanlike prudence and a far-seeing wisdom" are lost in the scuffle for oil, for plantations, for concessions, for foreign loans. "Permanent safety and interest of the country" are no longer the end. Modern American diplomacy is the foundling of immoral intrigues, to be protected and perpetuated by force. Are the slimy worms that crawled over the pages of our domestic history in the last few years to become, through a system of metamorphosis, the vermin of international immorality?

If the present policy of this administration is to determine the policy of America for the future, then America has ceased to have the character given to her by our forefathers, so eloquently and patriotically expressed by President Fillmore.

President Pierce advocated territorial aggression in this hemisphere, and he points out how easy it would be for America to annex and absorb new territory, and even suggests that such might be justified, but even he, with all his zeal for aggrandizement, recognized the fact that "we have abstained from doing it, in obedience to considerations of right, not less than policy."

Even President Buchanan was restrained from embarking upon an imperialistic policy, though his messages and recommendations contained little of value.

President Johnson, exhibiting on so many occasions either fits of madness or even less honorable characteristics, struck out boldly for territorial acquisition. I know of no historian, no teacher, no patriot ever presenting the life of President Johnson as one to be emulated by young America.

President Grant, than whom there was no greater on the field of battle, was promptly rebuked for his imperialistic attempts on San Domingo by Senator Charles Sumner, in offering his resolution expressing Congress's opposition to the military invasion in San Domingo.

Let me say here in passing that the other day Mr. Hughes, a distinguished American citizen, as evidence of America's desire to withdraw from South American countries, as proof of our desire to withdraw from that territory, pointed to our conduct in San Domingo. There has been intermeddling or an attempt to intermeddle in San Domingo for nearly 60 years, and we are still in San Domingo, as I shall presently observe.

Following President Hayes there came to the Presidency Grover Cleveland. I shall endeavor to be nonpartisan on this question. I am merely reviewing the history of America. I propose to review that history honestly and correctly and where credit is due I propose to give credit.

Grover Cleveland was the first national success of his party since prior to the Civil War. He brought to the office of President well-ripened judgment, vast experience, and coming, as he did, from the ranks of those who believed in America and America's traditions and history and policies, he reflected in a high degree the intelligent opinion of our people as a whole. He was confronted with an international situation more potential for mischief than was the international situation under President Monroe. The principles of the Monroe doctrine were challenged as they had never been challenged before. When President Cleveland spoke, it was as though the zero hour in America's diplomatic dealings in the Western Hemisphere had struck, and President Cleveland spoke as only a man of his sturdy character could speak. He revived and buttressed and strengthened the Monroe doctrine, without adding thereto or detracting therefrom. I wish our President might have read this message before he went to Habana.

These are the words of Cleveland:

When citizens of the United States voluntarily go into a foreign country they must abide by the laws there in force and will not be protected by their own Government from the consequences of an offense against those laws committed in such foreign country; but watchful care and interest of this Government over its citizens are not relinquished because they have gone abroad, and if charged with crime committed in the foreign land a fair and open trial, conducted with decent regard for justice and humanity, will be demanded for them. With less than that this Government will not be content when the life or liberty of its citizens is at stake.

He reaffirms, clinches, and rivets down the Monroe doctrine under the white heat of patriotic fervor and loyalty to international morality. While President Fillmore spoke in terms of the Golden Rule, Cleveland denounced international immorality as odious. I quote him:

I mistake the American people if they favor the odious doctrine that there is no such thing as international morality, that there is one law for a strong nation and another for a weak one, and that even by indirection a strong power may with impunity despoil a weak one of its territory.

When the internecine strife in Cuba was at its height, with a demand for war against Spain, Cleveland said:

The United States has, nevertheless, a character to maintain as a nation, which plainly indicates that right and not might should be the rule of its conduct.

President McKinley followed Cleveland, and, lacking the courage and frankness of Cleveland, as a milder character, he could not resist the temptations against which he inveighed when he said:

We want no wars of conquest; we must avoid the temptation of territorial aggression.

But when the war with Spain was over the successes of the strong nation demanded and received the island of Porto Rico and other islands in the West Indies, and one to be selected in the Ladrones, and the administration offered as an excuse for the aggrandizement of the Philippines that we paid pauper Spain $20,000,000, and all the beautiful phrases and noble sentiments were dissipated like the mists before the golden splendor of the rising sun.

At this point I can not forego the drawing of a line of demarcation between the bluster and fury of a Roosevelt and the moral and political courage of a Cleveland. The one, when confronted with problems that would test America's sincerity of purpose and allegiance to the inherent doctrine of fairness and justice, yielded under the influences that put our Nation on its way to imperialism. He discussed chronic wrongdoing on the part of nations and their impotency, but he had in mind the weak nations, not the strong ones. Herein lies the difference between that which actuated President Cleveland and that which influenced President Roosevelt in his second administration.

When Cleveland talked about international immorality and chronic wrongdoers he had reference to the nation that was superior in naval force to America. Cleveland said that America has a character to maintain as a nation, and he said it in the teeth of the then world's strongest combination of force. When he said that a strong power may not with impunity despoil a weak nation, he said it, not to the weak and disordered neighbors to the south, but he said to Lord Granville, of Great Britain, that—

We are not without concern as to whatever may affect the interests of a sister Republic of the American continent and its position in the family of nations.

Secretary of State Gresham, in Cleveland's Cabinet, Secretary of State Blaine, under President Harrison, and Secretary of State Olney, under Cleveland's second administration, exerted their good offices to bring about diplomatic intercourse with Great Britain. Cleveland, speaking through his Secretary of State, announced:

The Monroe doctrine rests upon facts and principles that are both intelligible and incontrovertible.

* * * whether moral or material interests be considered, it can not but be universally conceded that those of Europe are irreconciliably diverse from those of America, and that any European control of the latter is necessarily both incongruous and injurious. * * *

The States of America, South as well as North, by geographical proximity, by natural sympathy, by similarity of governmental constitutions, are friends and allies, commercially and politically, of the United States.

When the time came for the last word, President Cleveland messaged to Congress these words:

I am, nevertheless, firm in my conviction that while it is a grievous thing to contemplate the two great English-speaking peoples of the world as being otherwise than friendly competitors in the onward march of civilization and strenuous and worthy rivals in all the arts of peace, there is no calamity which a great nation can invite which equals that which follows a supine submission to wrong and injustice and the consequent loss of national self-respect and honor, beneath which are shielded and defended a people's safety and greatness.

Cleveland did not say these words to Haiti, to San Domingo, to Colombia, to Nicaragua.

I have contrasted the political and moral courage of President Cleveland with that of President Roosevelt. In fairness to President Roosevelt it should be acknowledged that when he came to the Presidency on the death of President McKinley he emulated the courageous character of Cleveland. In 1902 Germany, England, and Italy proposed a naval demonstration against Venezuela for the purpose of forcing recognition of the validity of claims of subjects of the three great powers. One claim was for interest seven years past due on 5 per cent bonds for which Venezuela customs were pledged. Another was for 7 per cent dividends guaranteed by the Venezuelan Government on the capital stock issued for the building of a railroad by German subjects, at a cost of about $20,000,000. There were other claims aggregating about $400,000 for forced loans and military requisitions.

I call the attention of the Senate to these details for the purpose of contrasting the policy of America as it had been declared up to and including the first administration of President Roosevelt with the policy of the present administration. Here were claims for interest due on bonds for which the Venezuelan customs were pledged; here were dividends guaranteed to foreign investors by the Venezuelan Government; here were other claims for forced loans and military requisitions, identically of the same character as have furnished the excuse for the last 25 years for sending marines and the Army and the Navy into these smaller and weaker countries in order to force them to acknowledge some alleged indebtedness to foreign governments or private parties, and the assertion is made that that policy has become necessary in order that America may protect these smaller and weaker governments against invasion by European nations. What was Roosevelt's answer to that same claim?

The German ambassador declared that the German Government had—no purpose or intention to make even the smallest acquisition of territory on the South American Continent or the islands adjacent.

The whole purpose, of course, was to test the Monroe doctrine and therefore the disclaimer. The British Government's demands went to the question of the settlement of claims for the destruction of property and the mistreatment and imprisonment of British subjects, due to the revolutions and civil wars in Venezuela, and including as well a settlement of the foreign debt.

Here were all the elements typical of all the claims that have brought about our modern doctrine of force, which makes America the collecting agency of alien and foreign peoples and foreign governments, at the sacrifice of America's honor, which calls upon America's manhood to make sacrifices, to give its blood, even its life, to enforce against weak and disordered nations the collection of claims, whether held by foreign governments or foreign subjects or by American exploiters or adventurers. That is the policy of the present administration, a policy denounced by Sumner on the floor of the Senate as "the dance of blood." What did Roosevelt do?

The claims presented by the three great powers involved, as I have said, practically every question that has presented itself to the American Government in respect to our southern neighbors for the last quarter of a century or more. The three European governments proposed to collect their demands by force. President Roosevelt knew full well that such force would mean the seizing of the customhouses and the administration of the customs receipts, and that meant territorial acquisition by a foreign power. That territorial acquisition might have been temporary only, but the seizing of the customhouses and the control of the ports of Venezuela meant nothing short of territorial acquisition in permanency or temporarily.

President Roosevelt knew, as anyone would know, that an exhibition of force, a naval demonstration by the three great European powers, meant something more than a gesture; that fear alone would not induce the Venezuelan Government to make a declaration recognizing the correctness of the European governments' demands, and it was also known that if even such a recognition were made its fulfillment was impossible unless the three European nations took possession of the ports and the customhouses of the Venezuelan Government.

Recognizing the fact that the use of force by any nation in attempting to collect a debt due its subjects from another nation meant immediate possession, an acquisition of territory for such purposes at least, and the very possible resultant permanent occupancy and possession, the President very properly let it be known that Admiral Dewey's force would be instructed to sail to the Venezuelan coast and thus prevent the taking of possession of Venezuelan territory, and by that fact itself preventing the powerful European nations from collecting their alleged debts by force.

In 1916, speaking of the incident, Colonel Roosevelt, in an address said:

I asked, on behalf of the Nation, the things to which we were entitled. I was as courteous as possible. I not only acted with justice, but with courtesy toward them. I put every battleship and every torpedo boat on the sea under the American flag, and Dewey with instructions to hold himself ready in entire preparedness to sail at a moment's notice.

Mr. President, I am willing that all America's battleships upon the seas shall be employed to beat back European aggression against the Western Hemisphere as a means of self-preservation, but I am opposed to using armed force in the neighboring Republics to the south for the collection of debts of exploiters and adventurers, whether they be foreign or domestic. I am opposed to commanding America's young manhood to endure the sacrifice of death for the sake of enforcing the collection of a debt against a weaker power.

Unfortunately President Roosevelt's declarations were not made a part of the written diplomacy of his administration. The result of the arbitration proceedings following the President's demands clearly demonstrates the injustice of coercive measures for the collection of pecuniary claims. The total demands of foreign governments, including that of the United States, were a little over 163,000,000 bolivars, while the arbitration commission awarded about 30,000,000 bolivars. In other words, while the demands aggregated approximately $32,700,000, the award amounted only to about $5,900,000.

Under the present policy, however, the policy of coercion and force, the pound of flesh would have been demanded at the point of the bayonet. When arbitration was brought into play by President Roosevelt justice was done toward our southern neighbor, and America still retained the character for fair dealing, which she had always possessed.

While President Roosevelt contended that the coercion of an American state was not contrary to the Monroe doctrine provided that it did "not take the form of acquisition of territory by any non-American power," he effectually denied to European governments any resort to measures of coercion for the purpose of collecting their debts or the debts of their subjects.

Herein lies the paradoxical position of America. President Roosevelt talked about the golden rule being the guiding rule of conduct but not forbidding the exercise of power and force, and out of the womb of a self-contradictory philosophy the imperialistic policy of America was born.

That imperialistic policy did not have its inception, however, in any contest with any nation equal to ours. It was begun against our weak and disordered neighbors to the south, and it relies upon our power, our armies, and our navies to enforce the new conception of the Monroe doctrine. I again quote President Roosevelt:

> Our own Government has always refused to enforce * * * contractual obligations on behalf of its citizens by an appeal to arms. It is much to be wished that all foreign governments would take the same view. But they do not; and in consequence we are liable at any time to be brought face to face with disagreeable alternatives.

Expediency displaced the inherent doctrine of fairness and justice.

Is there any distinction between the initial acquiring of territory by force and the ultimate acquiring of territory by receivership in the collection of a debt? If we are justified in preventing European territorial aggrandizement by one method, we are justified in preventing such aggrandizement by the other method. To prevent European expansion in the Western Hemisphere, to prevent even temporary occupancy or acquisition of a single foot of territory in this hemisphere by any method or by any means, and for any purpose, is necessary to our peace and to the peace of this hemisphere; yes—and of the world.

It seems to me that it makes no difference what method a foreign government may use to promote its ambitions for expansion or what the means of aggression may be. President Monroe said that foreign nations should not control in any manner the destiny of a single nation on our western continents, and any attempt to acquire control can be treated by America in no other light than "as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

The new conception of the Monroe doctrine grows upon the mistaken idea that America is to be the wet nurse for alien governments, money lenders, adventurers, and concession grabbers in their career of expansion, extension, or exploitation.

It is true that America will, from time to time, be brought face to face with disagreeable alternatives; but that does not change and should not change the character of America. Expediency, when we are brought face to face with disagreeable alternatives, will not justify a violation of the inherent and the immutable doctrine of fairness and right and justice.

To enthrone expediency, and even to admit of alternatives in the application of the doctrine of inherent fairness and justice that the strong must not ride down the weak, is nothing short of a compromise with evil.

But international morality must be discarded and the character of the United States as formulated for over a hundred years submerged, that might and not right be preclaimed the rule of conduct. Thus we have turned the Monroe doctrine into an agency for mischief for America, not for her protection or the protection of weaker nations and peoples.

Just a brief review of later history:

Under President Taft dollar diplomacy was frankly established. There was one characteristic that stood out with President Taft. Disagree with him as you might, he was always frank; and frankness always promotes honesty.

He said:

> The diplomacy of the present administration has sought to respond to modern ideas of commercial intercourse. * * * It is an effort frankly directed to the increase of American trade upon the axiomatic principle that the Government of the United States shall extend all proper support to every legitimate and beneficial American enterprise abroad.

He frankly repudiates the traditional American policy, and taboos such traditional policy as "outworn dogmas of the past."

President Wilson, in language at least, assented to the traditional American policy.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD in connection with my remarks the message by President Cleveland when the revolution in Hawaii took place. Shortly before the close of President Harrison's administration the then President transmitted to the Senate a treaty providing for the annexation of Hawaii to the United States. Mr. Cleveland, when coming to the office of President, repudiated the whole transaction relating to the proposal for the annexation of Hawaii and refused to submit the treaty to the Senate. He sent a special message on December 18, 1893, and in that message discussed the very question under consideration. I ask that that message be inserted at this point in the course of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> While naturally sympathizing with every effort to establish a republican form of government, it has been the settled policy of the United States to concede to people of foreign countries the same freedom and independence in the management of their domestic affairs that we have always claimed for ourselves, and it has been our practice to recognize revolutionary governments as soon as it became apparent that they are supported by the people. * * *
> As I apprehend the situation, we are brought face to face with the following conditions:
>
> The lawful Government of Hawaii was overthrown without the drawing of a sword or the firing of a shot by a process every step of which, it may safely be asserted, is directly traceable to and dependent for its success upon the agency of the United States, acting through its diplomatic and naval representatives.
>
> But for the notorious predilections of the United States minister for annexation, the committee of safety, which should be called the committee of annexation, would never have existed.
>
> But for the landing of the United States forces under false pretexts respecting the danger to life and property, the committee would never have exposed themselves to the pains and penalties of treason by undertaking the subversion of the Queen's Government. * * *
>
> Believing, therefore, that the United States could not, under the circumstances disclosed, annex the islands without justly incurring the imputation of acquiring them by unjustifiable methods, I shall not again submit the treaty of annexation to the Senate for its consideration, and in the instructions to Minister Willis, a copy of which accompanies this message, I have directed him to so inform the provisional government.
> But in the present instance our duty does not, in my opinion, end with refusing to consummate this questionable transaction. It has been the boast of our Government that it seeks to do justice in all things without regard to the strength or weakness of those with whom it deals. I mistake the American people if they favor the odious doctrine that there is no such thing as international morality, that there is one law for a strong nation and another for a weak one, and that even by indirection a strong power may with impunity despoil a weak one of its territory.
> By an act of war, committed with the participation of a diplomatic representative of the United States and without authority of Congress, the Government of a feeble but friendly and confiding people has been overthrown. A substantial wrong has thus been done which a due regard for our national character as well as the rights of an injured people requires we should endeavor to repair. * * *
> The law of nations is founded upon reason and justice, and the rules of conduct governing industrial relations between citizens or subjects of a civilized state are equally applicable as between enlightened nations. The considerations that international law is without a court for its enforcement and that obedience to its commands practically depends upon good faith instead of upon the mandate of a superior tribunal only give additional sanction to the law itself and brand any deliberate infraction of it not merely as a wrong, but as a disgrace. A man of true honor protects the unwritten word which binds his conscience more scrupulously, if possible, than he does the bond a breach of which subjects him to legal liabilities, and the United States, in aiming to maintain itself as one of the most enlightened nations, would do its citizens gross injustice if it applied to its international relations any other than a high standard of honor and morality. On that ground the United States can not properly be put in the position of countenancing a wrong after its commission any more than in that of consenting to it in advance.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to observe, with respect to that message, that President Cleveland sent a commission to Hawaii. Afterwards the Hawaiian Republic was recognized. After recognition, and after the people of Hawaii became the voice of Hawaii, Hawaii was annexed, not by treaty, because it was impossible to obtain the constitutional ratification of a treaty by this body, but was annexed by a joint resolution adopted by a majority in each House of Congress. Why? It was at a time when Admiral Dewey's fleet was hard pressed in Manila Bay. When the people of Hawaii came to the United States they came as petitioners, exercising the freedom of petition, not by force of arms, not at the point of the bayonet, but as men and women desiring to associate themselves with the American Republic.

I want to say, Mr. President, to my colleagues, that subjects that are forced never can become good citizens, but when other people who freely petition without coercion, without inducements other than the fundamentals of our Government, equal to the inducements to every citizen of the United States, come into association with America, then you have happy and satisfied subjects, if you choose to call such people subjects.

I desire to insert in the RECORD, without reading, in the course of my remarks at this place the conception of this doctrine of fairness and justice as understood by one of the greatest authorities on international questions, the former Minister of Foreign Relations of Argentina, Drago. On the occasion of the Venezuelan question that arose in connection with Great Britain, Italy, and Germany, he set forth the South American view in a memorandum addressed to the Argentine minister at Washington. That memorandum is worthy of consideration; and I ask unanimous consent to incorporate it in the course of my remarks at this place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

I have received your excellency's telegram of the 20th instant concerning the events that have lately taken place between the Government of the Republic of Venezuela and the Governments of Great Britain and Germany. According to your excellency's information, the origin of the disagreement is, in part, the damages suffered by subjects of the claimant nations during the revolutions and wars that have recently occurred within the borders of the Republic mentioned, and in part also the fact that certain payments on the external debt of the nation have not been met at the proper time.

Leaving out of consideration the first class of claims, the adequate adjustment of which it would be necessary to consult the laws of the several countries, this Government has deemed it expedient to transmit to your excellency some considerations with reference to the forcible collection of the public debt suggested by the events that have taken place.

At the outset it is to be noted in this connection that the capitalist who lends his money to a foreign state always takes into account the resources of the country and the probability, greater or less, that the obligations contracted will be fulfilled without delay.

All governments thus enjoy different credit according to their degree of civilization and culture and their conduct in business transactions; and these conditions are measured and weighed before making any loan, the terms being made more or less onerous in accordance with the precise data concerning them which bankers always have on record.

In the first place the lender knows that he is entering into a contract with a sovereign entity, and it is an inherent qualification of all sovereignty that no proceedings for the execution of a judgment may be instituted or carried out against it, since this manner of collection would compromise its very existence and cause the independence and freedom of action of the respective government to disappear.

Among the fundamental principles of public international law which humanity has consecrated, one of the most precious is that which decrees that all states, whatever be the force at their disposal, are entities in law, perfectly equal one to another, and mutually entitled by virtue thereof to the same consideration and respect.

The acknowledgment of the debt, the payment of it in its entirety, can and must be made by the nation without diminution of its inherent rights as a sovereign entity, but the summary and immediate collection at a given moment, by means of force, would occasion nothing less than the ruin of the weakest nations and the absorption of their governments, together with all the functions inherent in them, by the mighty of the earth. The principles proclaimed on this continent of America are otherwise. "Contracts between a nation and private individuals are obligatory according to the conscience of the sovereign, and may not be the object of compelling force," said the illustrious Hamilton. "They confer no right of action contrary to the sovereign will."

The United States has gone very far in this direction. The eleventh amendment to its Constitution provided in effect, with the unanimous assent of the people, that the judicial power of the Nation should not be extended to any suit in law or equity prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state. The Argentine Government has made its Provinces indictable, and has even adopted the principle that the nation itself may be brought to trial before the supreme court on contracts which it enters into with individuals.

What has not been established, what could in no wise be admitted, is that, once the amount for which it may be indebted has been determined by legal judgment, it should be deprived of the right to choose the manner and the time of payment, in which it has as much interest as the creditor himself, or more, since its credit and its national honor are involved therein.

This is in no wise a defense for bad faith, disorder, and deliberate and voluntary insolvency. It is intended merely to preserve the dignity of the public international entity which may not thus be dragged into war with detriment to those high ends which determine the existence and liberty of nations.

The fact that collection can not be accomplished by means of violence does not, on the other hand, render valueless the acknowledgment of the public debt, the definite obligation of paying it.

The state continues to exist in its capacity as such, and sooner or later the gloomy situations are cleared up, resources increase, common aspirations of equity and justice prevail, and the most neglected promises are kept.

The decision, then, which declares the obligation to pay a debt, whether it be given by the tribunals of the country or by those of international arbitration, which manifest the abiding zeal for justice as the basis of the political relations of nations, constitutes an indisputable title which can not be compared to the uncertain right of one whose claims are not recognized and who sees himself driven to appeal to force in order that they may be satisfied.

As these are the sentiments of justice, loyalty, and honor which animate the Argentine people and have always inspired its policy, your excellency will understand that it has felt alarmed at the knowledge that the failure of Venezuela to meet the payments of its public debt is given as one of the determining causes of the capture of its fleet, the bombardment of one of its ports, and the establishment of a rigorous blockade along its shores. If such proceedings were to be definitely adopted they would establish a precedent dangerous to the security and the peace of the nations of this part of America.

The collection of loans by military means implies territorial occupation to make them effective, and territorial occupation signifies the suppression or subordination of the government of the countries on which it is imposed.

Such a situation seems obviously at variance with the principles many times proclaimed by the nations of America, and particularly with the Monroe doctrine, sustained and defended with so much zeal on all occasions by the United States, a doctrine to which the Argentine Republic has heretofore solemnly adhered.

Among the principles which the memorable message of December 2, 1823, enunciates, there are two great declarations which particularly refer to these Republics, viz, "The American continents are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for colonization by any European powers," and "* * * with the governments * * * whose independence we have * * * acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

The right to forbid new colonial dominions within the limits of this continent has been many times admitted by the public men of England. To her sympathy is due, it may be said, the great success which the Monroe doctrine achieved immediately on its publication. But in very recent times there has been observed a marked tendency among the publicists and in the various expressions of European opinion to call attention to these countries as a suitable field for future territorial expansion. Thinkers of the highest order have pointed out the desirability of turning in this direction the great efforts which the principal powers of Europe have exerted for the conquest of sterile regions with trying climates and in remote regions of the earth. The European writers are already many who point to the territory of South America, with its great riches, its sunny sky, and its climate propitious for all products, as, of necessity, the stage on which the great powers who have their arms and implements of conquest already prepared are to struggle for the supremacy in the course of this century.

The human tendency to expansion, thus inflamed by the suggestions of public opinion and the press, may, at any moment, take an aggressive direction, even against the will of the present governing classes. And it will not be denied that the simplest way to the setting aside and easy ejectment of the rightful authorities by European governments is just this way of financial interventions—as might be shown by many examples. We in nowise pretend that the South American nations are, from any point of view, exempt from the responsibilities of all sorts which violations of international law impose on civilized people. We do not nor can we pretend that these countries occupy an exceptional position in their relations with European powers, which have the indubitable right to protect their subjects as completely as in any other part of the world against the persecutions and injustices of which they may be the victims.

The only principle which the Argentine Republic maintains and which it would with great satisfaction see adopted, in view of the events in Venezuela, by a nation that enjoys such great authority and prestige as does the United States, is the principle already accepted, that there can be no territorial expansion in America on the part of Europe, nor any oppression of the peoples of this continent, because an unfortunate financial situation may compel some one of them to postpone the fulfillment of its promises. In a word, the principle which she would like to see recognized is that the public debt can not occasion armed intervention nor even the actual occupation of the territory of American nations by a European power.

The loss of prestige and credit experienced by states which fail to satisfy the rightful claims of their lawful creditors brings with it difficulties of such magnitude as to render it unnecessary for foreign intervention to aggravate with its oppression the temporary misfortunes of insolvency.

The Argentine Government could cite its own example to demonstrate the needlessness of armed intervention in these cases.

The payment of the English debt of 1824 was spontaneously resumed by her after an interruption of 30 years, occasioned by the anarchy and the disturbances which seriously affected the country during this period, and all the back payments and all the interest payments were scrupulously made without any steps to this end having been taken by the creditors.

Later on a series of financial happenings and reverses completely beyond the control of her authorities compelled her for the moment to suspend the payment of the foreign debt. She had, however, the firm and fixed intention of resuming the payments as soon as circumstances should permit, and she did so actually some time afterwards, at the cost of great sacrifices, but of her own free will and without the interference or the threats of any foreign power. And it has been because of her perfectly scrupulous, regular, and honest proceedings, because of her high sentiment of equity and justice so fully demonstrated, that the difficulties undergone, instead of diminishing, have increased her credit in the markets of Europe. It may be affirmed with entire certainty that so flattering a result would not have been obtained had the creditors deemed it expedient to intervene with violence at the critical financial period, which was thus passed through successfully. We do not, nor can we, fear that such circumstances will be repeated.

At this time, then, no selfish feeling animates us, nor do we seek our own advantage in manifesting our desire that the public debt of states should not serve as a reason for an armed attack on such states. Quite as little do we harbor any sentiment of hostility with regard to the nations of Europe. On the contrary, we have maintained with all of them since our emancipation the most friendly relations, especially with England, to whom we have recently given the best proof of the confidence which her justice and equanimity inspire in us by intrusting to her decision the most important of our international questions, which she has just decided fixing our limits with Chile after a controversy of more than 70 years.

We know that where England goes civilization accompanies her, and the benefits of political and civil liberty are extended. Therefore we esteem her, but this does not mean that we should adhere with equal sympathy to her policy in the improbable case of her attempting to oppress the nationalities of this continent which are struggling for their own progress, which have already overcome the greatest difficulties and will surely triumph—to the honor of democratic institutions. Long, perhaps, is the road that the South American nations still have to travel. But they have faith enough and energy and worth sufficient to bring them to their final development with mutual support.

And it is because of this sentiment of continental brotherhood and because of the force which is always derived from the moral support of a whole people that I address you, in pursuance of instructions from His Excellency the President of the Republic, that you may communicate to the Government of the United States our point of view regarding the events in the further development of which that Government is to take so important a part, in order that it may have it in mind as the sincere expression of the sentiments of a nation that has faith in its destiny and in that of this whole continent, at whose head march the United States, realizing our ideals and affording us examples.

Mr. BLAINE. Secretary of State John Hay sent to the minister of Argentina, in reply to Drago's communication of December 29, 1902, a memorandum in which he stated, without expressing assent to or dissent from the propositions set forth in the note of the Argentine Minister of Foreign Relations, the general position of the Government of the United States. Secretary Hay concluded his memorandum in these words; and I ask unanimous consent that they be inserted in the RECORD in the course of my remarks at this place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Advocating and adhering in practice in questions concerning itself to the resort of international arbitration in settlement of controversies not adjustable by the orderly treatment of diplomatic negotiations, the Government of the United States would always be glad to see the questions of the justice of claims by one state against another growing out of individual wrongs or national obligations, as well as the guarantees for the execution of whatever award may be made, left to the decision of an impartial arbitral tribunal before which the litigant nations, weak and strong alike, may stand as equals in the eye of international law and mutual duty.

Mr. BLAINE. President Wilson, in language at least, assented to the doctrine of inherent justice and fairness that the strong should not ride down the weak.

Mr. President, I desire also to insert in the RECORD excerpts from the messages and papers of President Wilson at this place in the course of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows;

The Department of State at Washington is constantly called upon to back up the commercial enterprises and the industrial enterprises of the United States in foreign countries, and it at one time went so far in that direction that all its diplomacy came to be designated as "dollar diplomacy." It was called upon to support every man who wanted to earn anything anywhere if he was an American. * * * If American enterprise in foreign countries, particularly in those foreign countries which are not strong enough to resist us, takes the shape of imposing upon and exploiting the mass of the people of that country, it ought to be checked and not encouraged. I am willing to get anything for an American that money and enterprise can obtain except the suppression of the rights of other men. I will not help any man buy a power which he ought not to exercise over his fellow beings.

* * * I hold it as a fundamental principle, and so do you, that every people has the right to determine its own form of government; and until this recent revolution in Mexico, until the end of the Diaz reign, 80 per cent of the people in Mexico never had a "look in" in determining who should be their governors or what their government should be. Now, I am for the 80 per cent. It is none of my business and it is none of your business how long they take in determining it.

* * * Do you suppose that the American people are ever going to count a small amount of material benefit and advantage to people doing business in Mexico against the liberties and the permanent happiness of the Mexican people? Have not European nations taken as long as they wanted and spilt as much blood as they pleased in settling their affairs, and shall we deny that to Mexico because she is weak?

* * * This was our guiding principle; that property rights can be vindicated by claims for damages, and no modern nation can decline to arbitrate such claims; but the fundamental rights of humanity can not be.

Mr. BLAINE. Before the Southern Commercial Congress in 1913 President Wilson said:

You hear of "concessions" to foreign capitalists in Latin America. You do not hear of concessions to foreign capitalists in the United States. They are not granted concessions. They are invited to make investments. The work is ours, though they are welcome to invest in it. We do not ask them to supply the capital and do the work. It is an invitation, not a privilege, and the States that are obliged, because their territory does not lie within the main field of modern enterprise and action, to grant concessions are in this condition, that foreign interests are apt to dominate their domestic affairs—a condition of affairs always dangerous and apt to become intolerable. * * * They [the Latin American states] have had harder bargains driven with them in the matter of loans than any other people in the world. Interest has been exacted of them that was not exacted of anybody else, because the risk was said to be greater, and then securities were taken that destroyed the risk—an admirable arrangement for those who were forcing the terms.

* * * Human rights, national integrity, and opportunity as against material interests—that is the issue which we now have to face. I want to take this occasion to say that the United States will never again seek one additional foot of territory by conquest. She will devote herself to showing that she knows how to make honorable and fruitful use of the territory she has, and she must regard it as one of the duties of friendship to see that from no quarter are material interests made superior to human liberty and national opportunity.

If it were not drawing so close to 3 o'clock, when the Senate goes into executive session, as I understand, it would be worth while to read the messages of President Wilson where he outlines most eloquently and most patriotically the position of America for over a century, as I have endeavored to interpret that history, though he failed in practice to observe our traditional policy in his treatment of Haiti. I will not discuss that failure at this time. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] this afternoon portrayed the consequences that flow from the acts of tyranny that have prevailed in Haiti and in San Domingo for these many years.

Turning to a later President, I find in a campaign speech at Marion, Ohio, in August, 1920, that Mr. Harding declared:

> If I should be elected President * * * I will not empower an Assistant Secretary of the Navy to draft a constitution for helpless neighbors in the West Indies and jam it down their throats at the points of bayonets borne by United States marines, nor will I misuse the power of the Executive to cover with the veil of secrecy repeated acts of unwarranted interference in the domestic affairs of the little republics of the Western Hemisphere, such as in the last few years have not only made enemies of those who should be our friends, but have rightfully discredited our country as their trusted neighbors.

Encouraged by this pronouncement, the President of Haiti asked for the withdrawal of the American marines and for the return of effective control of their country to the elected Haitian officials. The policy of the Harding administration, however, once in power, pursued substantially the policy of the Wilson administration.

The voice and the hands do not square.

> The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau.

The present administration has consistently parroted its predecessor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. For a question.

Mr. KING. I might say that quite recently, acting under the authority of the United States, in Haiti the shreds of the constitution which were left were destroyed; the courts have been made the mere tools of those in authority, and there is less liberty enjoyed by the people now than ever before.

Mr. BLAINE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BLAINE. If it is a very short one, Mr. President, and does not involve a long discussion.

Mr. BINGHAM. In view of what the Senator has just said about the present administration, what does he think about our action in San Domingo under this administration?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not expect to conclude my remarks this afternoon, as there are but a few moments left. The very question which the Senator from Connecticut has asked will be answered in the course of my remarks as they may be given in the future. I will, indeed, very gladly answer the Senator definitely and specifically. This afternoon, at this time, it is utterly impossible to review the acts of imperialism, they are so many, and they are so involved, and they involve more than imperialism by the Government alone. They involve not only imperialism by the Government acting through our temporary rulers, but also the imperialism of the dollar, as deadly, as stifling, as paralyzing, as is the imperialism of a government acting through force of arms, and sometimes more effective.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I shall discuss that question, and I shall discuss specifically the imperialism, financial and governmental, that has taken place in 14 of the 20 southern Republics. History is fertile with the facts in support of that charge.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator consider our action in getting out of Santo Domingo and handing them back their government an act of imperialism?

Mr. BLAINE. We are not out; far from it; and I shall endeavor to demonstrate that in connection with my remarks upon the specific question of imperialism as it relates to 14 southern Republics.

In the abandonment of right and international morality force has been substituted—force against weaker and smaller nations, threatened force in the collection of debts bearing usurious and unconscionable interest, intervention to protect concessions by foreign governments, and actual force by the American Government.

Why is there one rule for small and weaker governments and another rule for a strong government? What nation of the world is landing armies in Russia? What nation has dared to send a battleship against the Russian Government? What nation has called to arms its armies and navies against the eastern giant? Are American property and American rights less sacred in Russia than in Nicaragua, in Haiti, in Venezuela, in Santo Domingo, or in any other southern neighbor? Yet Russia has repudiated all obligations held by Americans, has confiscated all the property of American nationals, and what Russia has done to America she has done to the other nations of the world.

Why has not the modern system of international immorality sent to Russia its armies, its navies, its airplanes, to demand the return of property in the fulfillment of obligations to the citizens of other countries? Ah, sirs, the answer is plain. Force! Force defies the stronger nations. Force beats back the stronger nations. Force commands the weaker nations.

Force subjugates the weaker nations, and that is the international immorality condemned by all the Presidents of the United States who believed in America, her traditions, her history, by all who hoped for her future.

Mr. President, those Presidents held as a sacred trust the destiny of America. That destiny, according to their conception, was to be one of peace, one of justice, one of equity. After all, the foundation of it all is that the strong, whether an individual or a nation, has no right to beat down the weak. That is the doctrine, as enunciated by President Monroe. It means nothing more nor less than a doctrine of self-preservation, self-preservation for America, preservation of the sovereignty and the independence of free governments in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. President, there are but five minutes left, and there may be some other matters to come before the Senate, and I shall yield at this point, giving notice that upon the convening of the Senate, at an appropriate time, I shall undertake to discuss specifically the imperialism that has been enforced upon our southern neighbors, an imperialism of the dollar, and that imperialism is not and has not been the voice of America, it has been the voice of those who have hauled down the emblem of purity, justice, and truth and in its place have hoisted the black flag, the flag of piracy—the emblem of individual authority.

[At this point Mr. BLAINE yielded the floor for the day.]

Friday, February 3, 1928

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the other day in a colloquy with the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE]—and I am sorry he is not in attendance this morning—in connection with President Cleveland's message demanding the return from the Senate of the treaty for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands on the ground that the treaty had been obtained through force and coercion, the Senator from California stated that Cleveland hauled down the American flag and that I would do so also.

Mr. President, when President Cleveland hoisted the American flag he raised it in honor and not in dishonor. As for myself, I shall raise my voice against the use of the American flag to shield the scoundrel or glorify the tyrant. That is my answer to the suggestion of the distinguished and physically towering Senator from California.

Yesterday I had proceeded in a general way to outline the traditional history of America as declared by the Presidents of the United States who thought in terms of America and the future security of our Government and sought to maintain the character that America should possess. I pointed briefly to the imperialistic voyage upon which we are now embarked through the maladministration, the misinterpretation, and the misconstruction of the fundamentals of the Monroe doctrine. This morning, sirs, it is proper to inquire wherein has America been imperialistic. The apologists for the philosophy of might and evil will deny our imperialistic sway in beautifully spun phrases, impassioned appeals against "rebels" and "bandits," without whom America would not have been the free Republic she is to-day, with ferocious denunciation of "anarchy," under the pretense of noble sentiments, it will be asserted that the rod with which we smite our southern neighbors will do them good; that America, with her vaunted claim to holiness, must impose her will, her customs, and her standards upon weaker peoples.

Let us turn to Cuba. With our naval base there, with our marines sometimes found in the interior of that country, and with the threat of the sword held over the Cuban people, Cuba is deprived of her full right of sovereignty. Ah, but you may say Cuba entered into a treaty granting to America the right to limit and to subjugate Cuban sovereignty and to control the political and financial policy and destiny of that land through absentee landlords and American bankers. When Cuba submitted to that degradation she was incompetent and impotent to defend herself. No less authority than Dr. Charles Wilson Hackett, professor of Latin-American history in the University of Texas, in an article in Current History in September, 1927, said—and this gives the attitude of the Cuban people to-day—

* * * the strength of nationalist and anti-American sentiment in the island was recognized by President Machado in May of this year [that is, 1927] when he admitted that on his recent visit to the United States he had proposed to the United States Government that there should be a further severance of the bonds that bind Cuba to the United States.

America is exercising a mandate over the "Pearl of the Antilles."

Imperialism: Turn to Haiti, where officers of the army and navy, backed by an American Army, govern or allegedly protect the Haitians; where an American financial adviser dictates the finances and permits loans with United States Government guaranties and where the Haitian Government was set up by force of American arms, and the Haitian constitution written by the personnel of the war-making power of America, and the adoption of that constitution ratified at an election which, if held in America under like circumstances, would be declared null and void. There was no free ballot. The polling places were in charge of American marines. That which is guaranteed to every community in the United States in the holding of free elections was denied to the Haitians. The constitution imposed upon the Haitian people denied them guaranties compatible with a free government and a free people, and its provisions were made satisfactory to American exploiters.

The presence of armed forces carried its tyranny to such excesses as to deny to an honorable and distinguished Member of this body the right of freedom of passage through that territory—his way barricaded and before him the rattle of the sabre and the menacing muzzle of the gun. Such are the consequences that flow from tyranny.

There is just one step further to be taken by the administration when tyranny will be the rule in America and when citizens of this free Republic will be denied free passage and access to every part of the United States. It takes no stretch of the imagination, if this sort of thing is to be passed by without protest, to visualize a time when we here in America may well find ourselves under the yoke of a despotism and a tryanny unequaled by the czarism of Russia.

Go to San Domingo, if you please, where an army was landed, the President of the Republic dismissed, and its Congress dissolved, and where for years the military power of an alien government administered its affairs by military decrees, enforced by a military government supported by some 2,500 marines. Of course, San Domingo may be given back her sovereignty, her independence. Under what circumstances? Providing she ratify the military misrule and allow America to collect her customs and control the finances of her country.

I was asked by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] yesterday if I approved of the act of the present administration in withdrawing from San Domingo. I do approve of the withdrawal of the marines, but America is not yet out of San Domingo by any means. I quote again from Doctor Hackett, of the University of Texas, as my authority:

In 1924, after the Dominican Government had agreed—

Note the terms imposed upon that weak people—to ratify all the financial acts of the American military administration and to sign a new treaty—

A new treaty negotiated in order for her to gain some semblance of sovereignty—providing for the collection and disbursement of Dominican revenues by a United States receiver general until all loans, including a new one—

The administration got out of San Domingo? No. It got in deeper with its dollar diplomacy—not to exceed a total of $25,000,000 shall have been paid—

The United States marines were withdrawn.

But, sirs, America is still in San Domingo with a power as great as the power of force, and that is a strangle hold upon the finances of San Domingo. Let any nation have a strangle hold upon the finances of another country and that country is subjugated to the will and, perchance, to the whim of the nation which holds such strangle hold through loans, sometimes, if you please, forced upon weaker peoples.

Panama was organized by a coup d'état, engineered from the Capitol at Washington in the name of expediency.

Pass on to Nicaragua, where America has maintained an Army of some sort for the last 15 or 16 years, established a government opposed by two-thirds of the Nicaraguan people themselves, a government administered favorably to American private interests, with the approval of the State Department, collecting the customs, owning the national bank and the railroad, and exercising complete control with imperialism at its worst.

Some of us protested when the French nation sent airplanes with death-dealing bombs to murder and kill the hill people in northern Africa. Yet from this Capital, the citadel of our Government, orders have gone forth to send airplanes to fly over the helpless people of Nicaragua with bombs to destroy innocent noncombatants.

Mr. President, if this were the year 1868 the Senate would ring with a protest from one of the most distinguished Americans who ever was privileged to occupy a seat in this body, a protest against this "dance of blood," as Senator Sumner then referred to another incident of this character.

In Honduras the imperialism practiced consists of the acts of an American minister and two American corporations which constitute the dominating and controlling powers, sometimes assisted by marines, under the alleged claim of protection of American life and property—yes, protecting the very instrumentalities that are there for one purpose, and that is material exploitation.

What imperialism except the imperialism of Great Britain is to be compared with that now imposed on the six Republics, with the military forces to sustain alien economic and financial control?

But imperialism sometimes goes where the Army does not go. Financial imperialism denies sovereignty and destroys liberty and defeats justice quite as effectually as imperialism by the sword.

Salvador borrowed money from American bankers at the extortionate rate of 8 per cent, plus some other and extra charges, guaranteed by the customs receipts of the country, collected by the bankers; and the Secretary of State has submitted to an agreement with the bankers that when differences arise between the sovereignty of Salvador and those bankers, the question must be referred to the Chief Justice of the United States, whose decision will be final—perhaps final, but, under the modern diplomatic policy, not final until the sword has been unsheathed as the means to force payment of the debt. So they have attached the Supreme Court of the United States to this chariot of imperial despotism.

Then comes the ugly story in connection with Colombia. Having despoiled her of her territory, we flaunted our gold before her, and compounded an offense against her by settling upon her $25,000,000 balm money in payment of a wrong and in the acknowledgment of a wrong. We supervise even the expenditure of the money we have paid Colombia in compromise for the despoliation of her territory.

Less intimately connected with our Government, the financial imperialism has extended to Ecuador, and an American financial adviser has been engaged, and to Peru likewise, with an American financial adviser directing the fiscal policy of the Government, where a loan is pending or has been recently consummated by American bankers, guaranteed by the customs receipts of that sovereignty, and collected by aliens, backed by the new policy of the State Department in the supervision of foreign loans.

Bolivia, weak financially, borrows $24,000,000 under the jurisdiction of a commission of American bankers, which loan is guaranteed by all of the country's customs, the stock of the Government bank, the property of the Government railroad, and all the internal revenues of the country, if alien bankers so determine. When they make that determination, then America must, in aid of those American bankers, force compliance with the mandate of private institutions. Thus, a complete financial imperialism has driven a hard bargain with this southern Republic, so hard and so fast that alien interests may dictate Bolivia's policies, economic and financial, and that dictatorship under the new policy of our State Department.

Thus over another five countries to our south the sword of a financial Damocles hangs; and if circumstances become such that there will be default in the payment of interest or principal, then the American imperial policy of force will be brought into play and American sons will be called to foreign lands to give their blood and their lives to collect dollars for the American Shylocks.

Guatemala and Costa Rica are not without experience or without knowledge of "dollar imperialism." They likewise will feel the heavy hand of armed forces should the god of fortune cease to shine favorably upon those sun-kissed neighbors of the south.

And Mexico, the most immediate and perhaps the most promising for an American financial debauch, where a third of the nation's wealth, nearly three-fourths of the oil lands, and 54,000,000 acres of her fertile soil, an area as large as France, Spain, Portugal, and Switzerland, are in the control of foreign and alien interests, with the consent of the American Government, and, if necessary to carry out the exploitation of those who would devastate Mexico, with the backing of the American Army.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BLAINE. I will suggest to the Senator from California in all good nature that I sat at his feet when he gave that splendid advice not to be interrupted during the course of remarks.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am about to leave the Chamber. Will the Senator permit me to ask one question?

Mr. BLAINE. I wish the Senator from California to know that he is a splendid preceptor, and he has influenced me to such an extent that I am sorry I can not yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I should like to ask one question, and the Senator can answer it in a few words.

Mr. BLAINE. I will give the opportunity, when I close, for any Senator to ask any question upon any matter which I have discussed or failed to discuss in connection with this subject. I will be very generous about it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. But I know the Senator would be glad if I asked this question.

Mr. BLAINE. My generosity, I assure the Senator, will exceed his demands.

We find 14 out of 20 of the Latin-American Republics to the south under the financial or military domination of alien people and alien governments, victims of the orgy of imperialism.

I do not want the proof in support of the statement of these conditions to rest upon my feeble efforts. I ask the Senate to bear with me for I know that long quotations are sometimes tedious. I hold in my hand an article written by Samuel Guy Inman. He has been instructor of international law at Columbia University, instructor at the Union Theological Seminary at Chicago; he has been connected with the Federal Council of Churches in America; secretary of the Board for Christian Work in San Domingo; and is secretary of the Commission for Cooperation in Latin America; and I submit that his experience and his broad knowledge of the affairs to the south of us are worth our consideration.

He says, in an article in the Atlantic Monthly of July, 1924:

In these smaller countries of the south, controlled by our soldiers, our bankers, and our oil kings, we are developing our Irelands, our Egypts, and our Indias. So far they are weak and we have been able to hide them from others. But at the rate the world is moving they can hardly be expected to remain always powerless and isolated. Our North American Christian civilization will find its final test in the way we treat our next-door neighbors. We are piling up hatreds, suspicions, records for exploitation and destruction of sovereignty in Latin America, such as have never failed in all history to react in war, suffering, and defeat of high moral and spiritual ideals.

To quote further from this able author as a recapitulation of what I have indicated with respect to both military and financial imperialism on the part of the State Department and the administration at Washington:

Out of the 20 Latin American Republics 11 of them now have their financial policies directed by North Americans officially appointed. Six of these 10 have the financial agents backed by American military forces on the ground. (This includes Cuba, which has no official financial adviser; but General Crowder has so acted during recent financial readjustments.) Four of the remaining half of these southern countries have their economic and fiscal life closely tied to the United States through large loans and concessions, giving special advantages to American capitalists.

This leaves the six countries of Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Paraguay, and Venezuela as the only ones outside the circle of North American financial control. While Americans have recently made large loans or secured extensive concessions from these last-named countries, they have, so far as the author knows, not yet acquired such a preponderant influence as to dictate their fiscal policies. But these six countries—

He says, and he has observed their attitude on the ground—are trembling in their boots, wondering how long before the inevitable must arrive!

Along with this economic and military dominance goes a dominance in the internal affairs of Latin America. In the Caribbean countries especially, the word of the American minister is the most important factor for any government to consider. It is impossible for anyone who has not come into close contacts with these countries to realize how completely their governments are held in the hollow of the hand of the State Department at Washington. In fact the government officials of these countries are so far accustomed to doing Washington's will that the State Department frequently finds it necessary to refuse to do things related to internal order that native officials, often indebted to their big brother for their position, request it to do. This creates a strong inconsistency in the policy of the State Department from time to time. What one official refused to do as interference with internal order, another will do, and even the same official will judge differently at different times. At one time we allow a revolution, at another we forbid it. So it happens that, as with a fond parent who at one time will insist on making all decisions for his son, at another will throw him entirely on his own resources, at one time will pay the forged check, at another will let him go to jail, so it is with these little countries—pawns on the international chessboard, as Mr. Powers says—who never know what is to happen to them. Usually the State Department seems hesitant about making suggestions to one of these smaller governments concerning improvement in a national educational program, lest this be considered as interference in internal affairs. But it is always sure of the right to do anything that comes under the formula: "Protection of American lives and property."

The upbuilding of those people and those countries, through the aid and assistance of American educators, is denied, the subjugation of those people is compelled, by the State Department and the administration. I am not speaking of this administration alone; I am speaking of the foreign policy of this Government for the last 25 years. They demand by the sword, by the gun, when questions of finance are considered, when property belonging to American citizens is alleged to be jeopardized. Not so when it comes to the question of extending to those countries the beneficence of American educational institutions.

Since American lives seldom are in danger, American property naturally gets first place. In fact, it is only in countries where American property interests are paramount that this tutelage is employed.

Just another brief expression of the same author:

We have invited a number of Latin-American countries, as a special work of friendship, to send their officers to West Point for further training. Our Government has never sent an educational mission to Latin America, nor offered scholarships in her scientific or cultural institutions to Latin Americans where unofficial educational missions—like the one recently going to Peru—and official educational advisers, like the one that went to Nicaragua have met with difficulties, it has let them go down in defeat and withdraw in ignominy.

He concludes by painting a picture well worth America's observation. He says:

* * * * * * *

Altogether this is a dark picture. It is a severe indictment of our imperialism—an imperialism which the author believes has not been developed deliberately, but has stolen over us as a part of the materialistic spirit of the times. It is a departure from the ideals of our fathers. The North American visitor in the Caribbean these days, sensitive to those ideals, often blushes with shame and suffers the deepest humiliation on beholding sights enacted in the name of our fair America—acts which his fellow citizens at home would deem impossible. So one who has seen much of these things and has become alarmed at their rapid spread is constrained to risk all the penalties of plain speaking in order to challenge this un-American movement—un-American although some of the finest men one can meet have been caught up in its onrush. These men have often built good roads, established sanitary codes, and enforced peace. But these are not worth the surrender of American principles, the bowing before materialistic gods, the hatreds and the sacrifice of the spiritual, which the program involves. Even if such a program should help Latin America, the people of the United States can not go on destroying with impunity the sovereignty of other peoples, however weak, cutting across the principles for which our fathers fought, without the reaction being shown throughout our whole body politic.

Some day we shall realize that the whole rotten mess of investigation now being played with at Washington runs directly back to the mental attitudes and the combinations involved in the policy of "cleaning up" our next-door neighbors—a phrase which may seem to have moral significance to the average innocent citizen and official, but which, for the privileged few, takes on the more modern significance of "cleaning out." No one objects to legitimate business with our neighbors. On the contrary, it is vital to all concerned. But the continuance of this dollar diplomacy, with its combination of bonds and battleships, means the destruction of our Nation just as surely as it meant the destruction of Egypt and Rome and Spain * * * and all the other nations who came to measure their greatness by their material possessions rather than by their passion for justice and by the number of their friendly neighbors.

Mr. President, when I speak I speak for my country and her honor, I speak for her future and for the generations to come.

I know America is strong, I know she is powerful, I know that she can by force of arms conquer, subjugate, and annex the territories to our south and the lands to our north. Is there anyone who entertains such a doctrine or thought so contrary to the ideals of America? I hope not. I believe not. I think that this whole tendency to imperialism has grown out of the philosophy so frankly stated by President Taft. It is an imperialistic philosophy; its end can be nothing but the destruction of our Government and our institutions.

European imperialism has been denounced from the floor of the Senate. Presidents of the United States have issued warnings and ultimatums against European imperialism. Yes; we have gone to war to defeat imperialism elsewhere, and continents have been drenched in blood that imperialism might not engulf the world. Yet we have projected our far-flung battle lines into Central America, beyond and over South America, into China, with our indefensible extraterritorial policy, and over the islands of the sea, until to-day our modern American statesmen, having in their hands the destiny of our Nation, stand before the nations of the world as the monsters of imperialism.

The doctrine of inherent fairness and justice that I am discussing, and in which I believe, is not of my origin. I have given the sources from which such doctrine flows.

At this time I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD excerpts from an article in Foreign Affairs for January, 1927, written by Mr. Morrow, formerly of the firm of Morgan & Co., whose appointment by the President as America's ambassador to Mexico was recently confirmed by the Senate. I am not submitting this as evidence of the rectitude of the position taken by the Presidents to whom I have referred with approval, but it is advice, it is advice to the commercial interests of America, and I hope that they may heed it, so that those commercial interests may appreciate that this imperialism of the dollar, this dollar diplomacy, will not serve, by and large, the commercial interests of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Loans are made to foreign governments in reliance upon the capacity and the good faith of those governments. The intelligent investor recognizes that in the long run a government which defaults upon its obligations hurts itself even more than it hurts its creditors. Even in cases where specific taxes or customs are allocated for the service of a loan the main reliance of the creditor must be upon the desire of the debtor government to maintain the particular revenues and keep them available. Even when a foreign expert is placed in charge of revenues the arrangement is helpful only when made with the hearty concurrence of the debtor government and with the belief and expectation on the part of the debtor government that the fiscal arrangement will redound to its own advantage.

If the foregoing be true, how safe are these investments? To my mind that inquiry is much the same as an inquiry as to the safety of a domestic bond. Some domestic bonds turn out to be good and some turn out to be worthless. There is no reason to expect that it will be otherwise with foreign bonds. Those nations who are borrowing in America because they actually need the money for a constructive purpose, who have a solidarity of national feeling and a sense of the meaning and the value of national credit; who are not incurring obligations beyond what may fairly be considered their capacity to handle; all those nations may be expected to pay their debts. Here again the responsibility rests heavily upon the investment banker in recommending investments. The banker must never be lured, either by the desire for profit or by the desire for reputation, to recommend an investment which he does not believe to be good. But, fundamentally, the reliance of bankers and investors is upon the capacity and, above all, upon the good faith of the foreign government. The foreign government must be able to pay, and it must want to pay.

If it is true that it is upon good faith that lenders to foreign governments primarily rely, it is no less true that it is upon good faith that lenders rely in almost all of their domestic dealings. Of course, there is a sanction ultimately applicable to domestic contracts. The proper legal steps may be taken; the breach of the contract may be proved; and execution may be issued through the sheriff. But we do not put much reliance upon the help of a sheriff in enforcing contracts. We do not willingly deal with one upon whose property we expect to levy execution. When we need the sheriff to help collect a loan we recognize that our venture has turned out a failure. We are then simply trying to save some planks from a shipwreck. In the overwhelming majority of business transactions we rely upon the ability and the willingness of the debtor to pay. On no other principle could modern business be conducted.

There is no international sheriff. But there still remains our reliance upon good faith, our reliance upon that law which is older than statute law—the acknowledged custom of mankind. The credit of governments is not easily built up. It may easily be shattered. And it must never be forgotten that there are rules of conduct accepted by the silent approval of civilized man, the breach of which hurts the one committing the breach much more than the one against whom it is committed. If good faith can not be relied upon it is better that the loan be not made. The words with which Hugo Grotius closed his great book more than 300 years ago are true: "Not only is each commonwealth kept together by good faith, but that greater society of which nations are the members. If faith be taken away the intercourse of men is abolished."

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, if the commercial interests can not rely on the good faith of our southern neighbors, they have no moral right to come to this Government and ask American boys to make sacrifices to protect their so-called property rights in other countries.

At this point I want to quote from that distinguished statesman, James G. Blaine. He understood the traditional policy of America. He understood the obligations resting upon American citizens in other countries. He understood the obligations of citizens of another country in America. When that very unfortunate occurrence took place in New Orleans in connection with the Mafia, where a mob, it is alleged, murdered certain Italian citizens, America was faced with the very problem which I have been discussing. A note was sent to the American Government by the Italian representatives. Mr. Blaine was then Secretary of State. That was in April, 1891. Italy had entered into a treaty with America, in 1871. To that treaty Mr. Blaine refers. The treaty extends no additional rights. It merely embodies what were well recognized principles of international law. Mr. Blaine discussed the rights of subjects of other nations in America. In his answer to the Italian representative he referred to a declaration made by Mr. Webster to the Spanish minister of Webster's time. Webster said:

This Government supposes that the rights of the Spanish consul and public officers residing here under the protection of the United States Government are quite different from those of the Spanish subjects who have come into the country to mingle with our citizens and here to pursue their private business and objectives. The former may claim special indemnity, the latter are entitled to such protection as is afforded to our own citizens.

Mr. Blaine quoted that as an authority for what he later declared to be the policy of America. He said:

The United States did not by the treaty with Italy become the insurer of the lives or property of Italian subjects resident within our territory.

No more than the Government of the United States is the insurer of the lives and property of American subjects in any other country.

No government is able, however high its civilization, however vigilant its police supervision, however severe its criminal code, and however prompt and inflexible its criminal administration, to secure its own citizens against violence prompted by individual malice or by certain popular tumult. The foreign resident must be content in such cases to share the same redress that is offered by the law to the citizen; and has no just cause of complaint or right to ask the interposition of his country if the courts are equally open to him for the redress of his injuries.

Had the President of the United States read that message, we might have had some constructive suggestion by America placed before the Pan American Congress.

Continuing Mr. Blaine said:

The treaty in the first, second, third, and notably in the twenty-third articles clearly limits the rights guaranteed to the citizens of the contracting powers in the territory of each to equal treatment and to free access to the courts of justice.

Without that provision in the treaty such would have been the custom and the law amongst civilized nations. The treaty merely contained a recognition of what then and now is the law of nations.

Foreign residents are not made a favored class.

What is the case in South America? Every foreign resident, be he an American or an alien from some other government, is put into a favored class in those countries and is given special privileges not accorded to the citizens of the country to which those aliens go. That is not the doctrine that Blaine advanced in 1891.

It is not believed that Italy would desire a more stringent construction of her duty under the treaty. Where the injury inflicted upon a foreign resident is not the act of the government or its officers but of an individual or of a mob—

And, if you please, as in Nicaragua, of the so-called bandits—

it is believed that no claim for indemnity can justly be made unless it shall be made to appear that the public authorities charged with the peace of the community have connived in the unlawful act or, having timely notice of the threatened danger, have been guilty of such gross negligence in taking the necessary precautions as to amount to connivance.

And in such cases only did Blaine advocate that the President recommend to Congress their consideration of indemnity in those cases, not upon the proposition as a matter of right but, rather, as a friendly act, the act of a government such as we profess our Government to be.

This knowledge and these convictions have not rested with Americans alone. I will take up briefly the opinions of the ablest minds in the international world in support of such doctrine. Let me go beyond America and consult distant statesmen on this proposition. Lord Palmerston, the most imperialistic of British statesmen, in a circular in 1848 addressed to the British representatives in foreign states, did not go the full gamut of imperialism, as have our modern American rulers. I quote from his memorandum to the British representatives:

It has hitherto been thought by the successive Governments of Great Britain undesirable that British subjects should invest their capital in loans to foreign governments instead of employing it in profitable undertakings at home; and with a view to discourage hazardous loans to foreign governments, who may be either unable or unwilling to pay the stipulated interest thereon, the British Government has hitherto thought it the best policy to abstain from taking up as international questions the complaints made by British subjects against foreign governments which have failed to make good their engagements in regard to such pecuniary transactions.

For the British Government has considered that the losses of imprudent men, who have placed mistaken confidence in the good faith of foreign governments, would prove a salutary warning to others and would prevent any other foreign loans from being raised in Great Britain, except by governments of known good faith and ascertained solvency.

Mr. Balfour, Prime Minister, in the British Parliament in December, 1902, in a debate relating to the British controversy with America respecting Venezuela, said:

I do not deny, in fact I freely admit, that bondholders may occupy an international position which may require international action; but I look upon such action with the gravest doubt and suspicion, and I doubt whether we have in the past ever gone to war for the bondholders, for those of our countrymen who have lent money to a foreign government; and I confess that I should be very sorry to see that made a practice in this country.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, in discussing before the House of Commons the action of the British Government in Venezuela, said:

I venture to say that nothing could be more mischievous than that we should ever seem to accept the doctrine that when our countrymen invest in risky enterprises in foreign countries and default follows, it is a duty to rescue them. Every man who invests money in a country like Venezuela knows what he is doing. It would, I suppose, not be quite accurate to say that great risks always mean high dividends, but it is more nearly accurate if you put it the other way about—that high dividends generally involve great risks.

Our American banks, in order to receive their usurious rate of interest and high dividends, are willing to take those risks in the countries to the south of us only when the Government of the United States guarantees the payment of those risks by the force of arms used against those governments. He further says:

that if the whole power of the British Empire is to be put behind the investor, his risk vanishes and the dividends ought to be reduced accordingly.

(At this point Mr. BLAINE yielded to Mr. KING, who suggested the absence of a quorum, and the roll was called.)

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, it must therefore be observed that the imperialism of Great Britain at the beginning of this century was less marked than that expressed by American rulers in the last quarter of a century. Even among our imperialistic advocates there has been considerable floundering, both in expression and conduct. That has been clearly demonstrated in my remarks with reference to some of the Presidents of the United States; but other American administrators have floundered about on the all-important questions confronting America.

Between 1901 and 1907, when the second Hague Conference met, America's representatives changed their ground, and the American delegates advocated the principle that national debts should be ascertained and collected by some process of law and not by arbitrary force. I quote from the instructions of Mr. Elihu Root, then Secretary of State, to the American delegates to The Hague Conference in 1907. He said:

It has long been the established policy of the United States not to use its Army and Navy for the collection of ordinary contract debts due to its citizens by other governments. This Government has not considered the use of force for such a purpose consistent with that respect for the independent sovereignty of other members of the family of nations which is the most important principle of international law and the chief protection of weak nations against the oppression of the strong. It seems to us that the practice is injurious in its general effect upon the relation of nations and upon the welfare of weak and disordered States, whose development ought to be encouraged in the interests of civilization; that it offers frequent temptation to bullying and oppression and to unnecessary and unjustifiable warfare.

I wish that this administration might have heeded the instructions of Mr. Root as given to the American representatives at The Hague in 1907.

Secretary Root at Rio de Janeiro on July 31, 1906, incident to his visit to South America, in a public address said:

We deem the independence and equal rights of the smallest and weakest member of the family of nations entitled to as much respect as those of the greatest empire, and we deem the observance of that respect the chief guarantee of the weak against the oppression of the strong. We neither claim nor desire any rights or privileges or powers that we do not freely concede to every American Republic.

That was the traditional American doctrine until the last quarter of a century. Adherence to the traditional Monroe doctrine enunciated in the early years of the present century, lived only for a short period and consisted only of empty words. Yet Mr. Root expressed the true traditional policy of America that kept us at peace with the world for over a hundred years. He said:

The United States * * * ought to assert no rights against a small State because of its weakness which it would not assert against a great State, notwithstanding its power.

Mr. President, liberty and justice, which gave rise to America's birth, have been slaughtered in their own house, and the Declaration of Independence has been ravished by the modern diplomacy of the dollar.

Again and again either misguided or evil statecraft has engaged in conduct which Charles Sumner in his place in this Chamber so aptly described as the "dance of blood." Are we to continue this "drama of blood" against which Sumner rebelled?

I know commercial advantage may come to American business and industry by extending America's sway over our southern neighbors. To whom will that commercial advantage accrue? To the great majority of the industrial plants of America? Will it accrue to the large commercial interests of America or will it accrue only to a small group?

The advantages that come through this dollar diplomacy are limited to but a small group of industrial and commercial interests in America. This diplomacy gives no concern to the vast majority of our industrial organizations and our commercial enterprise. Moreover, this dollar diplomacy offers the opportunity for certain industrial development to be nurtured to our south by means of cheap labor, living under environments which ought not to be asked of American labor. Sirs, the whole trend of this dollar diplomacy is against the best interests both of our commercial and of our industrial development as a whole, and results only as a special benefit to those who have chosen to go to South America—and they are limited in number—only for the purpose of reaping greater dividends, instead of investing their money in constructive pursuits at home.

I know the people of America know that instead of cultivating friendships and good will in those southern Republics we have created for America, her business interests and her commerce and her industries, hatred—an unforgetting hatred.

President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard, said:

Some Americans, while professing a faith in the right of all peoples to independence and self-government, are really imperialists at heart. They believe in the right and manifest destiny of the United States to expand by overrunning its weaker neighbors. They appeal to a spirit of patriotism that sees no object, holds no ideals, and acknowledges no rights or duties but * * * aggrandizement.

And so American commerce and American industry will come to grief through this process of imperialism extended by our Government to the south.

America's modern commercial, financial, and military imperialism has destroyed the constructive, far-visioned purposes of Secretary of State Blaine, who laid a foundation for national friendliness and commercial development between America and our southern neighbors, upon which foundation, had we builded, America's commercial and industrial development would have expanded as our friendships increased. Instead, the tyranny of the dollar has alienated the friendship of our neighbors and driven their commercial business to other parts of the world, and as a result the end can be nothing other than grief for America's commercial and industrial interests.

But far worse than that is the denial of independence, of justice, of sovereignty to our weaker neighbors.

The repudiation of our American traditional policy means war, and war without the constitutional mandate of Congress. War in its simplest form is the use of violence and force against another nation. When a government's military or naval forces occupy the territory of another nation by force of arms, that is war. That is exactly the warfare in which we are engaged to-day.

America is not threatened by any nation in the Western Hemisphere. No assault has been made upon our coutnry by any of those nations. No violence has been committed by them upon America. They are all weak, some of them disordered. American blood is being spilled. The noncombatant natives in Nicaragua have been slaughtered. Why? To beat back any assault upon us? No. To inflict punishment for any indignity toward our Nation? No. Then, for what reason this war?

Our rulers have created a state of war to the south of us, and we are in that war. That war is in violation of international morality. The high esteem in which America was held by all our southern neighbors during Secretary Blaine's efforts to bring about a harmonious American union has gone. Instead of esteem for America there is fear of America. It is not the voice of America; it is the policeman's club, the gunman's weapons. It is under the banner of bonds and bullets that all the forces of privilege march and demand that our Government guarantee their questionable and usurious loans and unconscionable exploitation of weaker people, and that American sons shall give their lives to the "drama of blood."

The traditional history of America, the respect in which America should be held, her tremendous influence and power for world peace, demand strict adherence to the doctrine of inherent fairness and justice. Applying that doctrine, interpreted for a hundred years by practical construction, national and international morality demand that American citizens engaged in trade or commerce in foreign countries must obey the laws of such countries; that no American citizen has a right to jeopardize the peace and honor of his country for gain, for pleasure, for adventure.

Every rule of action demanded of an American citizen within his own country subjects his investments to the laws of the state or territory wherein they are made. The contract itself controls; and if an American citizen is imprudent in joining in such contract the responsibility is his alone.

In our relations with foreign governments all pecuniary and financial matters should be settled by arbitration. Armies and navies should not be called out to enforce the collection of a debt, nor should there be a recourse to arms or resort to force in any manner to gain or preserve for American citizens rights and privileges in any foreign country not enjoyed by the native citizens of such country.

The attempt by other governments to extend privileges and engage in conduct not permitted to the Government of the United States or its citizens is dangerous to our peace and safety. There should be no encroachment upon the rights of small nations and the equality of nations guaranteed by the conscience of international morality and rectitude. Any attempt in any manner to extend political sway, territorial occupancy, or expansion in this hemisphere should be regarded in no other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

Nothing short of these demands is a compliance with the Monroe doctrine, by its express terms and by practical construction for a hundred years, as shown by the Presidents of the United States who thought in terms of America, her peace and her independence.

Liberty and independence, justice and equality are the cornerstones upon which America was begun. They are the only cornerstones upon which we can build for an enduring peace. America can not deny to any nation, small or great, the replica of our foundation without damning the lives, the sacrifices, and the motives of a long line of patriots who designed this Republic.

To regain the character that America once possessed, and to cherish the national morality in which she had been clothed is the task before us.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have submitted, and there is upon the table, a concurrent resolution, and I ask at this time unanimous consent to take it from the table and have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SACKETT in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have undertaken these remarks, not for the purpose of criticizing the present administration, but because I should fail in my duty if I failed to recognize the recorded facts of history. It is not my condemnation of this administration; it is the condemnation as recorded in the history of our Government. I want to see a constructive program, not a destructive one. The concurrent resolution to which I have referred may not be the proper means of reestablishing the fundamental Americanism which I have discussed. I think it is; I think it does; I believe the resolution embodies the conception of America's national entity and international morality as conceived by Washington, Monroe, Fillmore, Cleveland, Secretary of State Blaine, yes, and by Wilson during the first years of his administration..

I do not know whether or not we should presently withdraw the marines from Nicaragua. I do not say we should not withdraw them now.

I do not know whether or not we can withdraw them presently. I do know, however, that we have blundered into that situation. The responsibility for that blundering must rest directly upon this administration, and probably it may be necessary for us to blunder along until the administration can blunder out of its mistake. Presently, Mr. President, I am willing to stand by, in the hope that the administration will find an early avenue of escape from its blunder, but I propose to do my duty to my country now and to the generations to come, to the end that never again will it be possible for a President to despoil America of her character.

I know an answer will be attempted by exalting and glorifying the marines in Nicaragua. The young men who constitute that force are in the uniform of their country. They are to obey the commands of their officers. Over and above the marines and their officers is the Commander in Chief, the President. He alone is responsible for their appearance.

Mr. President, some one has blundered. This situation in Nicaragua is America's Balaklava for those soldiers and those marines. It is not for them to reason why; it is for them to do or die, until the voice of America asserts once again in terms of international morality our adherence to the doctrine of inherent right and justice, that the strong have no right to ride down the weak.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama, Mr. BLACK.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the absence of so many Senators from the Chamber at the present time leads me to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, when the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McLean	Sheppard
Barkley	Fletcher	McMaster	Shipstead
Bayard	Frazier	McNary	Shortridge
Bingham	George	Mayfield	Smith
Black	Gerry	Metcalf	Smoot
Blaine	Gillett	Moses	Steck

Dill	King	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler
Edge	La Follette	Sackett	Willis
Ferris	McKellar	Schall

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire briefly to explain the purpose of the pending amendment. It is an amendment which reduces the amount the Shipping Board can pay for their counsel. I offer it in connection with another which I shall send to the desk as soon as this amendment is acted upon, which will reduce the general appropriation for the Shipping Board $150,000.

I offer the amendment for the reason that I find in the report of the hearings on the bill a rather peculiar situation with reference to the number of lawyers employed and the amount of compensation paid to them. It explains, in my judgment, in part, the repeated statement which has been made on the floor in the last few days of the great losses sustained by the Shipping Board, and is responsible in large part for those losses. I have some figures, and I shall be very brief, because I desire to explain the reason for offering the amendment and the one I am about to offer.

I find that in the year 1927, according to the hearings before the Appropriations Committee of the House, there were 48 lawyers employed by the Shipping Board. I find that the expenses of the legal department in 1926 were $404,080. I find that the salaries of the regular lawyers employed by the Shipping Board in 1927 amounted to $263,200, which does not include the stenographic expenses. I find that, in addition to that, there are a number of other lawyers employed specially, one of them being the assistant to one of the commissioners, who does not draw his salary from the legal department, another being an assistant to another commissioner, who does not draw his salary from the legal department.

I find that the work which these numerous lawyers have disposed of during one year is as follows—and I would like to have this heard, because I think it will be seen where a part of the losses of the Shipping Board come in:

It was reported to the committee that 602 cases were disposed of in New York, where there were 1,400 cases pending. An analysis of the report shows that 197 of the cases were disposed of by dismissal, which certainly required very slight services on the part of any lawyer.

One hundred and forty-seven were discontinued, which required very little service. Cases settled before and after trial were 258. That is the entire work done by the lawyers in New York so far as litigation was concerned. We find that for that work 16 lawyers were employed in New York at an expense of $88,600, not trying a single case through to completion. This is taken from the report made to the Appropriations Committee.

We find that in Washington there are a few cases tried before the Court of Claims, but the lawyers for the Shipping Board do not have charge of those trials. They are under the charge of the Attorney General, and the lawyers for the Shipping Board do not even supervise the trial of those cases. The total number of the attorneys in this city and in neighboring provinces was 180. They cost the Government for the settlement of the 180 cases, where the trials were held under the supervision of the Attorney General and not by the attorneys for the Shipping Board, the small sum of $149,000.

In addition to that we find there were special lawyers employed even where the Attorney General had charge of the trial. These special lawyers received $10,000 each. The number of those reported, though it is not claimed they are all, was three, drawing $30,000 during the year 1927. Further we find, under the report which the board made, that the lawyers for the Shipping Board have drawn $278,200 for the services they have performed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator wonder that I introduced an amendment to the bill providing $1,500,000 to take care of doctors?

Mr. BLACK. I am inclined to think from the way they are taking care of deserving lawyers that they might also take care of deserving doctors.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator speaks about deserving lawyers. He does not think they are deserving lawyers, does he?

Mr. BLACK. I imagine that they deserved the appointments for some special reason.

Mr. COPELAND. At least they got the appointments, did they not?

Mr. BLACK. They received them. We have then, for this $278,000 which they received, the settlement, not the trial, of 438 cases in all. Any lawyer who has had any experience knows that one firm of lawyers could have handled every one of those cases without any difficulty. So we have, as one of the reasons why the Shipping Board are losing money the fact that they are employing more people than they need, just as doubtless they are doing in the department to which the Senator from New York called attention a few days ago.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, it is fair to say in defense of the Shipping Board that the board is operating services out of many ports of our country, three out of the Pacific coast and a great many on the Gulf and other ports. I suppose included in the item of expense for lawyers are large sums of money used in the defense of cases in those local communities.

Mr. BLACK. This amount includes the defense and prosecution of every Shipping Board case in the United States of America.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator said a moment ago that this work could be undertaken by a very much smaller number of lawyers. I presume it would be very difficult for a lawyer to go out from the District of Columbia and try a case in Seattle. He would not be acquainted with the local procedure, perhaps, or with the ins and outs of legal methods in that particular locality. So I dare say that there is some justification for the expenditure of part of this money in remote parts of the country.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to inform the Senator about that. They have spent it in remote parts of the country for the employment of special lawyers, for instance, at Seattle and at other places; and they are not included in the regular list of 46 attorneys who are employed and drawing the regular salaries. The fact remains that the Government is paying out in that department, according to the report before the House committee, the sum of $278,000, when it is wholly and completely impossible for there to be any work which anywhere near justifies the expenditure of that sum. They could employ one firm of lawyers in Washington who would dispose of every case they have here, and one firm of lawyers in New York who could likewise dispose of every case they have there, because they only settled 238 cases and did not try a single one of those cases to completion.

I simply call attention to this with reference to the first amendment which I have offered, which is that no lawyer employed by the board shall receive more than $10,000. It is my understanding that these lawyers have received their appointments by reason of political pull, some of them being very closely related to those in power. It is also my information that others have secured their appointments by reason of their influence with certain Senators and Congressmen. The work is not there for them and can not be there for them. It is impossible for any man to take this report and determine that there is any reason for the employment of 47 lawyers to perform the duties which 5 reasonably good lawyers could have performed at a reasonable compensation.

One other amendment I have is that no lawyer for the Shipping Board shall receive more than $10,000 per year. One of them is now receiving $15,000. Unless the last Congress changed it, that is as much as a Cabinet officer receives. It is more than the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States received up to the last session of the Congress. It is more than any other Assistant Attorney General receives in America. According to the book which I have here showing the salaries paid last year, the highest paid Assistant Attorney General received $10,000; and yet this $15,000-a-year man for the Shipping Board does not even argue cases in the Supreme Court of the United States.

According to this report, they are argued by the Solicitor General, who receives a $10,000 salary and who has charge of that part of the procedure. They do not turn those cases over to the $15,000 lawyer, who is one of the 47 lawyers disposing of 239 cases in 12 months.

That is the situation which exists. So far as any special or peculiar qualifications which would place this particular attorney head and shoulders over Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, who receives only half that much, over Mr. Donovan, who receives two-thirds of that amount, or over the other Assistant Attorneys General, I do not know what they are. It might be there has been a raise in salary of those Assistant Attorneys General, but according to the book which was brought to my desk, one of them receives $7,500 and one of them receives $10,000. What is it that creates such greatness in this particular lawyer that he should have a salary equal to that which Cabinet officers have been receiving and more than that which judges of the Supreme Court have been receiving, when the records show that he did not try to completion a single case in 1927? What is it that entitles this particular board to do this unless it be—and I call attention of those here who voted for the Jones shipping bill—that one of the most insistent objections raised to it is the fact that it is costing more than the people get out of it? Why is it? This is one of the reasons. Is it the desire that this department be filled up with people who are not needed in order that the Government operation of the Shipping Board for a time may be discredited? Is that the reason? Or is it merely because there are some deserving political associates who desire positions?

The fact remains that whatever answer is given, certainly prima facie it is not proper for the Shipping Board to have 47 lawyers to perform what 5 reasonably good lawyers should perform any day in any year in all the history of the country. For that reason I have offered the first amendment providing that the pay of attorneys be limited to $10,000. The next amendment I will offer is that we reduce the allowance to the Shipping Board for lawyers $150,000 per year, and if they will half try they can get four lawyers every time they need one for the appropriation which is then left.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I had the privilege of listening to the larger portion of the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] this morning. On portions of it I would like to comment, but I have taken the floor at this time not for that purpose, but rather to give notice that at some future time I propose to discuss various phases of the policy of the country in connection with its foreign relations, particularly with Central America.

While I am on my feet, however, I desire to make this suggestion: Of course, it goes without saying that every Senator must decide such questions entirely for himself and is in no way subject to criticism, but, speaking for myself, I realize and recognize that at the present moment the Pan American Congress is in session at Habana and we are represented there by one of the strongest delegations of outstanding Americans, I think, that has ever been called together for a similar purpose. It is a nonpartisan commission, including in its membership a former Member of this body, Senator Underwood, of Alabama; Judge O'Brien, a well-known member of the Democratic Party in New York; former Secretary of State Hughes, chairman of the commission; and educators and ambassadors who have represented the country in various parts of the world. Reading, as we do, the daily news reports from the conference in Habana, it would seem to be indicated that there is a spirit of splendid harmony existing there and that understandings are being arrived at and policies are being defined. That, I repeat, so far as we can gather from daily press reports, must mean a better understanding and a clearer understanding in the future; and, of course, all of us, no matter what our opinion may be as to policies, would subscribe to that.

So for that reason I propose to defer my discussion of this very important subject to a later date, understanding that the conference will probably be over in two or three weeks. I repeat that under all the circumstances, in dealing with foreign relations which are so distinct and so different from any domestic problems that confront us, it would seem to me wiser not to transfer the forum from Habana to Washington, at least while the conference is in session.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the amendment which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] has offered, I assume to be the one which I have in my hand and which I will read. On page 25, line 24, strike out the word "three" and insert "two"; and add at the end of line 25, page 25, the following:

Provided, That no attorney shall be paid more than $10,000 a year.

I understand the purpose of that provision to be to reduce the number of employees and attorneys, and to provide that none shall receive more than $10,000 per year. That is my understanding of what would occur.

Now, just a word, because I am less a lawyer than anybody else, because I am no lawyer at all. As to the record, which the Senator from Alabama has presented from the early days, I want to say to him that I was one of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, who at all times and places undertook to reduce, and I think with my colleagues did greatly reduce from time to time, all of those high salaries and large numbers of employees. But at the present time my desire is—and I believe it is also the desire of the members of the subcommittee and the full committee—to protect as well as we may the Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation, which, combined, constitute a corporation larger perhaps than any other in the world, or, at least, in America. We desire to cut expenses to the lowest limit to which we may safely reduce them, but we can not consent to the amendment offered.

As to the number of lawyers, the compensation they should receive, and so forth, I prefer that my good friend, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who is familiar with the affairs of the Shipping Board and, of course, knows the facts as to all the attorneys and their salaries, should make a statement in reference to that matter.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have not, of course, given especial study to the employees of the Shipping Board or of the Fleet Corporation, but I have learned that they have just one attorney who is receiving over $10,000. That attorney is getting $15,000 per annum. He is general counsel of the Shipping Board and of the Fleet Corporation. It seems to me that the general counsel of a concern of this magnitude, having so many and such widespread interests, is getting a very small salary when he receives only $15,000 per annum.

As the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], has stated, we have been reducing the compensation of the different employees of the Shipping Board and of the Fleet Corporation during the last three or four years. We have been cutting the salaries of the employees of both corporations very materially. We have cut the salaries of attorneys until, as I have stated, we have only one attorney, the general counsel, who is receiving over $10,000 a year, and he is getting but $15,000.

It is now proposed to reduce the salary of the general counsel of the Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation to $10,000 a year. The business of the Fleet Corporation is very widespread; it is operating ships to all parts of the world. As has already been brought out, there are something like 25 or 30 different routes throughout the world, with almost 300 ships sailing upon them. In addition to that, there is the business coming over from the World War, and there are a good many very important cases that have come over from that war which are not as yet disposed of. There is one case in my State involving issues, taking the claims on each side, of eight or nine million dollars. I think the Government claims five or six million dollars, and the private party claims three or four million dollars.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. JONES. I shall yield to the Senator in just a moment, if he will wait until I finish this statement.

Mr. BLACK. I merely wish to ascertain to what case the Senator from Washington refers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington declines to yield.

Mr. JONES. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment. The case to which I refer has been pending, of course, for quite a while. I am not prepared to say that it ought not to have been brought to an issue and trial sooner, but every attorney knows how such matters of important litigation are delayed. This case has been brought to the point, however, that a master to whom the case was referred has submitted a report and, I understand, he has found in favor of the Government for $1,400,000. His findings, however, must go to the judge. As I have stated, the Government insists that it is entitled to a greater sum; the defendant claims that he is entitled to a judgment; but what the action of the judge may be upon the findings of the master we do not know. If he shall approve them, then the Government, of course, will get a judgment in his court for $1,400,000. That is merely one case.

Now I yield to the junior Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to ask the Senator from Washington what is the name of that case?

Mr. JONES. I think it is what is known as the Skinner-Eddy Co. case.

Mr. BLACK. That is the case, I think, in which special lawyers have been employed.

Mr. JONES. They have one special counsel.

Mr. BLACK. The special attorneys have charge of the case?

Mr. JONES. They have direct charge of the case, but I know that there were many important questions with reference to that particular case which were referred to the general counsel. Of course, the general counsel is not trying these cases, but he has general charge and control of them. I think it would be very unfortunate to pay the general counsel only the amount that is paid to other attorneys who have not the responsibility of looking after the various cases. There is another case, I think, involving one of the shipping plants; at any rate, there is at issue in it something like $30,000,000.

With all due consideration to my good friend from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], in the case of a great institution like this, with such important issues involved, and such large sums of money at stake, it is ridiculous that we should say that the general counsel having charge of all those matters should not receive more than $10,000 a year salary. We can not expect to get a man of the proper capacity, experience, and ability to handle business of this kind in competition with the best legal talent of the country if we pay only such a small salary. I think such action would invite the selection and the employment of inferior attorneys. While it may on paper save $5,000 a year, in the end it will, in my judgment, result in the loss to the Government of millions of dollars.

Mr. President, I think that is all I care to say in regard to the matter. I think it is a question that appeals to the business judgment of every Member of this body.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator think it proper that the lawyers for the Shipping Board should draw the same salary that the members of the Shipping Board themselves receive?

Mr. JONES. Oh, Mr. President, I do not think there is any comparison at all. The members of the Shipping Board have nothing like the financial responsibility upon them that the chief counsel has. They do not have to pass upon questions such as those which we presented to the general counsel.

I have no doubt that there are many corporations in this country that are paying their general counsel in salary many thousand dollars a year more than the presidents or other officers of those institutions receive. I do not think there is any comparison as to the capacity that ought to be required between the chief counsel of this institution and the members of the board.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator will yield further, does he not believe that if a corporation that is paying its general counsel more than $10,000 a year should find that such general counsel had 46 men working under him and disposed of only 439 cases in one year they would fire him?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; I do not think so, Mr. President. I do not think we can determine the capacity of a man by the number of cases that are disposed of.

Mr. BLACK. Very well; then, by the work that he does.

Mr. JONES. We could find many justices of the peace who are disposing of a great many cases in a day, and yet we would not think of fixing their salaries because of the number of cases which they dispose of or determining their salaries upon that basis at all. Take, for instance, the Skinner-Eddy Co. case; it has been pending ever since the war. As I have said, I do not know that it has been pressed as vigorously as it ought to have been pressed, but it is necessary to be extremely careful in gathering the testimony and in getting the data and facts in shape. My recollection is that the case before the master in the actual taking of testimony and determination of the issues has taken 8 or 10 months of steady work. The fact that it has taken in that case all that time is no reason why we should say that the general counsel, because he has not disposed of one case in a year, should get only five or ten or a few thousand dollars.

Mr. BLACK. May I suggest to the Senator that although that work has taken practically a year it was not done by any of the 46 lawyers of the Shipping Board, but was done by a special lawyer hired out in that section? None of the 46 lawyers touched it.

Mr. JONES. That may be true, Mr. President, but the result of their labors is shown by what has been accomplished. The lawyers engaged in the case were under the supervision of the general counsel; they had to submit to him from time to time many questions, and, possibly, upon the decision of those questions depended thousands and possibly hundreds of thousands of dollars. Whether or not he decided them correctly I do not know, but we ought to have a good man, a man of very great ability as chief counsel. In my judgment this Government would save hundreds of thousands of dollars if we paid the chief counsel $50,000 a year and secured one of the very highest class of attorneys in the country. I am not saying that as any reflection upon the general counsel of the Shipping Board, for he is a good lawyer. If he can not make far more than $15,000 a year in private practice, then, of course, he ought to be put out, but I am satisfied that he could do so; I am satisfied that he is really making a sacrifice in remaining in the position of general counsel of the Shipping Board.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator thinks the general counsel is making a sacrifice will the Senator join with me in favoring a bill to provide that hereafter the general counsel shall be confirmed by the Senate, so that I may produce evidence to show the Senate whether or not he is capable of performing the duties for which he is paid $15,000 a year.

Mr. JONES. I do not think I would have any serious objection to a proposition of that kind.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Washington raised the question of order on an amendment having that in view.

Mr. JONES. Although I doubt the necessity of it, I would not have any serious objection to it. The mere fact that he is confirmed by the Senate would not add anything to his capacity or his ability as a lawyer or otherwise, so far as that is concerned. I think that considerable discretion ought to be left to the Fleet Corporation in the selection of the man who is really to guide and direct them in the handling of the tremendous property that is intrusted to their care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of supporting the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama. Before proceeding briefly to discuss the question, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the $18,000 provided for in line 24, page 35, is to pay the salary of some expert on transportation or is to be paid to some attorney?

Mr. WARREN. The distinguished Senator from Utah will note that the provision is in the negative form; that is, that there shall be no more than that amount paid. My impression is that that amount goes to the manager or to the president of the Fleet Corporation, which would be General Dalton. I have no direct information as to that, but I believe it to be so.

Mr. JONES. I think that is correct.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator. I should like to make another inquiry. On lines 24 and 25 it is provided:

> Three at not to exceed $15,000 each.

Are those three experts in shipping and transportation or are they lawyers?

Mr. JONES. They are not lawyers. My understanding is that they are at the head of the different activities, such as the traffic department, for instance. I am not exactly sure as to that, but they are not lawyers. There is only one lawyer, who is paid over $10,000.

Mr. KING. How much does he receive?

Mr. JONES. He receives $15,000. He is the general counsel.

Mr. KING. Then the general counsel would be one of the three persons who is to receive $15,000.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. KING. And the other two are connected with the traffic transportation service.

Mr. JONES. One, I think, has charge probably of transportation affairs.

Mr. KING. Where is the provision for general counsel who is to receive $15,000?

Mr. JONES. That is covered in the provision which reads:

> Three at not to exceed $15,000 each.

One of those is the general counsel.

Mr. KING. May I assume that there is only one lawyer to be paid $15,000?

Mr. JONES. Yes. I find on page 675 of the hearings before the House committee that inquiry was made with reference to these three at $15,000. Mr. SUMMERS asked the question:

> How many are employed at $15,000?
> Mr. PARKER. The legal department has only one, and that is the general counsel.

That was Mr. Parker.

> Mr. SUMMERS. How many are employed at $12,000?
>
> Mr. PARKER. None.
> Mr. WOOD. That has reference not only to the legal department but to the Fleet Corporation also.

I do not see anything here telling who are the other two that get $15,000; but I know that they have a head of a traffic bureau, and I imagine he is one of the men. Possibly I shall be able to find that a little bit further on.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall proceed upon the assumption that one of these three to be paid $15,000 is a lawyer, and that no more than one is to be appointed at a salary of $15,000 or over.

I am told that the record reveals that there are 45 lawyers presently employed by the Shipping Board—permanent employees, so to speak—and, in addition, a large number of special employees. In addition, the Department of Justice, which receives a large appropriation to pay attorneys and other employees, looks after many of these cases—cases in the Court of Claims as well as cases in the nisi prius and appellate courts of the various States and the Federal Government.

The testimony before the committee, as I am advised, reveals the fact that the legal force has been increased somewhat, though the activities and assets of the Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation have been diminished. Mr. Parker's testimony, appearing on page 666 of the House hearings, in effect is that the litigation is "in charge of the Department of Justice primarily." By that I assume he means that the Department of Justice is responsible for the litigation, and controls and handles it. Perhaps the preparation of the case and the assembling of the facts are within the competency and the activities of the agents and attorneys of the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation; but the actual work of the trial of the causes is, generally speaking, conducted by the Department of Justice or by special attorneys acting under the direction of the Department of Justice.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator is a little mistaken in his facts. My understanding is that the Attorney General approves the employment of the attorneys for the Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation. In other words, the employment of this general counsel at $15,000 is approved by the Attorney General, and to that extent he is a representative of the Department of Justice; but he handles these cases. Take any one of the cases; take this case out at Seattle; one of the attorneys in that case is a special attorney. He was appointed by the Shipping Board with the approval of the Department of Justice. The other attorney is one of the regular attorneys of the Shipping Board; but he was appointed in the first instance with the approval of the Attorney General. The United States district attorneys, as I understand, have not anything to do with these cases. I know that our United States district attorney out at Seattle has nothing to do with this case, and I understand that that is the situation all over the country. In one sense these men are attorneys of the Department of Justice, because we expressly provided by our legislation that the Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation could not appoint an attorney without the approval of the Attorney General, and that is always done.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. For a question.

Mr. BRUCE. Assuming that there have been too many lawyers connected with the United States Shipping Board, and that they have been paid too much in the way of compensation, does not the Senator think that those facts are probably due to the pressure brought by Members of Congress on the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not in a position to answer that question. I do not know the extent of pressure, if any, brought upon these organizations by Senators or Congressmen, or by others, to secure the appointment of employees. It is quite likely many persons have been indorsed for positions in these organizations by Senators and Congressmen, as well as by persons in official life and in political organizations, and it is quite likely that their indorsements have been considered in some appointments. But that does not absolve the directors of the board from the discharge of the duties resting upon them. I am afraid that the directors of the Shipping Board in its early existence possessed an exaggerated idea of their own importance and the importance of their work to the country. They seemed to act upon the theory that the Treasury of the United States was unlimited in its resources and that the existence of war justified improvident expenditures. Of course, it is not to be expected that in the excitement of war there would be that prudence and economy that peace demands and secures. War is a devouring monster. It takes human lives and swallows the savings and capital of men and nations. It generates extravagance and is controlled by none of these restraints which bind peoples and nations in times of peace.

Perhaps Congress was imprudent and too liberal in its appropriations, but these organizations charged with expending the appropriations made, particularly after the termination of the war, were under obligation to exercise wisdom and economy in their public service.

No doubt there were political appointments made by the board, and it is likely that some of the members of the board were political appointees, and persons were named who were not qualified to operate ships and handle a great marine enterprise.

Mr. BRUCE. I was asking the Senator whether it is not those indorsements—indorsements given by political influence in one form or another, congressional or otherwise—that really, after all, are responsible for abuses of patronage in connection with the workings of any and every branch of the Government?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I venture to say that a comparison of the attorneys of the Shipping Board with attorneys who received their appointments under the civil service law and found places in the Government service will not be unfavorable to the former.

Mr. BRUCE. Perhaps that is because the Senator has such a poor opinion of the merit system of appointment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think I have some ability to judge of the competency of lawyers; and I do not think that the fact that I have not a very high opinion of the civil-service system would prompt me to refuse to accord to a man who has a civil-service status that degree of merit which his ability deserves. There are lawyers of great ability serving in various departments of the Government who have a civil-service status, but I am inclined to think that it is not the so-called merit system that made them good lawyers.

Mr. BRUCE. There are, of course, some positions to which the merit system of appointment would be entirely inapplicable. For instance, if one of the departments should need from time to time the services of a great trial lawyer, I think it would be absurd to invite competition for the selection of such a lawyer; but the Senator knows that, so far as ordinary routine attorneys are concerned, many of them are selected for different branches of the Government under the merit system of appointment.

Take the Patent Office; take other branches of the public service; many attorneys are so selected; and I think the Senator will agree with me that where attorneys or other subordinates of any kind are selected under the merit system of appointment there are not likely to be so many of them, and they are not likely to receive such a large measure of compensation as when they are selected simply as a result of personal or political pressure. Is not that a fact?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not care to be drawn into a discussion, because it is not relevant to the question before us of the merits or the demerits of the civil-service system. I agree with the Senator, if I understand him correctly, that there are many instances in which to select a man to fill a high judicial position or to discharge the duties of a lawyer from a civil-service list would be absurd. I am sure if the Senator had some important litigation, and needed a lawyer, he would not go to a civil-service roster for the purpose of finding a lawyer to employ to conduct his business.

Mr. BRUCE. No; but if one of the departments needed just some routine attorney, a man to perform more or less routine professional functions, I think it would be a very wise thing to look to the civil-service system for an attorney of that description.

Take the Shipping Board, of which the Senator is speaking. Many of these attorneys doubtlessly discharge duties of a more or less routine character. They are not expected to be equal to the requirements of exacting trial practice and all that; but the point I make is that if that class of attorneys were selected for the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation, or for any other branch of the Government, not so many of them would be selected, and they would be paid far less compensation than that of which the Senator is complaining.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I respect the views of my dear friend from Maryland, and much can be said in favor of the civil-service system. But it has serious weaknesses; even in a democracy there is less reason for its establishment than in some other form of government. If the Senator or I should own or operate a newspaper, we would not ask for a civil-service rating in behalf of those who were to work upon the paper. The newspaper men who make a success are those who refuse standardization. They have initiative and genius and ambition to succeed. If success attend a reporter or writer, it is not by following set rules and archaic precedents; it is because of his departure from the rut in which so many of us travel through life. The brilliant newspaper men are those who refuse to be stereotyped and standardized and listed as measuring up to some rules or requirements made to fit all persons and apply under all conditions.

So it is with lawyers. The lawyers who succeed refuse to be stereotyped and branded and standardized. The eminent Senator from Maryland—a lawyer of ability and a historian of recognized standing—has reached the eminent station occupied by him not by a civil-service policy or a civil-service spirit but by energy and genius and courage and ambition and a refusal to be standardized by social or political or industrial conditions.

The Shipping Board has met with serious criticism ever since it was organized, and many investigations of its work and activities have justified much of the criticism, particularly that relating to its lack of business ability, and to waste, extravagance, and inefficiency.

But under the management of the most competent persons the results would have been unsatisfactory. The system of governmental operation of a merchant marine can not be economical or efficient.

The more than three and one-half billion dollars expended by the board has brought but slight results. Undoubtedly the work of the board during the war was of importance, if only in convincing the Central Powers that the United States was in the war and would spend its treasures in defeating the enemies of this Republic. The psychology of the situation was a vital force in the winning of the war. But since the war the work of the board can not be commended. It has failed to serve the people as it should, and has been inefficient if not incompetent in its activities. There has not been a session of Congress since 1918 when the Shipping Board has not come under condemnation by Congress. The animadversions reveal the fact that in both branches of Congress dissatisfaction has been expressed in regard to the activities of this organization.

It was demonstrated in the debate upon the shipping bill a few days ago that the Shipping Board has dissipated its assets—the $3,500,000,000 appropriated by Congress—and has assets of the value of only $128,000,000. It was also shown that there are claims against this organization of more than $200,000,000.

After the Government discharges the obligations of the Shipping Board with the shrinking values of the assets of the organization, and the deterioration in the ships, it is certain that the assets of the Shipping Board will not meet its obligations.

The postwar record of the Shipping Board must be disappointing to all Americans. Senators will recall that President Harding appointed Mr. Lasker to head the board. He was given great authority, and it was declared by the administration that he would accomplish great results and place the organization upon a solid basis. Mr. Lasker asked for $50,000,000 as a direct appropriation to meet the current expenses, which was to be supplemented by the sale of property, including ships owned by the Shipping Board. Congress acceded to his request and made large appropriations but without results. The larger the appropriations the greater the losses. Failure attended every effort to make the experiment of Government operation a success. Thousands of persons were employed, hundreds of lawyers found positions, but all efforts to make the work of the Shipping Board successful were in vain.

Persons were taken from various Government organizations and given places in the Shipping Board at salaries greatly in excess of the compensation paid them. There seemed to be no regard for economy or for the public welfare.

There has been an orgy of waste and extravagance in connection with the activities of the Shipping Board. This has been conceded by all. No one in either House of Congress has defended this organization. Its failure, its mistakes, have compelled criticism and condemnation.

I am being led far afield, however. I rose merely to support the position of the Senator from Alabama. He has called attention to the fact that, notwithstanding the Department of Justice is primarily responsible for litigation growing out of the activities of the board and that special attorneys are employed wherever suits are brought, nevertheless we are called upon now to give to the Shipping Board forty-odd lawyers, one of whom is to receive at least $15,000 a year.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I can tell the Senator now that the other $15,000 men are the two vice presidents, one having charge of operations, the other of administration.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator. I had the impression that two were to be employed in connection with the operation of ships, and one of the three was to be employed as counsel.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will move to reduce the appropriations for the lawyers and restrict the number to 25, I think he will be doing a public service, and I shall be glad to support him. I shall also support him in his motion to reduce the compensation of the lawyer who is to receive $15,000 a year to $10,000 a year.

I have in the file before me—and I shall not take the time of the Senate to read it into the RECORD—the history of the activities of the Shipping Board. It reveals deficits during the past four or five years of more than two hundred and fifty-odd million dollars, and that does not include the sums of money derived from the sales of assets—ships and other property belonging to the Shipping Board. What the true figures are I am unable to state, and I believe no one else is able to accurately state the amount.

The deficits from the beginning of the operations of the board have been stupendous. Indeed, the deficits have been so great that the capital has been wiped out, and, as I said, if we should pay the debts of the organization it is doubtful whether there would be anything left.

No one knows how much will be consumed by the organization, or expended by it, during the coming year. No one knows what the deficits will be for the operation of the Shipping Board during the coming year.

The bill before us carries large appropriations for the Shipping Board—$84,000 for the commissioners; $195,750 for various activities, $172,500 of which is to be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia; $9,000 for printing and binding; $13,400,000 for administrative purposes, miscellaneous adjustments, losses due to the maintenance and operation of the ships, for the repair of ships, the carrying out of the provisions of the merchant marine act of 1920; $2,225,000 is to meet the expenses of liquidation. I am not sure just what the liquidation is.

In addition, $10,000,000 is "to enable the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation to operate ships or lines of ships which have been or may be taken back from purchasers by reason of competition or other methods employed by foreign shipowners or operators."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator will not overlook the request for $12,000,000 to recondition two useless hulls. Surely the Senator will not overlook that wasteful item. Likewise, he will not fail to note $1,400,000 to enable the bankrupt bituminous coal industry of this country to export its coal at the expense of the Government.

We are going to spend $1,400,000 to help this industry, when almost every other interest of the country is in need of money. Why should this particular interest be benefited to this extent? It would be as reasonable for the automobile industry to apply for five or six millions to provide extra ships to take the products of their factories to Europe.

We sell these ship lines to private owners, and then immediately undertake to put into operation Shipping Board ships to compete with them, almost as if we wished to insure disaster.

But those items, aggregating $13,400,000, should be included in the list to which the able Senator is calling attention.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have not forgotten those items, but I beg to state that I am not going to be drawn into a discussion of the coal question, when I see upon my right my friend from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and across the aisle the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Before the distinguished Senator and equally eminent doctor from New York retires from the Chamber, I venture to say that if the coal operators of West Virginia could only discover some method whereby they could clear as much money in a year as the Senator from New York receives for broadcasting a single morning health talk, or for writing a solitary feature article in the Nation's newspapers, they would enjoy more prosperity in 1928 than they have experienced during the last four years.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from New York is at the disadvantage of not having been able to put his hands into the pockets of the public through a generation, as the coal barons of West Virginia and other sections of the country have. I am seeking now to improve the health of the American people so that they will have the strength and vigor to carry the burdens of taxation placed upon them by the Senator from West Virginia and others who seek to take money out of the Treasury to bolster up a dying and bankrupt industry.

Mr. NEELY. A majority of those whom the Senator from New York calls coal barons are as poor as Lazarus and more bedeviled than that historic sufferer ever had the misfortune to be. But what the Senator from New York has lost in time he has made up in the irresistibility of his energy and efforts.

If rumor be reliable, he has, in a period of time much briefer than a generation, succeeded in an eminently proper way not only in putting his hands into the pockets of the public but in transferring from those public pockets to his own more money than the average coal operator can hope to accumulate in a lifetime as long as that of Methuselah.

If the Senator will only teach the West Virginia coal operators how to find a market for their product that will be as profitable to them as the market for the Senator's advice has been to him, he will thereby prove himself to be the greatest political economist, instructor, and financier of this or any other age or country.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield further to me?

Mr. KING. I hope this colloquy between my friend from New York and my friend from West Virginia will terminate, so I can conclude my speech, when the Senator concludes his observation. I yield to him, of course.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. I would like to say to the Senator from West Virginia that my efforts are directed wholly to improving the physical condition of the people of the country. I am not seeking to teach the coal barons of West Virginia how to run their business. I am not seeking to add to the mental ability of the business men in that particular industry, who have failed so utterly as certainly the coal operators of the country have failed. It is not enough simply to give them health. They must be given gray matter, which the Senator from West Virgnia has in such abundance that he is better qualified to feed it to the public than I am.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I feel the time has come for suggesting to the Senator from Utah that, in the interest of legislation and proceeding with the appropriation bill now before the Senate, he should decline to yield any further.

Mr. KING. Let me say to my friend from Wyoming that the rather dull observations which I have been making in the interest of economy, because no one is interested when one speaks of economy, have been enlivened by the brilliant sallies of the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from New York. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia, but I hope this will end it.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I hope that the hope of the very able and accommodating Senator from Utah may be realized. But the versatile Senator from New York is so astonishingly persistent and so amazingly contentious as to make it impossible for me to promise to be silent. The Senator from New York resembles the heroine of the following ancient story:

A certain man who died left a widow and a 10-year-old son to survive him. The minister, who came to the home of the deceased to preach an appropriate funeral sermon, said to the boy, "My little man, what were your father's final words?" The boy replied: "Pa had no final words—ma was with him to the last." [Laughter.] In every senatorial discussion of the coal business the Senator from New York is with us "to the last."

The Senator declares that he does not want to tell the coal operators of West Virginia how to operate their mines. But, unfortunately, he has attempted to do that which is infinitely worse.

If he had succeeded in having enacted into law the legislation which he proposed in the last Congress, there would now be no coal business in charge of those who have spent their lives developing and establishing this great and indispensable industry. A paternalistic Federal commission would be in full control. The coal industry of West Virginia does not want the Senator's proposed legislation or his suggested commission. It does not need his assistance or advice.

If the Senator from New York will only keep the people as well with his medicine and advice as the coal operators of West Virginia will keep them warm, and the pernicious Interstate Commerce Commission will only be as just to West Virginia in the present and the future as it has been hostile to her in the past, the coal business of that great State and the millions whom it serves will once more be prosperous and happy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the interest of harmony, I desire to submit an amendment to the pending measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I think I shall preserve harmony by proceeding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah declines to yield further.

Mr. KING. I shall be through in a moment, and then the Senator from New York can obtain the floor in his own right.

I was calling attention to the deficit created by the Shipping Board and the Merchant Fleet Corporation aggregating hundreds of millions of dollars. I was enumerating some of the items of expenditure called for by the bill. I had reached the item of $10,000,000 appropriated for the reconditioning of ships which were taken back because of competition.

One could talk for hours about the oppressive record of the Shipping Board in dealing with its vendees, men who in good faith purchased ships and tried to operate them in the coastwise trade as well as in the foreign trade, but the Shipping Board, without due regard to justice or the spirit of the contracts entered into, permitted competition if it did not directly engage in competition, and thus drove into bankruptcy those who purchased and attempted to operate ships. The board took possession of vessels, which they compelled those who had purchased them to surrender, and in a number of instances, as the facts have been brought to my attention, forced, by unjust and oppressive means, persons who were competent to continue the operation of ships, to surrender them. When so surrendered, in some cases, the board again sold them, or made M. O. 4 contracts, which increased the losses of the Government, and contributed to the utter failure of the organization to build up a merchant marine.

Under the M. O. 4 contracts millions and tens of millions of dollars of profit were realized by unworthy men who incurred no obligation or risk. They received enormous profits directly, and were permitted to organize companies which sold to themselves or to the Shipping Board tens of millions of dollars' worth of commodities at extortionate prices. One can not escape the conclusion, after reading the record of the activities of the Shipping Board, that incompetency and negligence and an utter disregard of the public welfare have characterized the service of the Shipping Board.

Mr. President, this bill under consideration appropriates for the purpose of reconditioning two old hulks which were constructed either in 1905 or 1906, $12,000,000. There can be no defense, in my judgment, for this waste. Think of the Government appropriating $12,000,000 for the purpose of reconditioning two old hulks! Germany and Great Britain are building new ships with a new style of architecture, with Dieselized engines, and all modern developments. The result will be that these nations will successfully compete with the United States and drive from the seas archaic and ancient ships, which can not compete with theirs. The new ships can be operated from 10 to 30 per cent cheaper than the ancient ones which we now propose to recondition.

There is no reason for this appropriation. It can not be justified. It is supported by the same mercenary spirit that pushed through the Senate the measure to embark the United States in the sea of Government-ownership operation of a merchant marine. I feel sure that the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge would not support the bill if he were free to act in this matter. But the propaganda which swept a most unwise bill through the Senate the other day has carried this provision into the pending bill. It will probably be agreed to.

In keeping with this extravagance and wastefulness we are to pay 45 lawyers large compensation, one of them $15,000.

This bill, following the record and wishes of the Shipping Board, exhibits no regard for economy. Nor does Congress show any concern in the welfare of the people. Before adjourning, Congress will appropriate at least $5,000,000,000.

In my opinion, Congress will be unable to pass any revenue bill reducing taxes if it persists in the present policy of expending millions not necessary for the public good. It appears as if Congress would adjourn without any tax reduction. We could have reduced taxes $400,000,000 without creating any deficit if we had acted with prudence during this session of Congress. But if demands are made and Congress accedes to them as it does in the pending measure, then no reduction in taxes will take place. Indeed, if the demands made on the Federal Treasury are acceded to, there will not only be no reduction in taxes but there will be an increase.

It looks as though men on both sides of the Chamber support measures which will take from the Treasury whatever surplus we had supposed would be created out of existing tax laws and render it impossible for any tax reduction to be had for the ensuing year. Five billion dollars will be appropriated for the coming fiscal year, and no one can prognosticate what will be the expenses for the fiscal year 1929.

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] spoke about giving $1,500,000 to subsidize the coal operators. If we are going to subsidize any branch of industry or business, I invite the attention of my Republican friends to the fact that in New England a number of textile mills have recently closed. The morning press states that several cotton mills closed yesterday. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] how many factories in his State have been closed during the past few months.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that it is impossible for me to give an accurate statement of the number of factories that have been closed in the immediate past. I am frank to state, however, that if the figures were available, they would be startling. A large number of factories have been closed, and an exceedingly large number are running on reduced time. I have seen statements to the effect that the textile industry is running at a production for more than a year of about 40 to 60 per cent of normal conditions. Unemployment, I regret to say, is widespread and the situation in the textile communities throughout New England and northern New York is very bad, indeed.

I note that the Senator referred to Fall River in his reference to what he had seen in the papers. In addition to the deplorable condition in the textile industry, the city to-day was visited by a devastating fire which occasioned a loss of about $25,000,000. This adds a new and very serious problem to the situation. The city is indeed entitled to our sympathy.

I can not find words to impress upon the Senate that very many of the textile industries, a large percentage of them, are passing through a grave financial depression. The situation is most unfortunate. I know not the precise words that would indicate the real conditions. It is a regrettable situation, unemployment widespread, wages reduced, and the future outlook far from encouraging.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator, Mr. President, and I wish to say to my Republican friend that much of this so-called prosperity is fictitious. I am not sure to what extent brokers and certain business and banking interests are inflating the balloon and trying to make the figures relating to so-called prosperity impressive, in order to show a condition which does not exist. In my opinion, Congress should take cognizance of the financial and industrial conditions and curtail appropriations and attempt to enforce economy in the Government.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from Utah refers to the industrial condition. He will be interested to know that I had some figures compiled recently showing the reduction in the pay rolls of our industries in the month of November, 1927, as compared to the month of November, 1926. In the 24 leading industries of the country the average reduction in the pay rolls of wage earners was 8 per cent for the month of November, 1927, as compared with November, 1926.

UNEMPLOYMENT CONDITIONS

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts subsequently said: Mr. President, during the debate this afternoon the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] made some inquiry of me about unemployment conditions in the country. At the time I did not have in my possession a letter or memorandum which contains some statistics.

May I say now in reply to the inquiry submitted by the Senator from Utah that I recently had inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement showing that the average pay roll for November, 1927, of the 24 leading industries of the country was a reduction of 8 per cent under the pay rolls of November, 1926.

I have been trying to get some statistics which would furnish an estimate of how much is the probable depreciation in the total pay rolls of the country and the consequent reduction in wages of employees.

The total pay roll of the country compiled two years ago by the Bureau of the Census, namely, in 1925, indicates that the total wages for that year were, in 187,390 establishments, $10,729,968,927, and that the number of wage earners in these establishments totaled 8,384,261. An average 8 per cent loss in wages would indicate a depreciation of $933,040,776 in one year in wages or a decrease of about $77,753,390 a month to the wage earners of the country. It is probable, however, that the real sum is a good deal more than this, because of the reduction in the pay rolls averages 8 per cent in the larger and the more prosperous industries it is likely to show a much greater percentage of reduction in the smaller and more competitive industries.

If one were to estimate that 57 per cent of the national income for 1927 was in the nature of wages, and this is the estimate generally made, the total pay roll for the country would amount in 1928 to $58,938,000,000. An average loss of 8 per cent in these pay rolls would indicate a loss to wage earners in the year 1928 of $5,125,043,478. There are no separate statistics of the decrease in wages paid in business and commercial establishments and other classes of employment. This estimate, therefore, assumes a reduction, in all pay rolls to all wage earners, averaging 8 per cent.

The estimate for the national income for 1927 was $103,400,000,000. If there should be a decrease of 8 per cent in this income for one year, the decrease in income would be about $10,000,000,000.

I ask that there be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks a letter which I have received on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

ALEXANDER HAMILTON INSTITUTE,
Astor Place, New York, January 21, 1928.

Mr. DAVID WALSH,
United States Senate Committee on Finance,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WALSH: It was a pleasure to have your recent letter relative to figures on pay rolls as published in our Business Conditions Weekly.

The pay-roll figures which appeared in the issue of January 14 are published by us each month and are obtained from a bulletin entitled "Employment in Selected Manufacturing Industries," which is published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor. These figures do not, however, reflect total pay rolls for the country, but represent only the pay rolls for the concerns, numbering upward of 11,000, which report these data monthly to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

There are no data available which give pay rolls for the country, but the most complete figures are the totals compiled each two years by the Bureau of the Census. The last report available is for 1925, and shows total wages for the year paid in 187,390 establishments of $10,729,968,927. The number of wage earners engaged in the establishments included totaled 8,384,261. These figures are from the Census of Manufactures.

The National Bureau of Economic Research estimates that there are about 41,000,000 persons gainfully employed in the United States. It is obvious from a comparison of these figures with the census data that there are a very great many persons employed in the United States in small industries which are not included and do not come within the scope of the Bureau of the Census figures.

Another method of estimating the probable total pay roll of the country is by the use of figures relating to the national income and to the percentage of national income which is received in the form of wages. From our bulletin of January 14 one may obtain the estimate of national income for 1927 of $103,400,000,000. The total proportion which wages are of national income has been estimated at from 54 to 59 per cent. If we take an average figure of 57 per cent, we would estimate that total pay rolls for the country will amount in 1928 to $58,938,000,000.

These figures will, I hope, be helpful, and if I can be of further service in any way don't hesitate to let me hear from you.

Sincerely,

WARREN T. HIRKERNELL.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the prosperity of the country is measured largely by the wages paid to those who are engaged in gainful occupations, not, of course, by wages paid in inflated paper but by wages determined by the purchasing power of the dollar. I recall when I was in Russia I bought a pair of shoe laces at a cost of 600,000,000 rubles, or at par value, $300,000,000. To hire a drosky to go from the station to the hotel required something like sixteen or seventeen hundred million rubles, equivalent, at par, to seven hundred or eight hundred million dollars. So wages are determined not by the number of dollars or rubles the employee receives, but by the purchasing power of the ruble or the dollar.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. KING. Let me finish the sentence. So we determine whether wages are high, not by the number of dollars a wage earner receives per day or per week but by the purchasing power of the dollar. That has been shown by Prof. Irving Fisher in recent statements made by him. And may I say at this time, in view of what my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has stated, that my recollection of a recent statement by Professor Fisher was that the average earnings of those gainfully employed in the United States did not exceed $520 per annum. Now, I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, it is fortunate that the Senator from Utah did not inform us about having paid 600,000,000 rubles for a pair of shoe laces while the Senator from New York was on the floor. Otherwise the Senator from Utah would have been accused of being a coal baron. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I come back to the bill before us, because these interruptions have led us far astray. I am supporting the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] in his opposition to one of the provisions of this bill. If he will move to reduce the number of attorneys to 25, I shall be very glad to support such an amendment.

It is manifest that Congress must take the Shipping Board in hand, because if not it will continue its extravagant course and take from the Treasury annually millions of dollars, which will be thrown into the abyss which has absorbed hundreds of millions of dollars heretofore appropriated. Mr. President, I support the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama and hope that it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have only a word to say in reference to the amendment. It involves an old matter of controversy which, if the amendment shall be adopted, will come up in conference, and from there, of course, it must come back to the two bodies. I hope we may now proceed to get a full vote on the amendment, in order that when the controversy comes before the committee of conference we may know the attitude of the Senate upon it.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Wyoming whether he accepts the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WARREN. I am asking for a vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 35, line 24, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] proposes to strike out "three" and to insert "two"; and in line 25, after the numerals "$12,000," before the period, to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no attorney shall be paid more than $10,000 per year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. I ask for a division on the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask that the amendment may be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated.

The amendment was again stated.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TYSON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts (when his name was called). Upon this question and for the day I have a pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. McLEAN (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GOULD] and let my vote stand.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. JONES. I wish to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] are detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—40

Ashurst	Ferris	McKellar	Smith
Barkley	Frazier	McMaster	Steck
Black	George	Mayfield	Swanson
Blaine	Harris	Neely	Thomas
Borah	Harrison	Norris	Trammell

Edwards	Gould	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.

So Mr. BLACK's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I have another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 36, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$13,688,750" and insert "$13,538,750," and to add thereto the following:

Provided, That not more than $113,200 be paid out of this appropriation for lawyer fees for the 12 months next following the passage of this act.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to explain very briefly the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I should be glad to have the amendment read again.

Mr. BLACK. I might state the purpose of the amendment so that the Senator can understand it better, perhaps, than from the language of the amendment itself.

The amendment provides for a reduction of the total appropriation for the Shipping Board in the sum of $150,000, and then takes that $150,000 off the amount that was spent for lawyers last year, and provides that no more than $113,000 shall be spent for lawyers' fees. That is for this purpose, which I desire very briefly to explain:

I believe that an examination of the report made to the Appropriations Committee of the House will disclose to any impartial man that there have been at least four lawyers employed by the Shipping Board when it might have done with one; and I consider that this employment of persons who have nothing to do simply amounts to taking money out of the pockets of the taxpayers in order to contribute it to some people who may have enough influence to secure positions. It does not help the shipping business. It does worse than that; it hangs an impediment around the neck of the Government by thus employing useless individuals who have nothing to do, and whose chief occupation is in drawing a monthly salary.

I consider that it is no more and no less than rank organized robbery to place people in a position where they draw public money when there is not the slightest necessity for their doing so; and to state that you can have a business which has only 438 lawsuits disposed of in one year and that it required 48 lawyers to do it, at an expense of $288,000, is entirely too much for the average individual to swallow.

In addition to that, they employ special attorneys to try every case that is tried outside of Washington and New York. That was done in my own State of Alabama. It is done, according to the report of the Shipping Board to the Appropriations Committee of the House, in every important lawsuit that they have. Not only that, but the Attorney General of the United States and his department have charge of those prosecutions and defenses, and the whole thing narrows down to this:

There has grown up an incubus there of useless lawyers, drawing enormous salaries, with nothing to do. There is no hope for the economy which has been promised by the present administration unless somebody votes to cut off these useless employees. It is simply a step to aid the Government in the operation of the ships. The chief argument used—I ask the attention of those who supported the Jones bill—to defeat that bill was the argument that Government operation is unsuccessful because it fills up all the places with useless employees. That argument is sound and good; and unless we who are here, and who believe in the virtue of the Jones bill, are willing to lop off these useless employees, then the Jones bill is wrong and we ought to reverse our position.

For that reason, I ask for this reduction of the appropriation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. This wide latitude for the employment of lawyers rather tempts them to put up some sort of a defense in every case and fight it on for years and years, always keeping these lawyers employed; and as they are drawing salaries, instead of promoting the disposition of business in an economical and sensible way, it is a temptation to prolong litigation and keep up litigation just to have lawyers employed to fight it. It looks as though $113,000 a year ought to be sufficient for lawyers' fees for this board.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Alabama has made a somewhat careful study of this subject. I understand that his investigation into the question disclosed that during the last year, while there were a great many lawsuits pending, there were very few actual trials. The greater number of the cases were dismissed; then a large number were discontinued, and practically the remainder settled, so that there were only a very few trials. Can the Senator state how many trials occurred?

Mr. BLACK. It is impossible to state how many trials occurred, for this reason: They have settled—this statement is made in their report—before or after trial, but before final disposition was made, 239 cases; but it is natural to suppose that not a single one of those ever reached its destination in the highest court, for the reason that they state that all of them were settled. Not a single case, according to that record, was tried through to completion, except one which was presented to the Supreme Court by the Solicitor General of the United States, not by the attorneys of the Shipping Board.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, the fact that a case is dismissed or that it is settled does not necessarily imply inefficient management of the case.

Mr. BLACK. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But it would seem that, considering the number of cases that were brought, and the very few that were tried, the amount which the Senator's amendment proposes should be ample under this economical administration.

Mr. BLACK. I believe that if this economical administration should go out here in Washington and New York and attempt to hire a firm of lawyers, they could get for $25,000 a good firm to try every lawsuit they have—every one of them. Here, in order that we may be liberal at this time, until the Appropriations Committee goes further into the situation, I have left the leeway of $113,000; and if that is not enough money to take care of the disposition by settlement of 430 cases in one year, then I am mistaken as to what is sufficient to employ lawyers in the United States of America.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of securing information.

I recall that when the committee, headed by the late Senator from Maine, Mr. Fernald, had charge of the Housing Corporation, and upon the floor he seemed to have charge of the appropriations for the Housing Corporation, he stated—that was four or five years ago—that the corporation was about to be wound up, and that it ought to be wound up, and ought to have been dissolved prior to the time he made the statement. Notwithstanding that, and the fact that years have gone by since that statement was made by a very able and very conscientious Senator, I find here an appropriation of $403,250 for a continuation of this organization for another year.

I ask, for information, as to the necessity of that appropriation, and why the Housing Corporation has not been wound up.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, first, let me say that the income of the Housing Corporation from various sources amounts to some six or eight or ten times the outgo—perhaps not quite so much as that. I can give the Senator the figures in a moment. The houses here, those that were particularly in the charge of the honorable Senator from Maine, are bringing in about $65,000 more than the outgo. As to the others, there are lands situated in various places, there are houses and mills and things of that kind; and the receipts from their disposition last year were something like a million and a quarter dollars.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee took the same ground that the Senator does, that this corporation ought to be closed up. The chairman of the corporation said that he feared that in the condition in which things were, in view of the existence of certain obligations, far less than the real value would be received if the affairs were closed up at once, and that a little more time should be allowed. Of course, our committee had no authority to tell him how to proceed, but we asked that he proceed as rapidly as possible.

Mr. KING. I find here for the maintenance and operation and management of the hotels and restaurants in Washington $403,250, and $238,590 for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARREN. The income derived from the Government hotels for the period under consideration aggregates $445,730.68, while the operating expenses for the enterprise were $393,967.47. Deposits therefore exceeded withdrawals by $51,763.21. That answers the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. Does that take into account insurance, deterioration, and interest on capital?

Mr. WARREN. Everything of every kind. But I might say that the United States does not insure, however.

Mr. KING. Is it the policy of the Government to keep this organization?

Mr. WARREN. No; it is not. It is just one of those matters which the Democratic administration initiated—I do not allege that they did wrong—and we are getting out of them as fast as we can, with proper economy, and saving as much as possible.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that there will be reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, if not to-day, within a very few days, a bill to abolish the Government hotels; but up to the present time we have not been able to abolish them. We do not pay insurance and we do not take into consideration wear and tear. The sooner they are done away with the better. They ought to have been done away with some time ago.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I knew that my colleague entertained the same idea as I did in that regard. The Senator from Wyoming was not quite accurate when he said that interest and deterioration had been taken into account.

Mr. SMOOT. That is never done in the case of the Government.

Mr. WARREN. That is a matter very much like the management of the restaurant here in the Capitol. Let me give the figures.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope that by another year those Government hotels will be out of the way and that the improvement of the plaza will at least be mapped out, so that we will know what it is going to be some time in the future.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will give the Senator a statement of the collections by the United States Housing Corporation during the fiscal year 1927. They totaled $2,288,055.04. Expenditures on account of these collections amounted to $84,872.82, or approximately 0.037 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say also to my colleague that outside of the District of Columbia the Housing Corporation has a very much more difficult situation than exists here in the District. Here in the District we can tear the buildings down. During war time hundreds of houses were built and sold to individuals, to be paid for in monthly installments. I do not know how many there were of those; I can not remember, but there were many of them. My colleague will remember that little towns were built at that time. Those houses are being paid for in monthly installments. I have sometimes thought I would like to take each particular case up and examine it and see whether it would not be cheaper for the Government, in the end, to cancel the obligation, or turn it over to some other agency, and get what we could out of it.

Mr. WARREN. Let me inform the Senator that I have here the testimony on that subject given before the House Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

> Mr. WOOD. How many different pieces of property have you remaining undisposed of?
>
> Mr. WATSON. About 2,300 mortgages in force, and——
> Mr. REED. There are 2 houses undisposed of and about 267 pieces of vacant property.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me this organization has existed too long, and the Government ought to have been able to dispose of its assets and wind it up long before this. I shall make no motion at this time, however, because obviously for the present the organization must exist until it makes disposition of these houses.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on page 17 there is a provision made for the Federal Trade Commission. The committee in the House reported a proviso to that provision, providing that none of the moneys herein appropriated shall be expended for certain purposes, and among them was a certain investigation of an economic character that apparently is being carried on by the Federal Trade Commission. That proviso went out on a point of order. The Senate committee heard testimony with reference to this matter, but we concluded not to propose an amendment, because of the language of this appropriation. The language is as follows:

> For all other authorized expenditures of the Federal Trade Commission in performing the duties imposed by law or in pursuance of law.

We thought that that language limited the expenditure of this money to purposes and objects authorized by law, and if they initiate investigations not authorized by law it is fully within the power of the Comptroller General to prevent the payment of the expenses of carrying them on. So we did not propose an amendment.

I want to call attention to this phase of the matter. In my judgment, from a hasty examination of the law, I do not believe there is any legal authority to carry on some of the investigations that have been ordered by the Federal Trade Commission without any suggestion from Congress, by resolution or otherwise, and I believe those investigations are outside of the authority reposed by law in the commission. That is a matter that could be determined by the Comptroller General.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator imply that in his opinion the Federal Trade Commission has no authority to initiate an investigation?

Mr. JONES. The Federal Trade Commission I think has the authority to initiate certain kinds of investigations. I am inclined to think that they have initiated three or four kinds of investigations that they were not authorized to carry on. But we came to the conclusion that that could be determined by the Comptroller General when the vouchers came in. There are certain investigations they have initiated which I do not believe come within the terms of the law, but not all. They may initiate some.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The statement made by the Senator is so general that it would be difficult for the Senate to form a conclusion as to whether his position is correct or not.

Mr. JONES. That is true. I am not asking the Senate to form a conclusion about it. I am not going to propose any amendment to the bill, but I am just calling attention to that phase of it, and hope, at any rate, that the Comptroller General will investigate the vouchers pretty carefully when they come in.

Mr. KING. As I understood the Senator, neither the House nor the Senate has offered any amendment changing existing law.

Mr. JONES. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there is no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to reduce the appropriation $25,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9136, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of House bill 9136. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I would like to ask whether the Senator from Utah intends to proceed with the consideration of the bill this afternoon?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to do so. I wish to get through with the committee amendments, and there are not many of them.

Mr. MOSES. How about the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the bill shall be taken up by unanimous consent, it will not displace the unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am not making any objection to the request. I merely wanted to understand whether the Senator in charge of the bill expected to proceed with it this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I would like very much to do so.

Mr. KING. Let me ask my colleague a question. If we proceed with the bill, will he be satisfied to take up and act upon the committee amendments, but not take a vote upon the bill until to-morrow morning, giving us a chance to examine it? I have been so occupied that I have not had a chance to examine the bill. I have no objection to proceeding, but not to go to the extent of denying Senators an opportunity to examine the bill to-night, and finally act upon it to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I am satisfied with that course.

Mr. KING. Then I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9136) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropirations with amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Bureau of Indian Affairs, industrial assistance and advancement," on page 22, line 3, after the word "for," to strike out "expenses to be incurred" and insert "expenditures to be made," so as to make the paragraph read:

For transfer to the Geological Survey for expenditures to be made in supervising mining operations on restricted, tribal, and allotted Indian lands leased under the provisions of the acts of February 28, 1891, May 27, 1908, March 3, 1909, and other acts authorizing the leasing of such lands for mining purposes, $60,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Irrigation and drainage," on page 33, after line 10, to strike out:

Flathead irrigation project, Montana: The unexpended balance of the appropriation for continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., contained in the act of May 10, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 464–466), as continued available in the act of January 12, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 945), shall remain available for the fiscal year 1929, subject to the conditions and provisions of said acts: Provided, That the unexpended balance of the $395,000 available for continuation of construction of a power plant may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the construction and operation of a power-distributing system and for purchase of power for said project, but shall be available for that purpose only upon execution of an appropriate repayment contract as provided for in said acts: Provided further, That the net revenues derived from the operation of such distributing system shall be used to reimburse the United States in the order provided for in said acts: Provided further, That the Federal Power Commission is authorized, in accordance with the Federal water power act and upon terms satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, to issue a permit or permits or a license or licenses for the use, for the development of power, of power sites on the Flathead Reservation and of water rights reserved or appropriated for the irrigation projects: Provided further, That rentals from such licenses for use of Indian lands shall be paid the Indians of said reservation as a tribe, which money shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent: Provided further, That the public notice provided for in the act of January 12, 1927, shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior upon the 1st day of November, 1930: Provided further, That in his discretion the Secretary of the Interior may provide in such repayment contracts for covering into construction costs the operation and maintenance charges for the irrigation season of 1928 and all undistributed operation and maintenance cost, and may extend the time for payment of operation and maintenance charges now due and unpaid for such period as in his judgment may be necessary, not exceeding five years, the charges now due so extended to bear interest payable annually at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid, and to contract for the payment of the construction charges now due and unpaid within such term of years as the Secretary may find to be necessary, with interest payable annually at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid: Provided further, That not more than $35,000 of said reappropriated balance of $395,000 shall be immediately available for operation and maintenance, and $75,000 shall be available for construction of laterals near Ronan upon the execution of appropriate repayment contract as provided for in said acts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment may go over until the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is present. I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the fact that this amendment involves the Flathead project.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Education," on page 45, line 12, after the name "Oregon," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to read:

For construction, lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of school buildings, including the purchase of necessary lands and the installation, repair, and improvement of heating, lighting, power, and sewerage and water systems in connection therewith, $398,000: Provided, That not more than $7,500 out of this appropriation shall be expended for new construction at any one school or institution unless herein expressly authorized: Provided further, That from this appropriation new construction is authorized as follows: For central heating and power plant, Eastern Navajo School, not to exceed $37,000; for remodeling, improving, and enlarging the Rice Station Boarding School, San Carlos Reservation, Ariz., including equipment, $49,323; for a day school for the Choctaw Indians of Mississippi, $10,000; for central heating plant and water supply, Seneca Indian School, Oklahoma, $35,000; and for the construction and equipment of a school building in or near Burns, Oreg., to be immediately available, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment on page 45.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state for the information of the Senator from Oklahoma that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate is considering now only committee amendments. Full opportunity will be afforded the Senator from Oklahoma later to submit his amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMAS. Will it be agreeable to have the amendment presented at our next session?

Mr. SMOOT. To-morrow?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be presented at any time after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. We will probably not dispose of the bill to-night.

Mr. KING. Might it not be a good idea to have the amendment read so that we may be advised of its contents?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the amendment has been printed. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Conservation of health," on page 57, line 18, after the words "for support and," to strike out "civilization" and insert "administration," so as to read:

There shall be available for health work among the several tribes of Indians not exceeding $250,000 of the tribal trust funds authorized elsewhere in this act for support and administration of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General support and administration," on page 61, line 23, after the name "Klamath," to strike out "$185,000" and insert "$164,000"; and in line 26, after the words "in all," to strike out "$224,800" and insert "$203,800," so as to read:

Oregon: Klamath, $164,000, of which $10,000 may be used for construction, repair, and improvement of buildings at the agency plant; Umatilla, $9,800; Warm Springs, $30,000; in all, $203,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 16, after the figures "$7,000," to strike out "may be used" and insert "shall be immediately available," so as to read:

Wyoming: Shoshone, $80,000, of which $7,000 shall be immediately available for the installation of a hydroelectric plant and appurtenances, and the wiring of buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, at the end of line 20, to change the total appropriation for general support and administration of Indians and Indian property, etc., from $1,489,900 to $1,468,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Roads and bridges," on page 66, line 16, after the figures "$100,000," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the paragraph read:

For one-half the cost of construction of a road between Cooley and Whiteriver, on the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz., as authorized by the act of April 12, 1924 (43 Stat. L. 93), $100,000, to be immediately available, payable from funds of the Indians of said reservation on deposit to their credit in the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 11, to insert:

For maintenance and repair of that portion of the Gallup-Shiprock Highway within the Navajo Reservation, N. Mex., $20,000, reimbursable as provided in the act of June 7, 1924.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire if that amendment has been accepted by the Senators from New Mexico?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. It passed the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate, and also has been agreed upon by the full committee.

Mr. KING. Did the Senators from New Mexico agree to it?

Mr. SMOOT. It is one of their propositions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Annuities and per capita payments," on page 69, line 21, before the words "per capita payment," to strike out "$100" and insert "$200"; and at the end of line 24, after the word "purpose," to insert a comma and "to be immediately available," so as to read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to make a $200 per capita payment to the Menominee Indians of Wisconsin from their funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, a sufficient amount of which is hereby appropriated for the purpose, to be immediately available.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether it was desired by the Indians to increase the appropriation?

Mr. SMOOT. Some of the Indians requested that it be made a larger amount, but the $200 per capita payment was suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and also agreed to by all the Senators interested in the Indian affairs of the country. The Indians have sufficient money to have made this a larger amount. It is in the Treasury of the United States; but the committee unanimously decided, after the Senator from Wisconsin spoke about the matter to the committee, to increase the $100 to $200 per capita.

Mr. KING. I have no objection if it is agreeable to those who have the interests of the Indians at heart and to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I merely desire to state that the per capita payment comes out of the Menominee Indian fund. It is not a gratuity appropriation. It is desired by the Indians in order that they may have funds immediately available with which to prepare for their spring planting and other operations, and also to provide additional money for the aged and indigent Indians on the reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not know whether the amendment on page 33 was passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment was passed over.

Mr. JONES. That is all right. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent on official business.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Bureau of Pensions, salaries," on page 70, line 16, after the numerals "1923," to strike out "$1,150,000" and insert "$1,165,000, of which $15,000 shall be immediately available," so as to read:

For the Commissioner of Pensions and other personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with "the classification act of 1923," $1,165,000, of which $15,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, an examination of the activities of the Pension Bureau shows that the number of pensioners is growing less and that the work of the Pension Bureau is less now than it has been for a number of years. It does seem to me that there ought to be a diminution in the amount appropriated to pay the expenses of that bureau.

I might say, however, in passing that the Pension Bureau is to be congratulated because of its economies when we take into account that it has handled as much as $250,000,000 to $260,000,000 and distributed it among 800,000 people with an expenditure of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 a year for the operation of that bureau. Yet in the bill which we passed a little while ago for the Veterans' Bureau $40,000,000 was appropriated in one lump sum for operating expenses and $30,000,000 plus for other operating expenses, so that out of the $497,000,000 carried by that bill approximately $70,000,000 goes for salaries and compensation and for administrative purposes in the Veterans' Bureau. I repeat that the Pension Bureau has been economically administered, if the other organization is a standard.

Mr. SMOOT. I might add to what my colleague said that all of the cases, which are virtually pension cases, coming to the Veterans' Bureau are examined by the Pension Bureau. I think myself the expenses of the Pension Bureau, taking into consideration the amount of money that they handle and the very large number of cases they have to pass upon, are as economically administered as any bureau in the Government.

Mr. KING. I share the views of my colleague. I was wondering why the Veterans' Bureau, with a smaller number of cases than the maximum number handled by the Pension Bureau, should cost nearly $70,000,000, whereas the Pension Bureau, as I recall, never exceeded more than two or three million dollars at any time when it was handling the maximum number of cases. The disparity, it seems to me, is unwarranted, and yet I am not on the committee and not able to determine whether there has been economy or not. It does seem to me, however, that in the Veterans' Bureau too much money is expended for operating expenses. General Hines, whom I know, is a man of integrity and a man pledged to economy. He is a good administrator and, of course, must have reasons for the heavy expenses. But it does seem to me that there ought to be some effort made to reduce the expenses in the Veterans' Bureau, especially the administrative expenses. Forty million dollars plus $30,000,000 for administration is too much. The Pension Bureau has set a good example in economy, and I think is worthy of all praise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Bureau of Reclamation," on page 72, line 9, after the name "District of Columbia," to strike out "$23,000; in all, $168,000" and insert "$27,000; in all, $172,000," so as to read:

Commissioner of Reclamation, $10,000; and other personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with "the classification act of 1923," $135,000; for office expenses in the District of Columbia, $27,000; in all, $172,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 19, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$160,000" and insert "$170,000"; in line 20, before the words "for other expenses," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$30,000"; in line 24, before the words "for other expenses," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$13,000"; and on page 73, line 2, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$25,000," so as to read:

For all expenditures authorized by the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 388), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, known as the reclamation law, and all other acts under which expenditures from said fund are authorized, including not to exceed $170,000 for personal services and $30,000 for other expenses in the office of the Chief Engineer, $25,000 for telegraph, telephone, and other communication service, $8,000 for photographing and making photographic prints, $50,000 for personal services, and $13,000 for other expenses in the field legal offices; examination of estimates for appropriations in the field; refunds of overcollections and deposits for other purposes; not to exceed $25,000 for lithographing, engraving, printing, and binding; purchase of ice; purchase of rubber boots for official use by employees; maintenance and operation of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; not to exceed $40,000 for purchase of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; packing, crating, and transportation (including drayage) of personal effects of employees upon permanent change of station, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; payment of damages caused to the owners of lands or other private property of any kind by reason of the operations of the United States, its officers or employees, in the survey, construction, operation, or maintenance of irrigation works, and which may be compromised by agreement between the claimant and the Secretary of the Interior, or such officers as he may designate; payment for official telephone service in the field hereafter incurred in case of official telephones installed in private houses when authorized under regulations established by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 11, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$255,000" and insert "$280,000"; in line 12, after the figures "$20,000," to strike out "in all, $275,000" and insert "for continuation of construction of protective works at Picacho and unnamed washes, $30,000; in all, $330,000," so as to read:

Yuma project, Arizona-California: For operation and maintenance, $280,000; for continuation of construction of drainage, $20,000; for continuation of construction of protective works at Picacho and unnamed washes, $30,000; in all, $330,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for the Yuma auxiliary project, on page 75, line 19, after the numerals "1929," to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That not to exceed $25,000 from the power revenues shall be available during the fiscal year 1929 for the operation and maintenance of the commercial system.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 17, after the word "works," to strike out "$29,000" and insert "$79,000"; in line 18, after the figures "$1,075,000," to strike out the colon and "Provided, That not to exceed $46,000 from the power revenues shall be available during the fiscal year 1929 for the operation of the commercial system; in all, $1,104,000," and insert "in all, $1,154,000," so as to read:

Minidoka project, Idaho: For operation and maintenance, reserved works, $79,000; continuation of construction, $1,075,000; in all, $1,154,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill the reason for this increase in the appropriation for the Minidoka project. That project has been receiving enormous appropriations for many years. The project when it first started was to cost $29 an acre for water for the settlers. My understanding is that that amount has been doubled and more than doubled. Probably the cost now to the settlers for drainage and for water will approximate $80 an acre. I thought this proposition had been wound up, but here we find this increased amount of $1,075,000 for continuing the work upon the Minidoka project. Is it never to end? Will it never be completed?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know just how soon it will be completed, but it is not completed up to date. The authorization was made some years ago. This amount will have to be used this year for the further continuation of the construction of the project. It is one of the reclamation projects, I will say to my colleague, and they all take a lot of time. I wish we had money enough to complete them all as quickly as possible, but the money that is appropriated is paid back yearly by the farmers upon the projects, and it comes in very slowly as compared with the amount we have to expend.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 6, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$27,000" and insert "$32,000"; and in line 7, after the words "in all," to strike out "$44,000" and insert "$49,000," so as to read:

Milk River project, Montana: For operation and maintenance, $32,000; continuation of construction, $17,000; in all, $49,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 19, after the names "Nebraska-Wyoming," to strike out "Not to exceed $75,000 from the power revenues shall be available during the fiscal year 1929 for the operation and maintenance of the commercial system" and insert "For operation and maintenance of reserved works, $75,000," so as to read:

North Platte project, Nebraska-Wyoming: For operation and maintenance of reserved works, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 4, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$50,000"; in line 7, after the word "year," to strike out "1928" and insert "1926"; in the same line, after the word "reappropriated," to strike out the colon and "Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 from the power revenues shall be available during the fiscal year 1929 for the operation and maintenance of the commercial system; in all, $430,000" and insert "in all, $450,000," so as to read:

Riverton project, Wyoming: For operation and maintenance, $50,000; continuation of construction under force account, $400,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1926, which is hereby reappropriated; in all, $450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 14, after the figures "$25,000," to strike out "in all, $160,000," and insert "for operation and maintenance of the power plant, $20,000; in all, $180,000"; and in line 20, after the figures "$21,000," to strike out the colon and "Provided further, That not to exceed $15,000 from the power revenues shall be available during the fiscal year 1929 for the operation and maintenance of the commercial system," so as to read:

Shoshone project, Wyoming: For continuation of construction of drainage, Garland division, $115,000; Frannie division, $20,000; Willwood division, $25,000; for operation and maintenance of the power plant, $20,000; in all, $180,000: Provided, That of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this project for the fiscal year 1927 there is reappropriated for operation and maintenance of the Frannie division, $11,000; and of the Willwood division, $10,000; in all, $21,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, at the end of line 17, to change the total appropriation from the reclamation fund from "$12,614,000" to "$12,843,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the heading "Geological Survey," on page 85, line 24, after the word "station," to strike out the comma and "including not to exceed $6,000 for additional equipment, $12,000; in all, $209,000," and insert "and other base-gauging stations in the Colorado River drainage, $50,000; in all, $247,000," so as to read:

For gauging streams and determining the water supply of the United States, the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources, $197,000; for operation and maintenance of the Lees Ferry, Ariz., gauging station, and other base-gauging stations in the Colorado River drainage, $50,000; in all, $247,000, of which amount not to exceed $70,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and of which $25,000 may be used to test the existence of artesian and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions by boring wells.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 21, after the word "laws," to strike out "$160,000" and insert "$180,000"; and in line 22, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$110,000" and insert "$120,000," so as to read:

For the examination and classification of lands requisite to the determination of their suitability for enlarged homesteads, stock-raising homesteads, public watering places, and stock driveways, or other uses, as required by the public land laws, $180,000, of which amount not to exceed $120,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, at the end of line 13, to change the total appropriation for the United States Geological Survey from $1,758,080 to $1,816,080.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Park Service," on page 96, line 9, after the word "and," to insert "$2,250," so as to make the paragraph read:

Yosemite National Park, Calif.: For administration, protection, and maintenance, including not exceeding $5,350 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, not exceeding $3,200 for maintenance of that part of the Wawona Road in the Sierra National Forest between the park boundary 2 miles north of Wawona and the park boundary near the Mariposa Grove of Big Trees, and not exceeding $2,000 for maintenance of the road in the Stanislaus National Forest connecting the Tioga Road with the Hetch Hetchy Road near Mather Station, and including necessary expenses of a comprehensive study of the problems relating to the use and enjoyment of the Yosemite National Park, and the preservation of its natural features, $290,000; for construction of physical improvements, $97,250, of which not to exceed $65,000 shall be available for water supply and camp-ground facilities at Glacier Point, $8,000 for two comfort stations and two community buildings at the winter camp grounds, $6,000 for two employees' cottages, and $2,250 for the construction of a building to cover the sewage-disposal tanks; in all, $387,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, line 12, after the words "residence for the," to strike out "superintendent" and insert "custodian"; and in line 17, after the word "monument," to insert "or for the purchase and installation of a power unit for lighting the cave," so as to make the paragraph read:

Carlsbad Cave National Monument, N. Mex.: For administration, protection, maintenance, development, and preservation, including not exceeding $1,500 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the custodian and employees in connection with general monument work, $36,500; for construction of physical improvements, $33,500, including not exceeding $2,500 for a ranger cabin, $5,000 for a residence for the custodian, to be constructed in Carlsbad, N. Mex., on a site donated therefor, $2,000 for a garage and supply room, $13,000 for construction and installation of power transmission line between Carlsbad, N. Mex., and the cave, within and without the national monument, or for the purchase and installation of a power unit for lighting the cave; in all, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Freedmen's Hospital," on page 114, in line 6, after the figures "$474,500," to strike out the comma and "of which amount one-half shall be chargeable to the District of Columbia and paid in like manner as other appropriations of the District of Columbia are paid," so as to read:

For officers and employees and compensation for all other professional and other services that may be required and expressly approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $142,000; for subsistence, fuel and light, clothing, to include white duck suits and white canvas shoes for the use of internes, and rubber surgical gloves, bedding, forage, medicine, medical and surgical supplies, surgical instruments, electric lights, repairs, replacement of X-ray apparatus, furniture, motor-propelled ambulance, including not exceeding $200 for the purchase of books, periodicals, and newspapers for which payments may be made in advance, and not to exceed $1,000 for the instruction of pupil nurses, and other absolutely necessary expenses, $80,500; for an addition to, and remodeling of, the nurses' home, including necessary equipment, $150,000; for remodeling and enlarging power plant, including necessary equipment, $52,000; for remodeling and enlarging dining room and kitchen, including necessary equipment, $32,000; for enlarging employees' quarters, $8,000; for installation of new elevators, $10,000; in all, $252,000, including cost of advertising for proposals, preparation of plans, and supervision of work; to be immediately available. In all, for Freedmen's Hospital, $474,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This concludes the committee amendments except the amendment passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have some other amendments which I wish to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Further amendments on behalf of the committee are in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 46, line 17, after the numerals "$208,000," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to change and relocate the boundaries of the old Fort Apache Military Reservation, Ariz., now occupied by the Theodore Roosevelt Indian School by transferring such areas to the Fort Apache Indian Reservation as he may deem advisable by reason of the use and/or occupancy of a part thereof by Apache Indians and to transfer an approximately equal area of lands of the Fort Apache Indian Reservation to the Theodore Roosevelt Indian School reservation, such exchanges of land to be made in accordance with surveys based upon the Salt River base and meridian, the expenses of such surveys to be paid from appropriations for the survey of Indian lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah in behalf of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Utah to explain the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. It was authorized by the committee to be reported as a committee amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from Arizona to the amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, this amendment refers to an old military reservation at Fort Apache, now used as an Indian boarding school. It was found that within the limits of that old military reservation were certain lands occupied by Indians for agricultural purposes. The management of the school indicated a desire to remove some of them off their old homes. In order to correct a possible injustice the Secretary of the Interior is authorized by the amendment to rearrange the boundaries so that the agricultural lands occupied by Indians may be excluded from the reservation and other lands of equal area included for the use of the school.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, with that explanation, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona if the lands occupied by the Indians are a part of the reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. How do they happen to be occupying those lands?

Mr. HAYDEN. They were there when the military reservation was created during the Apache Indian wars. The Army post was established many years ago.

Mr. NORRIS. What is their title? How do they happen to be there?

Mr. HAYDEN. They lived there; and the War Department used as a military post an area a certain distance each way from the flagpole. The Indians were not disturbed by the soldiers after the military reservation was created.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there are so many Senators talking that, although the Senator from Arizona is speaking loud enough, we can not hear him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will suspend debate, and all Senators will suspend conversation. The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, a few years ago Congress provided for the transfer of this military reservation from the War Department to the Interior Department for Indian-school purposes. When the school was established the superintendent of the school thought it desirable to use some of this land for school purposes. If that were done, it would disturb certain old Indians who had been living on the military reservation for many years; in fact, their ancestors had lived there before the reservation was established. It is not necessary to move these Indians from their lands in order that they may be used for school purposes, for other lands not occupied by Indians may be used by the school. All that this amendment proposes is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to rearrange the boundaries so as to exclude from the military reservation and add to the Indian reservation which surrounds the lands occupied by Indians and to incorporate in the school reservation for school purposes certain tracts of land adjacent to the school now a part of the Indian reservation.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, then, under this amendment, if it shall be adopted, the Indians who have been living there for several generations will still remain there?

Mr. HAYDEN. They will remain there, and have their homes on the Indian reservation, instead of within an old military reservation.

Mr. NORRIS. They will not have to be moved?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; to prevent their removal is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, those Indians have a good title, I presume, by long occupancy?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; and one which I believe should be recognized. This amendment, if adopted, will do that.

Mr. NORRIS. This recognizes their title?

Mr. HAYDEN. Exactly so.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, is this project understood by the Indians?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. I met the members of the tribe in council and talked the matter over with them while I was there last year. The Indians understand it; the school superintendent understands it; and the Indian agent understands it. The school is under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, and the Indian reservation is also under his jurisdiction.

Mr. COPELAND. How did it ever happen that such a cruel thing was proposed to be done to these Indians?

Mr. HAYDEN. The school superintendent can not be justly criticized for his desire to secure the use of land within the school reservation for a school farm.

Mr. COPELAND. And it did not make any difference about the Indians, whether they suffered or not?

Mr. HAYDEN. They protested that they had lived there always, that it was not necessary to take their land from them; and I do not believe that it is necessary. At the same time, everyone who has the good of the school at heart is enthusiastic about the development of a suitable school farm, where instruction in agriculture can be given to the pupils.

Mr. COPELAND. But even Indian rights ought to be preserved.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what we are proposing to do.

Mr. SWANSON. Let me ask the Senator how much land is involved?

Mr. HAYDEN. About 1,000 acres is the area of the school reservation, which will remain about the same size after the exchanges of lands are made by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMOOT. It is worth about $1.25 an acre.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. There is some controversy over an item in the bill relating to the San Carlos Reservation, which is an Apache reservation. Does this amendment in any way relate to that controversy or affect the water rights upon the Apache Reservation at San Carlos?

Mr. HAYDEN. The pending amendment relates to the Fort Apache Indian Reservation. The Senator refers to the San Carlos Apache Reservation, a totally different place, the two places being about 75 miles apart.

Mr. KING. I know that they are 75 miles apart, and yet there is a controversy.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no connection between the two propositions at all.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to be assured of that, but notwithstanding that the San Carlos Reservation is 75 miles distant from the Fort Apache Reservation, there is a controversy growing out of water rights.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is entirely another matter, which we will discuss in due time.

Mr. SMOOT. That will come up later.

Mr. BRUCE. Is this other matter dealt with in this bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; it will be reached shortly, I presume.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah, on behalf of the committee, proposes an amendment, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 50, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "in all, $83,000," and to insert a semicolon and the following:

For the purchase of additional land, $10,000; in all, $93,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah in behalf of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Utah explain the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. It refers to the Sequoyah Orphan Training School in Oklahoma. The land proposed to be purchased is restricted in area and is farming land. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] appeared before the committee and stated that it was necessary to secure more land; that the land that it was intended to purchase was worth about $60 an acre; that it is agricultural land and will be farmed by the students at the orphan-training school. We were assured, not only by the Senator from Oklahoma but by the department itself, that if we would appropriate this money for the purchase of that land it would be of wonderful assistance in teaching the orphan Indians how to farm, and that the products of their farming would be of advantage to the Indians. We decided to give the appropriation of $10,000 for the purchase of additional land for the school, the land being worth, as I have said, about $60 an acre.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is that a gratuity appropriation, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. It is, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment again stated. Then I shall wish to ask the Senator from Utah a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again reported for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 50, line 12, it is proposed to strike "in all, $83,000" and to insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the words "for the purchase of additional land, $10,000; in all, $93,000."

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I notice an item which reads—for pay of superintendent, drayage, and general repairs, and improvements, $11,000.

How much of that $11,000 is for the pay of the superintendent?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me, if he has the floor, or will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me if he is in possession of the floor?

Mr. NORRIS. I have the floor, and I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand that the beneficiaries of the arrangement contemplated by this amendment are Indian orphans, that the object is to afford them opportunity for training, and at the same time to assist in their own maintenance and support?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the object of the appropriation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Being inmates of the orphan school, of course, they themselves are without means?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and it becomes quite important, I think, that all being true, to know how much money is being paid for the superintendent; what kind of a man he is, and so forth; whether he is worth the salary he is getting.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. As I understand, no part of the sum proposed to be appropriated by the amendment is available for the payment of salaries.

Mr. NORRIS. The $11,000 item is.

Mr. SMOOT. The item of $11,000 is for paying of superintendent, drayage, repairs, and improvements, but none of the $10,000 proposed by the amendment can be paid for any of those purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The sum carried by the amendment is to be devoted to the purchase of additional land. Of course, the other items, including expenses of administration, come out of the appropriation referred to by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. SMOOT. As I have said, $11,000 is provided for pay of superintendent, drayage, and general repairs and improvements of the school building. I will say to the Senator that the superintendent is paid $2,400.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator give us an idea as to whether the superintendent is qualified to have charge of an orphan asylum of this kind?

Mr. SMOOT. I would rather have the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] answer that question.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; let us ask the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. SMOOT. I presume he knows the superintendent, but I do not know him.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the Senator from Oklahoma acquainted with the superintendent of this orphan school?

Mr. THOMAS. No.

Mr. NORRIS. What are his qualifications?

Mr. THOMAS. This matter comes under the Indian Bureau. The institution is, as has been said, an orphan home and school; it is limited to orphans of the restricted class of Indians. The land on which the school is now located is not good for farming purposes, and it is desired to add to the present holdings some farming land so that these orphan Indians may have the benefit of an agricultural education. At the same time it is thought that by increasing the acreage susceptible of cultivation the children may be able, at least partly, to sustain themselves by the products which may be grown on the land.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I am not trying to find fault or criticize the establishment or the maintenance of this orphan school, but it occurred to me that it might be well to inquire as to the qualifications of those who are in charge of it. I wanted some information in regard to the superintendent. I am wondering about his salary. Is it the regular salary paid to superintendents of such Indian institutions?

Mr. SMOOT. I think, taken as a whole, it is about the same.

Mr. NORRIS. Is he under civil service?

Mr. SMOOT. All such officers are under civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. If he is paid $2,400, what will that leave of the appropriation?

Mr. SMOOT. Deducting the $2,400 from the $11,000 appropriation would leave $8,600.

Mr. NORRIS. So that $8,600 is to be divided up amongst the items of drayage, which I suppose does not amount to very much, and general repairs and improvements.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator give us an idea as to what kind of improvements are contemplated?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether there was a statement of that in the hearing. I will see. Nothing was said on that subject before the Senate committee. There was an average attendance of 297 during September.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, we can not hear the conversation between the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On behalf of the Senator from Wisconsin, the Chair invites the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Nebraska to raise their voices. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Utah, I should like to ask the Chair to maintain better order in the Chamber, so that the Senate may hear our melodious voices. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair accepts the suggestion. The Senate will be in order; the Senator from Nebraska will suspend; all Senators will cease conversation.

Mr. SMOOT. I quote from the House committee hearings, as follows:

> In addition to payment of salary of the superintendent and drayage, the amount requested for pay of superintendent, drayage, repairs, and improvements will be used for routine repairs, such as painting, renewing roofs and repairs to roofs, replacing defective floors, and repairs to heating, plumbing, lighting systems, etc. It is also planned to provide some increase in space in the shop building and one or two small inexpensive cottages for married employees. The cottages will take employees out of the children's quarters, releasing space required for other purposes, and will add greatly to contentment of the employees and at the same time set a better example of home life for the children.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah, or, perhaps the Senator from Oklahoma can better answer the question, How is light supplied; what kind of lighting system does this orphan school have?

Mr. THOMAS. I am not able to answer that question, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. There are quite a number of buildings, I presume.

Mr. THOMAS. It is a small institution accommmodating about 200 orphans.

Mr. SMOOT. It accommodates 297.

Mr. NORRIS. The bill says "for 300 orphan Indian children."

Mr. SMOOT. Two hundred and ninety-seven.

Mr. NORRIS. That was the attendance?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That is practically 300.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator from Utah give me that information?

Mr. SMOOT. I was just looking to see whether it is here somewhere. There is nothing in the testimony in relation to how the school is lighted.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator a list of the buildings there? That would probably give the information.

Mr. PHIPPS. There are 27 buildings.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; 27 buildings.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume they are lighted by electricity; are they?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not tell the Senator whether they are or not. More than likely they are.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado as to that.

Mr. SMOOT. The number of employees is 29.

Mr. NORRIS. There are 29 employees?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. There are 300 orphan children; and how many teachers are there besides the superintendent?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say how many there are.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator give me any information about the ages of these children, and what is the regulation about the orphan asylum? How long are they kept there?

Mr. SMOOT. This school receives orphans and half orphans from the State of Oklahoma, and therefore cares for an especially needy class of Indian children, the greater number of whom would have no education if denied admission to the school. During the past few years the capacity of the Sequoyah school has been increased from 100 to 300. It is always filled. During the fiscal year 1927 the old schoolhouse was remodeled to provide a dormitory for small boys. It was completed in May, and it had an average attendance of 297 during September. I suppose it is during the school year just the same as it is in the schools of the different States.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume these children are kept there, however, the year around; are they not?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes: they are kept there, because we have the houses provided for them.

Mr. NORRIS. I judge, from what the Senator from Oklahoma has said, that they come from all parts of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. SMOOT. The eastern half of the State.

Mr. NORRIS. Is there another Indian orphan asylum in the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think so.

Mr. NORRIS. Are not most of the Indians in the western part of Oklahoma? What happens to an Indian orphan cffild in the western part of Oklahoma, for instance?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, Tahlequah is located in the Cherokee Nation, and this institution is mainly for the Cherokee Tribe of Indians, but other Indians are admitted. There are some small institutions on the western side that take care of other tribes. There are about 150,000 Indians in Oklahoma, and probably 50 different tribes. Each tribe has its own organization. Some of the tribes are too small to maintain an asylum for their own tribe, so they have to go together and depend upon the Government to provide an institution for them.

Mr. NORRIS. And that is how this institution originated, I suppose?

Mr. THOMAS. This institution was originated for the Cherokees, but it is now for the Indians of that State generally.

Mr. NORRIS. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Utah again about this amendment, it provides for the buying of some additional land?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. What kind of land is it, and how much is it going to cost

Mr. SMOOT. It is going to cost approximately $60 an acre; and it is good farm land, so the testimony shows.

Mr. NORRIS. It is deeded land at the present time?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, it is privately owned land; and the school intends with this $10,000 to purchase as much land as the $10,000 will buy. The land is all farm land.

Mr. NORRIS. The intention is, I suppose, to teach these children agriculture and agricultural pursuits?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is the object of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 55, in line 2, it is proposed to strike out "$1,390,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,440,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I submit a further amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 57, lines 5 and 6, it is proposed to strike out "in all, $105,000," and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Claremore Hospital, Oklahoma, $50,000, on condition that not less than 5 acres of land shall be donated to the United States by the city of Claremore for hospital purposes; in all, $155,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that on page 57?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator explain that amendment?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will yield, perhaps I can give some information on this item.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator makes his statement, let me ask where the amendment comes in on page 57.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be stated again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be restated.

The Chief Clerk again stated the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. That adds $50,000?

Mr. SMOOT. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this amendment is submitted under the authority of what is known as the Snyder Act, Public, No. 85, Sixty-seventh Congress. The amendment proposes to establish a small general hospital at Claremore.

Claremore is located in the northeastern part of Oklahoma. It is a junction point of two of the main railroads in Oklahoma, the Frisco and the Santa Fe. Claremore is a town of approximately 5,000 people. It is regarded as a very healthful location. At this point they have a mineral water called radium water that has been examined and found to be very beneficial for certain disorders, such as stomach trouble and skin diseases.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is that where Will Rogers lives?

Mr. THOMAS. It is.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am for it.

Mr. THOMAS. This hospital is in a location surrounded by numerous small tribes of Indians.

For example, the Ottawa Indians liye in this locality. This tribe embraces only 264 members.

The Eastern Shawnees live in this locality—a tribe embracing 179 members.

The Osages live in this locality. There are 2,863 Indians in the Osage Nation.

The locality embraces the Quapaws, a tribe of 342 members. It embraces the Senecas, a tribe of 606 members; likewise the Wyandottes, embracing 527 members.

Adjacent to the city are perhaps some 18,000 or 20,000 members of the Five Civilized Tribes.

In all, within a radius of 100 miles of this locality, there are probably 25,000 Indians. Many of these tribes are so small that they can not by any means themselves support a hospital. Many of them have no tribal funds and no tribal lands. Of course, that does not apply to the Osages as a tribe.

The 150,000 Indians in my State do not have very good hospital facilities. In the southeastern part of Oklahoma we have a small tubercular hospital, located at Talihina. Only tubercular Indians can be admitted there. At Shawnee, in the central part of the State, is a small hospital for the Shawnee Indians. In the southwestern part of Oklahoma, at Lawton, is a small hospital for the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians.

These Indian tribes are clannish. In the first place, Indians do not like to go to any hospital very well. In former years they would hardly go to a hospital; but in recent years Indians do go to hospitals. The purpose of this amendment is to start a small general hospital for all kinds of complaints and ailments, and to locate it at a place to which these small tribes that are unable to build their own hospitals and maintain them can have access. This town of Claremore being centrally located, healthful, having this water that is pronounced wonderful, and being surrounded by so many Indians with no hospital facilities, the department is in favor of this item.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator. His explanation is entirely satisfactory to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

ROBERT W. STEWART—RECUSANT WITNESS

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, to present a report, and I ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received and read.

The Chief Clerk read the report (No. 229), as follows:

[S. Rept. No. 229]

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN LIBERTY BONDS ACQUIRED BY THE CONTINENTAL TRADING CO. (LTD.)

The Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, proceeding as directed by Senate Resolution 101 to inquire into the disposition of certain Liberty bonds acquired by the Continental Trading Co. (Ltd.), and having received testimony to the effect that the said Continental Trading Co. (Ltd.), having realized upward of $2,000,000 through a contract entered into on the 17th day of November, 1921, by which it became entitled to buy and agreed to buy, 33,333,333⅓ barrels of oil from certain companies producing the same in the State of Texas, which oil it agreed the same day to sell to the Prairie Oil & Gas Co. and the Sinclair Crude Oil Purchasing Co., guarantors for it of its contract to purchase, at an advance of 25 cents per barrel, with the profits so realized purchased Liberty bonds in an amount in excess of $2,000,000 of which bonds to the amount of $230,500 were delivered by H. F. Sinclair in the month of May, 1922, to M. T. Everhart, the son-in-law of Albert B. Fall, then Secretary of the Interior, the avails of which bonds were applied to the account of the said Albert B. Fall, or in extinction of obligations due from him or from a cattle company in which he and the said M. T. Everhart were jointly interested, called to the stand as a witness one Robert W. Stewart, who participated in the negotiations leading to the said contracts and who was present at the execution of the same, representing the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, the owner of one-half of the stock of the Sinclair Crude Oil Purchasing Co. The said witness was, on Thursday, February 2, 1928, asked by the committee through its chairman the following question, to wit:

"Mr. Stewart, do you know of anyone who received these bonds that the Continental Trading Co. are reported to have dealt in?"

Whereupon the following proceedings took place:

"Mr. STEWART. Senator NYE, I did not personally receive any of these bonds or make a dollar out of them; I personally did not make a dollar out of this transaction.

"The CHAIRMAN. That was not the question.

"Mr. STEWART. I have said that to you to make way for something else. I am a witness in a case which is now pending between the Government of the United States and some defendants. I have been interrogated in regard to these subjects by the counsel appointed to represent the United States in that case. From their interrogation of me I am of the opinion those are the issues which are going to be tried in that case, and I do not think that the line of interrogation here by this committee is within the jurisdiction of the committee under the laws of the United States. I do not think that the question is entirely pertinent to this inquiry, even.

"The CHAIRMAN. You understand, of course, that the Senate has specifically directed that we make inquiry into the transactions of bonds?

"Mr. STEWART. I have read the resolution under which you gentlemen are operating. Now, furthermore, there are others interested in this matter, and I regret it exceedingly—and I am really not doing it through any lack of respect to Mr. WALSH, or to you, or to any of the members of this committee—but I have to decline to answer.

"The CHAIRMAN. You would not desire to say you did or did not know?

"Mr. STEWART. No; I will have to content myself with this statement, by saying that personally I have never made a dollar out of this transaction; and, second, that I have never given any bonds of any description to any representative of any political party or to any public officer of the United States or of any State or Territory or any municipality inside of it.

"The CHAIRMAN. Just one more question, Colonel Stewart. Have you discussed any of these bond transactions with Mr. Sinclair or has Mr. Sinclair discussed any of these bond transactions with you?

"Mr. STEWART. Well, for those reasons, I have to decline to answer that. I will say to you that I think that is not material to any of the issues that I knew anything about.

"The CHAIRMAN. That will be all."

In explanation of the foregoing, the committee reports that the Mr. Sinclair referred to in the foregoing testimony is the same Sinclair hereinbefore mentioned, who, it was disclosed before the committee, likewise participated in the negotiations referred to and was likewise present at the time the said contracts were executed representing the Sinclair Crude Oil Purchasing Co.

The witness, Robert W. Stewart, being recalled to the stand, on Friday, the 3d day of February, 1928, Senator WALSH having referred to certain bonds, the following proceedings took place:

"Senator WALSH (interposing). The bonds I refer to and that were referred to by the chairman of the committee in his question to you yesterday are the bonds referred to in the resolution under which the committee is acting, which says as follows:

"'Whereas in the case of the United States against Harry F. Sinclair and Albert B. Fall it was disclosed upon the trial that a fraudulent corporation, known as the Continental Trading Co., of Canada, had been organized for the purpose of using the profits of its business in the bribing of public officials of the United States and for other dishonest, dishonorable, and illegal purposes'—

"I am not asking you to subscribe to that, this is the description here——

"Mr. STEWART. Thank you, Senator; thank you.

"Senator WALSH (continuing). 'And whereas it was disclosed upon said trial that the profits of said corporation were invested in Liberty bonds of the United States and that only a portion of said Liberty bonds so invested had been definitely traced and accounted for and by the large amount of Liberty bonds coming into the hands of said fraudulent corporation and had been unaccounted for and unexplained: Therefore be it resolved'——

"Mr. STEWART. I have read that resolution, Senator.

"Senator WALSH. So that you understand that the questions of the chairman of the committee and of myself referred to those bonds?

"Mr. STEWART. Oh, I think so, Senator.

"Senator NYE. The Senate expects us to interrogate you with respect to whether or not you knew anything of this transaction in Liberty loan bonds. With that purpose in mind, I am going to repeat my question of yesterday: Do you know of anyone who received any of these Liberty bonds in which the Continental Trading Co. is represented to have dealt?

"Mr. STEWART. Senator, again, with the greatest reluctance and with great respect for the committee and for the reasons which I have already given in the course of my testimony and for other reasons which might appear later, I will have to respectfully decline to answer that question.

"Senator NYE. I shall also repeat that question of yesterday as to whether or not you have had any conversation with Mr. H. F. Sinclair with regard to this transaction in Liberty loan bonds or with regard to the Continental Trading Co.'s transactions?

"Mr. STEWART. For the same reason, sir, I shall have to decline to answer.

"Senator NYE. Have you had any conversation with Mr. O'Neil with regard to any of these transactions with the Continental Trading Co. in re these Liberty loan bonds?

"Mr. STEWART. Not to my best remembrance. I have not seen Mr. O'Neil in a great many years.

"Respectfully submitted.

"GERALD P. NYE,
"Chairman Committee on Public Lands and Surveys."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the words "by H. F. Sinclair" were omitted after the word "delivered" on the first page of the report. I ask to amend by inserting those words.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be made.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 132), as follows:

Whereas it appears from the report of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys that a witness, Robert W. Stewart, called before the committee making inquiry as directed by the Senate by Senate resolution 101, declined to answer certain questions relative and pertinent to the matter then under inquiry:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant commanding the Sergeant at Arms or his deputy to take into custody the body of the said Robert W. Stewart, wherever found, and to bring the said Robert W. Stewart before the bar of the Senate, then and there or elsewhere, as it may direct, to answer such questions pertinent to the matter under inquiry as the Senate, through its said committee, or the President of the Senate, may propound, and to keep the said Robert W. Stewart in custody to await further order of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9136) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 58, after line 2, insert the following as a new paragraph:

For relief of distress among the native Indians of Turtle Mountain Band of North Dakota, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I also offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 58, in line 14, after the numerals "$1,000," insert the words "to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer also the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 113, after line 6, insert the following:

HOWARD UNIVERSITY

Salaries: For payment in full or in part of the salaries of the officers, professors, teachers, and other regular employees of the university, the balance to be paid from privately contributed funds, $160,000, of which sum not less than $2,200 shall be used for normal instruction;

General expenses: For equipment, supplies, apparatus, furniture, cases and shelving, stationery, ice, repairs to buildings and grounds, and for other necessary expenses, including reimbursement to the appropriation for Freedmen's Hospital of actual cost of heat and light furnished, $80,000;

For the construction and equipment of a chemistry building, $150,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such building and equipment at a cost not to exceed $390,000;

Total, Howard University, $390,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah whether this is the same amount appropriated last year?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the same amount, practically, that was appropriated last year. It was submitted by the Bureau of the Budget and recommended by the department, but it went out in the House on a point of order, as it has done for many years.

Mr. OVERMAN. Pretty nearly 10 years.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment, but I merely wished to make sure that it was at least equal to the amount appropriated last year.

Mr. SMOOT. It is practically the same amount we appropriated before.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I was out of the Chamber at the beginning of the reading of the bill. Am I correct in my understanding that a unanimous-consent agreement has been reached by which the power matter contained in the Flathead Reservation provision will not be taken up to-day?

Mr. SMOOT. It goes over until to-morrow.

Mr. OVERMAN. An item for the erection of buildings was included in last year's appropriation for Howard University, was it not?

Mr. SMOOT. There was an item for a medical department building.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is that a part of this appropriation?

Mr. SMOOT. No; this is for a new building. The amount is practically what was appropriated last year. We are not asking for any additional appropriation for the medical building. Does the Senator desire that the amendment shall go over?

Mr. OVERMAN. I would like to have it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will go over.

RECESS

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 4, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, February 3, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God and our Heavenly Father, Thou who are infinite in love and wisdom, in the spirit of the Teacher of Galilee we would draw near to Thee; help us to do so. We come to receive that inspiration which shall enable us to go through the duties of this day with dignity, courage, and patience. As we discharge our obligations may we weave characters on the great loom of life's activities that shall be above reproach and can be spoken of without apology and above a whisper. Permit nothing to interfere with the direct study of the problems of our Republic. Arouse within us the unquenchable ambition, in public duty and in private life, to be led and directed by Thee, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2301), to create a commission to be known as the commission for the enlarging of the Capitol Grounds, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the followng title:

H. J. Res. 112. Joint resolution to amend the act of May 29, 1884, as amended, the act of February 2, 1903, and the act of March 3, 1905, as amended, to include poultry within their provisions.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

A bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred to the appropriate committee, as follows:

S. 2301. An act to create a commission to be known as the commission for the enlarging of the Capitol Grounds, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 87, introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVENPORT], was referred to the Rules Committee. The parliamentarian submitted the report to me, and I thought at the time it belonged to the Rules Committee. Since that time I have taken it up and submitted it to the committee, and we think it properly belongs to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Foreign Affairs Committee has asked for it. I ask unanimous consent that House Resolution 87 be rereferred from the Rules Committee to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 87

Whereas the Department of State is the sole executive agency upon which the Government relies for the efficient conduct of its relations with other Governments and for the protection of American interests throughout the world; and

Whereas the international duties and responsibilities of the United States have greatly increased in recent years, thereby throwing large additional burdens upon the Department of State: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs is authorized and requested to confer with the President of the United States and the Secretary of State and ascertain whether or not the Department of State is adequately equipped for the task which confronts it, both in its foreign and domestic services, in respect to funds, material equipment, personnel and organization, and other facilities, and whether or not it is handicapped by legislative or other limitations; and to report to the present Congress the committee's findings, together with recommendations for such action as may be deemed essential in the public interest.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the resolution that has just been read be rereferred from the Committee on Rules to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, is this a resolution introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVENPORT]?

Mr. SNELL. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files evidence submitted in support of H. R. 5605, Sixty-ninth Congress, for the relief of Sam H. Allen, no adverse report having been made thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the appropriation for Howard University.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, under consent for extension of remarks granted me a few days ago, I desire to state that I favor the adoption of the conference report which recommends that the House concur in the Senate amendment to the Interior Department appropriation bill providing for an appropriation of $390,000 for the support of Howard University, and I voted for the amendment when it was before the House for vote.

I voted for this amendment for the reason that I am favorable to extending the opportunities of education to all people, regardless of race, color, or other conditions. It is my firm conviction that no public moneys expended bring greater results than those expended upon education, and it is also my firm conviction that Howard University, maintained for the higher education of men and women of the colored race, is and has been doing a great and beneficial work.

Mr. Speaker, in my own congressional district, and especially in the city of Tulsa, I have had occasion to observe some of the results of this university. I am personally acquainted with a considerable number of men and women of the colored race who have graduated at Howard University. Among them are ministers, doctors, lawyers, dentists, pharmacists, and teachers educated at this university. They have successfully practiced their professions among those of their own race, and by precept and example have made a substantial contribution to the health, industry, morality, temperance, and right living among the less fortunate of their own race. They and the others in other communities who have done likewise are to be congratulated, and in my opinion we are taking a step forward when we make this appropriation and encourage others of their race to follow their example.

The white people owe a duty to the black people. That duty is to do them no harm, to stimulate their industry, and encourage them to be temperate, sanitary, moral, honest, and useful; and to encourage them to be led by educated, honest, industrious, right-thinking, right-living, God-fearing men and women.

Mr. Speaker, the education of the colored people is not a question in which is solely involved what is best for the Negro race, but there is also involved the questions as to what is best for the white people. The negro people, numbering millions, are among us; they are a part of our country and are to remain a part of our permanent population, and I have no desire to see them or any other part of our population deprived of or denied any educational facilities. I think, on the contrary, that it is much better that we do things to bring not only the colored people but all others in any way that we can to a higher standard of citizenship. Nothing will tend to this more than extending opportunity for higher education.

Congress has been making this appropriation for nearly one-half of a century. The money granted is a small amount when consideration is given to the purpose for which it is appropriated.

All the States have not made adequate provision for the higher education of negroes, and in Howard University we have a first-class institution devoted exclusively to the better training of negroes in the trades and professions. Instead of requiring negroes, who are hungry for higher education and for instruction in the trades and professions, to get their training in second-class State institutions, why not maintain a first-class negro university which is capable of developing trained leaders for the Negro race and where the negroes can be educated among and by members of their own race?

I therefore voted to approve the report of the conference committee, which means that the pending bill, when it becomes a law, will carry an appropriation for the Howard University. The House having failed to grant this appropriation, the Senate added an amendment authorizing the appropriation. I favor this Senate amendment, and I am therefore voting to approve the conference report.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10286, the War Department appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10286, which the Clerk will read by title.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10286) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the very elaborate, full, and careful explanation of this bill made by the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR], acting chairman of the subcommittee, will make it unnecessary for me to occupy the time of the House to any great extent.

Before making any reference to the bill I do not feel that I could preface my remarks to a better purpose than to express the regret I feel, with all his associates, that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], our chairman, has been unable to assist in the preparation of this bill on account of illness.

I deplore also his intention to retire from public life. I am sure all his colleagues on this floor, Democrats as well as Republicans, hope for his speedy restoration to health. His colleagues all hope that in the near future he may again give us the benefit of his services. [Applause.]

I have served with Mr. ANTHONY ever since I have been in Congress. I served with him on the Committee on Military Affairs and also on the Appropriations Committee, and I can bear testimony that no man in this House has rendered any more valuable service than has the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY]. [Applause.]

I served with him when he was on the minority side and I served with him when he was on the majority side; I served with him in the war time and I served with him in the peace time, and I have always found him the same patriotic public servant under all circumstances and under all conditions. [Applause.]

I am sure that I voice the sentiment of the Democratic side of the House when I say this much, and it gives me pleasure to make this sentiment a part of the records of this House.

I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] when they say that the appropriations for our Military Establishment should be stabilized. I know that that has been the purpose of the subcommittee for the last several sessions. We have endeavored in each appropriation bill to create an appropriation that would stabilize the size and the condition of the Army. It is destructive of the morale of the Army to be constantly fluctuating in its support. It prevents continuity of development to be constantly changing our policy. I therefore thoroughly agree with the gentleman of New York and the gentleman of Illinois. In this matter we are obliged to be largely controlled by the Budget. The President of the United States is the Commander in Chief of both the Army and the Navy, and he speaks through the Budget. When he makes recommendations as to the necessity for appropriations along certain lines, it is natural that the committees of this House should follow as far as practical the suggestions that he has made; and when he recommends that certain other appropriations are necessary, we are forced to adopt his recommendations unless there is some very good reason why they should not be adopted. This bill is based on the recommendations of the Budget. I concur in almost all of the provisions. It is not the bill, possibly, that originally I would have drawn; but in all legislation there is necessarily a certain amount of give and take, and the compromise that is effected is generally the best legislation.

The grand total of the bill, both military and nonmilitary, reaches something like $400,000,000; and when we take that enormous sum in connection with the proposed appropriations for the Navy, carrying something like a billion dollars, we are carrying an enormous burden and the people have a right to know that it is necessary.

I do not believe that the people will begrudge the expenditure of this amount or any other amount that may be necessary to protect the vast wealth of this country and insure the liberties of the people of this country. All that they require is that the money should be carefully appropriated and that when appropriated it should be expended in the best and most economical manner.

The Army is composed of three parts, in general terms. We have the Regular Army, as it is called; we have the Organized Reserve; and we have the National Guard. Heretofore we have always provided for an Army of 118,750 men and 12,000 officers in the Regular Army. We have heretofore provided liberally for the Organized Reserve and for the National Guard. In this bill we continue this policy and we carry the appropriations which provide for a Regular Army of 12,000 officers and 118,000 men. In the Organized Reserve there are about 125,000 men. In the civil military training camps there are about 35,000 men, and in the National Guard there are close to 190,000 men, so that we have an Army of fair size, even for a population of 120,000,000 and for an empire, continental and insular, as vast as ours. The Regular Army is essential for purposes for which the National Guard and the Organized Reserve could not be used. The Regular Army is obliged to do the regular work of the Army. They protect the sea-coast defenses and the foreign possessions, and it is essential that we should have a Regular Army of the size that we have fixed in this bill.

We must remember that the 12,000 officers which we provide are not utilized for the Regular Army alone. They form an essential part of the several hundred thousand citizen soldiers who are called into the service. They officer and train the National Guard of 190,000 men, and they train and officer the Organized Reserve and also the civil military camps. It is as essential to have trained officers for these purposes as it is to have trained officers with the Regular Army. Therefore, it is not a fair criticism to say that we have 12,000 officers for 118,000 men. We have these 12,000 officers to discharge important functions and duties with the men that we are training and preparing to render service in case of national emergency.

We have in some respects altered the Budget in regard to the strength of the Regular Army. There was what was known as a munitions battalion of 250 men trained in the colleges at a cost of $1,500 for each man. This is proposed to be increased from time to time until it reaches 400 men. These men discharge no sort of function for the Army. They are under no obligation whatever in regard to that. They come in and they go out as it suits their convenience or their interest, and it does seem to us to be a far-fetched idea that these men could serve any useful purpose by the mere fact that perhaps some of them in time of war would form a contact between the Army proper and the business organizations that we would need in our service. So that feature has been eliminated.

Another feature to which I direct attention is that we have counted as a part of the 118,000 men the 1,240 men who are to be selected as a part of the air increment. The provision in the law is that 1,240 men should be each year trained as a part of the Air Corps and that that number should be independent of the Regular Army. That would amount in the five years during which this increment was supposed to run to something like 6,000 men. I speak in the rough. Those men were to be independent of the number of Regular Army and not count as a part of the Regular Army, but the Budget has undertaken to make them a part of the 118,000 men, and, as I said, we have followed the Budget, on the ground that the President, for whom the Budget speaks, is best informed whether or not the Regular Army could absorb this number without injury to the regular service.

There is another feature in respect to the Regular Army to which I direct attention, and that is to the miserable housing that is provided for the men in the barracks. I know that many Members of the House have visited these camps, and I know that they will bear testimony to what I say, namely, that the housing conditions at the Army posts are simply shocking to the better sentiment of everyone familiar with them.

In many of the posts the men are housed in old shacks that were built hastily during the war. They were built in many instances for entirely different purposes from that for which they are now used. They are veritable fire traps. They have been denied the benefit of any improvements during all these years. They are rat traps. Again and again we find in the newspapers some notice concerning a destructive fire at one of these barracks. The money that was set specially aside for these posts has all been used. The fund I refer to is the fund arising from the sale of surplus property. It was provided in the law that the proceeds from the sale of the surplus property should be dedicated to construction purposes at the posts. The last appropriation bill appropriated the last dollar that was in the Treasury for that purpose, and this bill therefore carries an independent appropriation of something like $7,000,000, in round numbers, for that purpose.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. CLAGUE. Is it not a fact that our subcommittee recommended all that we could under the authorization?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. I am glad to be corrected on that point. The subcommittee recommended the $7,000,000, which was all that the Committee on Military Affairs had authorized to be expended along that line.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And the Committee on Military Affairs has authorized all that the War Department has asked for.

Mr. HARRISON. After this $7,000,000 has been expended that we appropriate for this bill, or after all the money has been applied that was in the Treasury to the credit of this special fund, there will at the end of the fiscal year remain unprovided for 3,750 officers, 3,058 noncommissioned officers, and 20,195 enlisted men, for whom no permanent housing has been provided.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. Referring to the statement that the Committee on Military Affairs has reported all that the War Department has asked for, we should remember that General Summerall, when he practically campaigned over the country last year in the interest of better housing for our Army, was suddenly recalled to Washington, and is it not a fair deduction to conclude that there is some pressure outside of the War Department that is limiting the recommendations that come from the War Department?

Mr. HARRISON. The record shows that we have expended all the money we are authorized to expend, according to the report of this committee, and still all these men are unprovided for, and it shows that there must be something wrong somewhere. If the administration had desired to make rectification of these conditions, General Summerall would not have been recalled from the Pacific coast. It is the false economy for which the administration stands that is back of the continuation of these conditions. A great expenditure will sooner or later be necessary, but then this administration will have passed out and the succeeding administration will be charged with the expenditures, which will be greatly increased by the delay in making.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand that the Committee on Military Affairs right now is giving careful and sympathetic consideration to proposed legislation that will authorize sufficient appropriations to take care of these men in proper housing conditions.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] made a visit to each of these camps with this purpose in view.

Mr. BLAND. My understanding is that a priority list has come from the War Department, and they are merely reporting particular provisions for each year. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this fact, that in such a long-established place as Fortress Monroe, where there is an important military school, the officers attached to that school are living in war-time structures, whose roofs are not sufficient to protect them and their families from the rain.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; furthermore, their families are living side by side in shacks without proper privacy. In one of the war-time buildings two or more families will be housed separated by partitions of pasteboard character. Family home life is practically destroyed.

Mr. BLAND. Yes. They are living in fire traps of war-time construction. The necessary funds should be given, whereas no dollar has been appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. JAMES. There is no priority list furnished by the department to the Committee on Military Affairs, and there is no priority list pending in the House Military Committee now. Down there at Fortress Monroe, so far as the conditions are concerned, I understand they are deplorable. Hereafter there will be substantial structures erected to take care of the commissioned officers at Langley Field. I visited Panama and Langley Field, and in the next few months I want to go down to Fortress Monroe. There are only a few places in the South and West that I have not yet seen I want to repeat that there is no priority list sent to us by the War Department.

Mr. HARRISON. What were the conditions that the gentleman found at the various posts visited by him?

Mr. JAMES. There were some regiments in Panama that have nice quarters, and some regiments that have very poor quarters. The same applies to Camp Lewis. Of course, there were some places like Benning and Bragg in the new fields where the conditions were bad. So far as the Committee on Military Affairs is concerned, we shall have a very substantial bill for housing.

Mr. HARRISON. My impression is that at these posts the conditions are simply disgraceful.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I want to say that recently I visited a great number of the forts around New York, and in some of them the living conditions for the men and the noncommissioned officers are worse than the slums in New York City, and the officers entitled to decent quarters are getting the worst kind of accommodations. They are living there in these war-time shacks after having served for 20 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. I would like to be notified after I have used 15 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will notify the gentleman in 10 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mrs. ROGERS. I want to state that the conditions in Camp Devens, in my district, are extremely bad, both for the enlisted men and officers. Every year there is a fire, and there is great fear that the quarters for the officers and the barracks for the men will be quite wiped out.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the lady for that statement. I think that statement will be borne out by everyone who has visited these barracks.

We have provided in this bill an amount which I think is wholly inadequate and which is no economy whatever, because where we do not furnish quarters we must furnish commutation, and it is more expensive to furnish commutation than it is to pay for decent quarters. The soldiers in some cases have rectified conditions, where they were given the facilities so to do. However, in many cases they have not been furnished with paint, lumber, or the necessary materials which would be required to improve conditions. I may say that there has been a great deal of improvement by virtue of the money we appropriated last year, and I hope the money we appropriate this year will bring about a further improvement in these deplorable conditions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Whose fault is it that these conditions exist, which the gentleman is describing and with which I agree? Is it the fault of the War Department or Congress?

Mr. HARRISON. I think it is the fault of the War Department; that is, I will excuse the War Department and say it is the fault of the administration. The Budget prescribes a limitation upon the appropriations, and the officers dare not tell the truth about the conditions, because under the very Budget law they are forbidden to speak in favor of any appropriation that has not been allowed by the Budget.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. General Summerall regretted that he spoke about the matter, did he not?

Mr. HARRISON. General Summerall spoke the sentiment of this country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Then the gentleman does not agree with the President's reprimand of General Summerall for telling the truth about the matter?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not. I think he should be given the congressional medal.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that this committee has very generally throughout the hearings cross-questioned the officers who came before it as to the needs of the Army, regardless of what the Budget stated?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and we had to cross-question them, too. If we knew what to cross-question them on, we might get the information, but we are only volunteered such information as we can screw out of them by cross-examination. It is not their fault at all, because the law forbids it.

We have provided a certain sum of money for the purchase of furniture to go into these new buildings. There has been no appropriation made for the purchase of new furniture since 1922 or 1923. In this bill we have been liberal in the amount we have provided for the purchase of new furniture. I think it would be adding insult to injury to place these men in these shacks and not give them sufficient furniture with which to make these shacks habitable.

Now, in regard to the question of horses. We have cut down the Budget estimate and we have gone below, I believe, the 1928 amount. If that is not so, I will ask to be corrected.

Mr. TABER. The amount carried in this bill is the same as the amount carried in the 1928 bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Then we have made the same appropriation that we made in 1928. Some criticism seems to have been made in regard to Army officers having horses fed at public expense. I desire to say that is strictly in accordance with the law. I have the statute here, which provides that we are required to furnish sustenance to the horses of Army officers. I read the statute, as follows:

The number of horses for which forage, bedding, shoeing, shelter, and medicines may be allowed are as follows: To a major general, 3 horses; to a brigadier general, 3 horses; to a colonel, 2 horses; to a lieutenant colonel, 2 horses; to a major, 2 horses; to a captain (mounted), 2 horses; to a lieutenant (mounted), 2 horses; to an adjutant, 2 horses.

All officers below the rank of major must buy their own horses. In this bill we have made the usual provision and such provision has been carried in appropriation bills ever since I have been a member of the Military Affairs Committee and of the Appropriations Committee.

For the Air Corps we have made, in my judgment, ample provision. We have appropriated $24,000,000 for the Air Corps, and at the end of 1929 it is expected we shall have over 1,300 new planes in the field.

There has been a great deal of complaint about the uniforms. I have received a great many communications from colleges in regard to the uniforms. We provide every soldier in the ranks with his uniform and we have given the boys who are in the schools the same uniforms that we give our soldiers, but we have said that if they want any better we will give them the money that the uniform costs and they could provide it themselves. It seems to me that is absolutely fair and just. Why should we give the boys in colleges any better uniforms than we give the ordinary soldier, who is discharging his duty as a soldier?

In regard to military training, we have increased the number to be trained at civilian military training camps by 5,000. The Budget provided for 30,000, but we have increased the number to 35,000. It seems to me that is sufficient, especially in view of the fact that that is the policy we have adopted in the past, and, as was suggested on the floor yesterday, it is the policy we should maintain, a stabilized policy.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Is the gentleman now referring to the civilian military training camps?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Of course, the gentleman does not mean to inform the committee that you have increased the number over those who have been trained this year?

Mr. HARRISON. We have increased it over the Budget.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. But you have not increased it over the provision which was made last year.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that; but the Budget comes here from the President and says that all we ought to train are 30,000, while we have provided for 35,000, which is the number settled upon as the proper number to be trained.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. This is a pretty important proposition, and may I ask the gentleman if he thinks we should stop at 35,000? Why should 35,000 be the mystic figure when you consider that every year we have increased the number of youths trained in the civilian military training camps, and the project, as I understand it, was to increase it, or has been, unless the precedent is made now, year by year until we get up to at least 50,000; in fact, the previous project had been to increase step by step until we had 100,000 of these splendid boys under training.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the gentleman think that the Budget, which speaks for the President, ought to come here and ask for it? Why should he put the burden on Congress?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Of course, it goes without saying that the Budget can place no limitation upon us.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand; but the Budget speaks for the President, and the President is the head of the Army and of the Navy. He speaks authoritatively on matters of that character and we have gone over the Budget number by 5,000 men. We could, of course, increase it indefinitely; and I will say to the gentleman we could not spend money better.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. That is exactly what I wished to develop from the gentleman—we could not spend money better than in this form of training.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The gentleman, of course, knows that 35,000 will be almost 5,000 less than we actually trained last year?

Mr. HARRISON. I understand there was some particular reason for that last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. We have increased the appropriations for the Organized Reserves nearly $400,000. We have not given them all they asked. We could not do this, but we have given them nearly $400,000 in addition to what we gave them last year; and in our judgment about 16,000 men will be trained and this will probably be all that will apply for training.

In regard to the National Guard, we have increased this item over $1,000,000 and we hear no complaint.

Just one word on the subject of the rifle teams. We provided in the last appropriation bill that these rifle matches should be held every two years. This is an off year. The cost of having one of these matches this year would have been $600,000. It does seem to us that the plan we adopted in the last appropriation bill of having them biennially will satisfy all the needs of the Government and the $600,000 can be applied better to other uses of the Army. We have therefore followed the policy which we adopted at the last session.

Mr. Chairman, this bill, as I have said, provides for what I think is a compact, serviceable army for the Organized Reserves, National Guard, and the Regular Army.

I do not believe it was ever the intention of the Congress to authorize the use of our military forces in any warlike demonstration without the authority of Congress. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMBS] here on the floor eloquently expressed what is really in the hearts of the American people in regard to our proceedings in Nicaragua. There is no precedent in history for such a procedure.

It is true that President Wilson ordered General Pershing, with the consent of Mexico, to invade Mexican territory in pursuit of a bandit who had killed American citizens on American soil. There was no pretense, therefore, of anything involving the application of the Monroe doctrine, and when we had pursued them for a little distance into Mexican territory Mexico ordered the Army out of Mexico and we immediately obeyed and came back to this country. Again, at Vera Cruz, it was said that the Mexicans had insulted the flag and we sent the Navy to Vera Cruz and seized Vera Cruz with the purpose of compelling Mexico to apologize for the insult she had given the flag. When Mexico would not apologize, we came home. There was no pretense there of any application of the Monroe doctrine to that situation.

In the case of Venezuela, we never attempted to dictate to Venezuela anything with regard to her internal affairs, but Great Britain had undertaken to make certain claims against the territory of Venezuela and had refused to submit them to arbitration, and it was on that point, directly involving the Monroe doctrine, that President Cleveland protested and protested with effect. But I deny there has been any precedent whatever for this country going into any of these southern Republics and undertaking to settle their presidential contests. [Applause.]

What have we got to do with who is elected President of Nicaragua? It seems to me that, according to Latin America, the man who is in is President and the man who is out is a bandit; and when the bandit gets in he is the President, and the man who was in is a bandit. According to Mr. Will Rogers, a presidential election is rendered easy by shooting rival candidates. We have no more right to go into these territories and undertake to control their elections than they have the right to come into our territory and control our elections, and, for my part, as I have said before on this floor, I will gladly vote for any amendment providing that not a dollar of these appropriations shall be applied to the sending of troops into any foreign country to slaughter or be slaughtered unless such action is sanctioned by the Congress. I think this would be entirely within constitutional limits. Every day transports are bringing back our boys injured, and some of them to be buried, and every day we are spending thousands of dollars to clear, as it is said, Nicaraguan territory of bandits. Mr. Chairman, I desire to voice here my protest against such a procedure. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi is about to make a very informative speech, one that I think the whole House ought to hear, and I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The doors were closed, the Sergeant at Arms ordered to notify absent Members, the Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill H. R. 10286, the War Department appropriation bill, and finding itself without a quorum, it caused the roll to be called, and 338 Members had answered to their names, and he reported the names of those absent, to be entered in the Journal and the RECORD.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, a secker for information about the War Department will have to go to some other source than the bill under consideration to find it. It is too vague and indefinite for that. Of course, a reading of the 1,500 pages of the hearings would shed light on this department's activities, but this is a task that the average Member has not time to undertake. The report of the committee also sheds considerable light upon it. The able statement of Mr. BARBOUR, the chairman of this subcommittee, likewise is full of information. Still there are activities of our Military Establishment that are not set forth, and some of them I will present to you.

Our Army is generally spoken of as a small affair—a skeleton organization, if you please—one that could be easily built to in the time of national stress. This may have been true at one time, but it is not true now. The skeleton has lots of meat on its bones. In fact, it has become rather corpulent.

The Army can be well divided into six parts—the Regular Army, the federalized National Guard, the Organized Reserves, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, the citizens' military training corps, and national rifles matches. The last five named of these are spoken of as civilian organizations. They are, however, promoted, controlled, and instructed by Regular Army officers and enlisted men—about 2,000 officers and about 25,000 enlisted men being directly or indirectly in charge of their military training and instruction. In the main, these so-called civilian organizations are well versed in the art of warfare. They constitute a fine lot of men. The Regular Army officers largely in charge of them know what they are after. They have worked up programs of enlargement ranging from 5 to 15 years, and all of these organizations are growing in size, power, and strength like weeds in a farmer's field. Their influence is extensive and their wishes are highly respected by public officials, and with continued growth and enlargement their influence will grow with their increased size.

The beginning of another unit was proposed in this bill; in fact, the unit has now the sanction of the law. It is called the munitions unit. Congress authorized it by an amendment to the national defense act, which was approved June 8, 1926. This subcommittee, however, saw fit to prevent its beginning. The purpose of this unit was to take young men after graduation from college and give them 3 months' training in the Regular Army, then send them to college for 9 months and after this to put them in the factories of the country for 6 months, giving in all 18 months' specialized training in factory work and management, and in the event of hostilities these men would become officers and would take charge of the factories of our country and operate them under the supervision of the Regular Army. It was proposed to begin with 250 such students and later to bring them up to 400 and thence to a larger figure. The law says that one-half of 1 per cent of the enlisted strength of the Army and 2 per cent of officers can be trained annually, and with our Regular Army establishment at its present size, this would provide approximately 840 students to be trained annually and with the retirement figure at 64 years, it would be possible to have about 34,500 such officers. Of course, this figure is the outstanding one and should be reduced by one-half on account of deaths, resignations, and other causes, but even with 17,250 such officers its size and expense would be enormous. This scheme has never been tried out. No country has it now or has undertaken it. The student trained may or may not follow the work for which he was specially trained. If he did not, his training was wasted. If he did pursue the work for which he was trained, it would be foolish to let him contract with himself in the purchase of supplies for the Government or to permit him to adopt work standards, with the War Department backing him in his every whim. Aside from this, it is a dangerous undertaking in a Republic to put its factories, including management and men, under the control of the Military Establishment.

The Regular Army has an enlisted strength of 118,750 men with 12,000 officers, and to the enlisted strength should be added the Philippine Scouts with 6,060 men. There are 1,215 warrant officers. There are also 165 retired officers on active duty. There are also thousands of civilians working for the Regular Army. Their number is becoming legion. Counting all officers, their number is 13,380, and the enlisted strength, including the Philippine Scouts, is 124,810. Of course, to the Regular Army goes the lion's share of the appropriation carried in this bill.

The actual enlisted strength of the Army is about 5,000 more than it was in 1926 and 1927. The officers are about the same. The actual increased size of the Army can easily absorb the 1,248 enlisted men that were added to the Air Corps in 1928 and the 1,248 added to the Air Corps in this bill. Personally I take it that the Air Corps increases the efficiency and effectiveness of the Army, and enlisted men who have been used in other ways have an increased value when they are transferred from a less effective service to one more modern and more serviceable in a military way. There is no loss, therefore, by the transfer, but a gain.

The federalized National Guard has grown by leaps and bounds since the war. In 1920 it had 1,939 officers and 47,019 enlisted men. On June 30, 1927, there were 12,010 officers and 182 warrant officers and 168,750 enlisted men, a total of 180,920 men. This bill carries an appropriation sufficient to increase this number to 188,000, of whom 13,630 are officers. Next year, according to General Summerall, 190,000 is the program. Gen. C. C. Hammond, Chief of the Militia Bureau, says that after that their immediate program will seek a total aggregate strength of 210,521 National Guard troops. The national defense act authorized a federalized National Guard strength of 435,000. I dare say that it will not be very long before this will be their goal.

The federalized guard is no small affair. It is a highly efficient organization. This bill provides for 48 drills a year and 15 days' intensive training at camps. Officers and men participating in these drills and taking this intensive training are paid for doing it. Quite a number of the members of the guard have yearly status and are paid accordingly. The guard is trained just the same as the Regular Army. It is organized along the same lines. It has an Air Corps, Tank Corps, engineers, field artillery, chemical warfare sections, observation sections, and so forth. Three hundred and ten of its officers and 125 enlisted men go to service schools and are there given special training. Three hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars is provided for this schooling. Guard affairs and the instruction of its officers and men are in the charge of Regular Army officers and enlisted men. One thousand and forty-four Regular Army officers and 1,316 enlisted men are specially detailed for this work. Of these specially detailed enlisted men 727 are sergeant instructors.

It has a Cavalry branch, and on March 1, 1927, had 10,420 horses. Nine thousand are federally owned and 1,400 are State owned. It has more now. It has 19 organized air squadrons, with 326 officers and 766 men. They each averaged 75 flying hours last year. Pilots in the Regular Army average around 200 hours a year. The guard acquired recently 46 primary training planes, 49 observation planes, and 22 special service or advance training planes; and this bill provides for the purchase of 15 service planes and 25 special service or advance training planes. It had on November 30, 1927, 1,266 Artillery units, of which 684 were motor drawn. These units include harbor defense, antiaircraft artillery; in fact, practically all kinds of modern artillery guns. They have ambulances, automobiles, tanks, tractors, trucks, searchlights, and motorized vehicles up to 12,666 in number as of December 31, 1927. In addition to these, the War Department has on hand 9,998 modern-drawn vehicles of various classes for free issue to the guard, and which will later be transferred to it.

The total cost to the federalized guard during the past four years has been around $52,000,000 per year. This bill carries $31,659,101, and with the State contributions and free issues the costs will be over $51,000,000. This does not mean that the appropriation is less—free issues are merely falling off.

The per capita cost of members of the guard to the Federal Government is $175.53 and to the States $77.15, or a total of $252.68. These figures do not include pay of Regular Army officers and enlisted men and many other items that could be properly charged for by the Government. Neither do they include free issues running into the millions. The federalized guard has on hand property of estimated value of $115,000,000, and most of this property is free issues. The real per capita cost of members of the guard is nearer $500 or more.

I believe I have already spoken long enough to convince the skeptical that the federalized National Guard is a highly efficient organization and growing more so daily. In some respects it is equally efficient with the Regular Army.

The Organized Reserves is largely an officer organization. It is an after-the-war thought. Its growth has also been rapid. On June 30, 1926, it had 68,232 officers and no enlisted men. On June 30, 1926, it had 103,829 officers and 5,775 enlisted men. On June 30, 1927, it had 110,014 officers and 5,735 enlisted men. Its officer strength increased 6,185 in that year, the last one for which available figures are possible.

Certain of these officers, to wit, 16,382, have been or will be given training out of funds appropriated in the 1928 bill, and of this number 627 will have more than 15 days' training. The bill now being considered is supposed to provide 15 days' training for 16,000 men and more than 15 days' training for 600 men. This committee increased the number to be trained over that recommended by the Budget by 875 officers. This bill also provides for the training of 110 Air Corps officers. They will receive one year's instruction. This number will soon increase, until the number of 330 is annually trained, and shortly afterwards the number will go to 550 annually. Reserve officers are also given correspondence courses. Under this practice up-to-date military instruction is provided to them.

These officers are likewise divided into various units, the same as the Regular Army and the federalized guard. They have Regular Army officers totaling 413 and 524 enlisted men assigned to their instruction and other activities. Of course, members of the Organized Reserves are officers to start with, and it is not necessary to furnish them with intensive training at all times.

This organization is likewise growing. In 1920 the number of officers was 68,000. It remained at this figure for two years. In 1923 it went to 76,000; 1924, 81,000; 1925, 95,000; 1926, 103,000; 1927, 110,000, in round numbers. The increase in 1927 over 1926 was 7,000, and these increases will continue at about the same rate until the goal of 125,000 is reached. This will all be done in spite of the fact that only 65,833 of these officers can possibly be used in the mobilization of three and a half million men. This is not my statement. It is the testimony of War Department officials. They are War Department studies and calculations.

The Reserve Officers' Training Corps are those young men going to college who are trained at college in the science of war under officers of the War Department. They are given four years of military training under officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, and certain of the advanced students go to Regular Army camps, where they are given 15 days' intensive training. This bill provides for the summer training of 7,200 such advanced students.

There are now 125,141 young men who are in this Reserve Officers' Training Corps. This is an increase of 9,000 over 1928. These young men are given subsistence allowance at school and are also provided with uniforms. They are also divided into infantry, cavalry, field artillery, coast artillery, air corps, engineers, signal corps, and other corps units just the same as the Regular Army. They are young men well trained in the art of warfare by 685 Regular Army officers, 114 retired Regular Army officers, 20 warrant officers, 502 active noncommissioned officers, 26 retired noncommissioned officers, and 388 other enlisted men, all from the Regular Army.

No age limit is placed on these young men. Practically all of them are from 14 to 21 years of age.

This bill increases the uniform allowance to the advance classes. This is done to popularize military work in the schools and to induce the young college man to take the advance course and otherwise increase the number of these officer students and ultimately popularize the military idea.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. What is the advance course?

Mr. COLLINS. The last two years.

General Summerall stated that it was his hope by doing this to—> stabilize the units and induce the young men to take the last two years * * * we want them to have something that will inculcate pride and make them proud to wear the uniform.

The citizens' military training camps are provided for the training of citizens generally. This activity is regarded by the War Department as the least vital from a standpoint of national defense. They are trained at Regular Army camps. Thirty-eight thousand five hundred and ninety-seven were trained in 1927. This bill provides for the training of 35,000, an increase of 5,000 over that recommended by the Budget. An intensive campaign has to be carried on to secure the necessary number of trainees. Army officers and enlisted men are in charge of this training, all of which is paid for by the Government out of funds appropriated by Congress. One thousand three hundred and eighty-five Regular Army officers and 11,751 enlisted men have been used in connection with the yearly training of these citizens. They are likewise provided with hostesses to look after their social affairs and activities and as antidotes against homesickness. The citizens' military training corps likewise has an ambitious program. Captain Lord testifying stated that the plan is to ultimately provide for the training of 100,000 such citizens; that he hopes to reach 60,000 by 1930 or 1931.

Rifle matches are not included in this bill, but this activity will go on in 1930 and afterwards every two years under present War Department policies. However, a bill has recently passed the House providing for these matches every year. They will cost in the neighborhood of a million dollars. The number includes 34 civilian teams of 13 men each, or 442 men. All others that attend these matches belong to the Regular Army or some other citizen branch of it, or to the Navy. Some belonging to these citizens' rifle clubs range in age between 60 and 70 years. These civilian teams come from rifle clubs all over the country.

It will be seen from the statements that I have made that we train them almost from the cradle to the grave in military science and tactics. The total number in all of the establishments is over 600,000, an army very much larger in size and equipment than the popular notion. It must be conceded, however, that some in these War Department citizens' organizations are there purely for propaganda purposes. However, this does not matter. We are face to face with the fact that we have a Military Establishment of over 600,000 men, and its gain over 1928 will be in excess of 22,000 officers and men.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I will.

Mr. SPEAKS. How many officers are there in the Regular Establishment?

Mr. COLLINS. Thirteen thousand three hundred and eighty, all told.

Mr. SPEAKS. How many in the National Guard?

Mr. COLLINS. Thirteen thousand six hundred and thirty.

Mr. SPEAKS. One hundred and eighty-five thousand enlisted men and 13,000 officers in the National Guard?

Mr. COLLINS. No; 165,000 enlisted men and 13,630 officers; but you are taking only two branches.

Mr. SPEAKS. I understand that; but the primary reliance in our national defense system is the National Guard and the Regular Army?

Mr. COLLINS. And the gentleman thinks the others ought to be abolished?

Mr. SPEAKS. No; but the gentleman stated that the skeleton organization is the basis for an Army of three and a half million with about 90,000 officers.

Mr. COLLINS. No; I said that in the mobilization of three and a half million men the War Department would use only 65,000 of the 110,000 reserve officers. I do not know anything about the truthfulness of the statement. I do not know whether it is right or wrong, but I know that the War Department makes it.

Mr. SPEAKS. I want to get into the RECORD the actual facts. The gentleman says the War Department's estimate is that 65,000 reserve officers would be required in connection with 12,000 Regular Army officers and 13,000 National Guard officers to officer an Army of three and a half million men.

Mr. COLLINS. No. Personally I do not know what officers they are taking into consideration, except that they state that with the available officers we have in the Regular Army, the National Guard, and other branches, they would use only 65,000 of the 110,000 reserve officers.

Mr. SPEAKS. If that be true, then with your 65,000 and your 12,000——

Mr. COLLINS. If the gentleman has any quarrel with anyone, it is with the War Department and not with me.

Mr. SPEAKS. I merely want to get the facts. Sixty-five thousand officers from the reserves, with 13,000 from the National Guard and 12,000 from the Regular Army, would be 90,000 officers for an Army of 3,500,000 men, according to the gentleman's figures, which actually would be less than half the number required.

Mr. COLLINS. They are not my figures; they are the War Department figures. However, the gentleman does not mention all officers. There are 125,000 Reserve Officers' Training Corps students that would possibly become officers; also those that would come from training camps.

Mr. SPEAKS. According to the figures the gentleman is quoting.

Mr. COLLINS. They are War Department figures, taken from the hearings on this bill. I am assuming that the War Department knows how it would get its officers—where they would come from and how they would be secured, and that they know that only 65,000 of these reserve officers could be used.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman has indicated his opposition to the force that is being maintained, and which is to be provided for by this bill. I ask the gentleman whether the bill as it stands is as it is, as the result of differences in the subcommittee in its view upon this issue which he has stated, or is to be accounted for by the fact that it is based on existing legislation.

Mr. COLLINS. Principally on existing legislation. However, I do not agree with my colleagues on increases in the size of our Military Establishment, and I also differ with them in many other items carried throughout the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Therefore the subcommittee simply felt obliged to accept the requirements of existing legislation.

Mr. COLLINS. In the main that was true. Much legislation, however, could not be followed without imposing onerous burdens on taxpayers and the Budget recognizes this and the Appropriations Committee does, too.

It is larger than I think we need. Much larger than I think is necessary. More than half of them are officers, and a large number of these officers would not and could not be used in the mobilization for war of three and a half million men. There are just too many of them. I ask the Congress what is the good sense of blindly carrying on with the present program? The public wants a Military Establishment of reasonable size, but why maintain a top-heavy organization that carries much unusable material? Why not eliminate these unnecessary expenses? Why not maintain a skeleton military organization as we pretend we do? If we are bent on building up the world's largest military establishment, let us admit it and not try to fool ourselves and the American people.

I can see the logic in the reasoning of men who want our country to possess the world's largest Navy. I do not agree with them, but they can justly argue that this is necessary in order to keep trade routes to the world open. I can not, however, see the necessity of vieing with Great Britain, France, Russia, and Italy in maintaining large military establishments. I can see the logic in the course of these nations. They feel that such organizations are necessary to their safety because they are surrounded with powerful possible enemies and that an army is therefore necessary to prevent invasion of their territory. But this necessity does not exist with us. We have an establishment—if the figures contained in the Statesmen's Yearbook for 1927 are true—that is larger than that of Great Britain and apparently larger than that of Italy and Russia. Only France's establishment seems to exceed our Army in size.

I hope Members of Congress will carefully consider these statements. I think it is necessary that they do so, otherwise a military sentiment will soon grow up in our Republic whose power and influence will be too large to cope with, a sentiment not in keeping with American traditions and ideals. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, on the 19th of January my colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] delivered a very instructive speech during the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill. There appeared in the Lexington (Ky.) Herald an editorial in regard to it. It consists principally of excerpts from this speech and some complimentary allusions to it. In view of that fact, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing this editorial.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert an editorial from the Lexington Herald, of date Tuesday, January 24, 1928, of which the Hon. Desha Breckinridge is editor, commenting on the speech made by Congressman FRED M. VINSON, on the independent offices appropriation bill on the 19th of January, 1928, which editorial is as follows:

Much is heard these days of bureaucracy. Bureaucratic tendencies of the Government are bewailed in some quarters. Yet as a practical proposition it seems difficult to meet new governmental duties in a more effective way than by the creation of a commission to perform the duties necessary. It is well, however, that the American citizen interested in the affairs of his Nation should have some understanding of what the independent agencies of the Government are.

It is doubtful if there ever has been presented a fairer or more definite outline of what Federal commissions are doing than was presented in Congress recently by Congressman FRED M. VINSON, of the ninth Kentucky district. Mr. VINSON was selected as a member of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives at the beginning of its session this year, and was assigned with four other members to the important subcommittee which conducted hearings and presented the measure known as the independent offices appropriation bill. This made appropriations for the use and maintenance of independent Government agencies, including such boards as the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Veterans' Bureau, the Tariff Commission, the Shipping Board, the Smithsonian Institution, the Radio Commission, Power Commission, the Federal Reserve Board, the Efficiency Bureau, the Federal Board for Vocational Education, the Employees' Compensation Commission, the Civil Service Commission, the Board of Tax Appeals, the Board of Mediation, the Alien Property Custodian, the Alaskan Relief Commission, the American Battle Monuments Commission, the Public Buildings and Public Parks Commission, the Geographical Board, the Housing Corporation, the Commission of Fine Arts, and other such agencies.

There are 26 independent boards listed in the measure as requiring funds for their own maintenance and for carrying out the purposes for which they were created.

Mr. VINSON's presentation gave a thorough, though necessarily brief, review of the work, the needs and the programs of these commissions. He saw fit to let the facts speak for themselves and his report is of such graphic nature that elaboration would have been unnecessary. While a complete summary of the report made need not be attempted here, there are a number of phases in the address of Mr. VINSON which challenge more than cursory attention.

In the first place, it is pointed out that the appropriation dealing with the maintenance of the Executive Offices is reduced to $91,280 less than that of last year. Ninety thousand dollars of this went during the past year to defray the expenses of litigation in the cancellation of oil leases. For the maintenance of the Executive Mansion and grounds the measure carries a slight increase, and there is a slight increase in the salaries for the Executive personnel. There is a decrease of $2,000 in the heating system, but it is explained by Mr. VINSON that the heat for the Executive Mansion is to be obtained from the State, War, and Navy Building. Of course, this saves the Treasury nothing, but, as Mr. VINSON says, "it is merely a matter of bookkeeping."

The American Battle Monuments Commission has been empowered by Congress to construct fitting memorials in Europe in honor of the soldier dead now sleeping on foreign soil and to commemorate their sacrifices for their country. The authorization for this work is $3,000,000. For the Arlington Memorial Bridge $2,300,000 is appropriated. The United States Board of Mediation shows decided reduction in salaries, but Mr. VINSON points out that this board is now paying $13,800 for rent, or at a rate of $1.94 per square foot for the space they occupy in a Washington office building. The Civil Service Commission pays $22,992 rent and the Board of Tax Appeals $57,000. This is suggestive and, although unacquainted with the situation, it would seem at this distance that if governmental agencies are paying such high rent as this the Government might profitably provide quarters for its own commissions and thereby make a saving.

Such commissions as the Civil Service Commission, the Radio Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Power Commission, and the Employees' Compensation Commission certainly do necessary work, and the appropriations recommended for them do not seem to be exorbitant.

In his discussion of the appropriation of $754,000 for the Tariff Commission, Mr. VINSON introduced a table showing the reports of the Tariff Commission to the President and the action of the President thereon. In presenting this table he merely explained, "I thought it might be interesting." It certainly is most interesting to the average believer in a tariff principally for revenue that the President has seen fit to make but very few reductions under the flexible tariff act. The tariff act gives to the President the right to make reductions for the good of the country. It was believed by many of the opponents of high protection that this authority would be used by the President to reduce some of the extravagant features of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act. It is found, however, that the only articles upon which the President has reduced tariff duties have been paint-brush handles, bob-white quail, and phenol.

On the matter of the Interstate Commerce Commission there seems to be a desire that sufficient funds be appropriated for this commission to carry forward its work of valuation, and there also is a decided desire that the commission may not be hampered so as to delay its decision upon the important question of freight rates now before it. Kentucky certainly is interested in seeing the freight-rate problem handled with dispatch.

In regard to the appropriation for the Veterans' Bureau, Mr. VINSON points out that while there is expected to be a reduction in the tubercular cases handled under the Veterans' Bureau, and there is a belief that the tubercular load has reached its peak, the neuropsychiatric load has not reached its peak. He, therefore, favors the appropriation for funds which will permit the immediate carrying forward of a hospitalization program. He points out that Kentucky is the center of a very large area that has no neuropsychiatric hospital facilities. Twice the World War Veterans' Committee has reported to the House a bill which would relieve this area. Once a separate bill for a Kentucky hospital was presented, and at the last session in the blanket bill there was provision for a $1,000,000 250-bed neuropsychiatric hospitalization in Kentucky. Mr. VINSON contends that if a neuropsychiatric veteran has a service-connected case he has been entitled to hospitalization all these years and is entitled to hospitalization now, and ought not to have to wait for two years or later for facilities. In Kentucky the need for such a hospital is known, and Congress certainly should not delay in meeting this need.

Mr. VINSON, honored as a young Member of Congress through appointment to the important Appropriations Committee, and further honored by appointment upon the subcommittee and through selection to present the report upon the activities of Federal boards, has rendered a national service in the clear and complete way in which he has presented the facts in so few words. The problems connected with these many governmental agencies must be considered in a practical way and from a businesslike standpoint.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall take only a moment or two in respect to the building-program situation. We did not have any building program until 1926. After the war our Army was a great deal larger than it had been before the war, and, of course, we did not have housing enough to take care of that. At one time in 1919 we had over 300,000 troops, and we were housing them in the same inefficient housing that they were being housed in before the housing program of $20,000,000, which was put through by the House Military Affairs Committee, was started. In 1920, on June 30, we had 184,000 men, and on June 30, 1921, we had 213,000 men. It took some time, as we went along with the establishment of this increased Army, to get to the point where we would know what we needed to do and what we needed to build. Just as soon as we got to that point our House Committee on Military Affairs took that in charge and brought in a bill which called for an appropriation of $20,000,000. We have done that in three years, and, with the experience that the War Department had at that time, we have gone ahead as fast as was practical, and as fast as we could put up the buildings in a successful way, so that they would be permanent. On top of that we have reduced the housing shortage by transferring troops to barracks which already existed, which were satisfactory in the last year, almost as much as we have increased the housing capacity of our barracks by reason of the housing program. I just wanted to call these facts to the attention of the House and to say that I believe that the program of the House Military Affairs Committee calls for providing additional housing just as soon as they can determine after this bill is passed and know just what more is needed to complete that program and to put us in shape where we are able to take care of our Army.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, the other day when the independent offices appropriation bill was under consideration in the House, I offered an amendment striking out the annual appropriation for the Government hotels, so called, calling the attention of the House to the fact that the property between here and the station was acquired a good many years ago by eminent domain, and brick buildings were torn down for the purpose of beautifying the Nation's Capital and in order that we might have a decent approach from the Union Station to the Capitol Building and the Capitol Grounds.

No sooner had that land been cleared and the grading commenced when the war broke out, and these Government hotels, so called, were erected, which never furnished accommodations to more than 1,800 women out of 40,000 women employed. It was stated at that time that it was only a temporary matter and that the buildings would last only three years. Now 10 years have elapsed since the armistice, and every year we have an appropriation for the continuance of these Government hotels on property that was acquired for the purpose of affording a decent approach from the Union Station to the Capitol.

The chairman of the subcommittee asked me if I wanted to turn these girls out on the streets to-morrow. I stated no; the bill did not go into effect until the 1st of July. I then asked him why the buildings were not torn down in accordance with the repeated promises of the Committee on Appropriations, and he stated that the reason was that the Government did not own the land on which some of the buildings stood, and that that matter was still in litigation.

On the strength of that information I withdrew my amendment. I have since found out that the information was erroneous, and I shall insert as part of my remarks a letter from Assistant Attorney General Farnum and two letters from the Architect of the Capitol, Mr. Lynn, in which it is stated that the Government has for almost a year owned all the land upon which these Government hotels stand and that there is no litigation in progress.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. That land-ownership question is not what is the matter. It is just fear of these good women down there who now occupy these Government hotels—fear that if Congress does not provide housing for them by the Government they may attack Members politically. That is what is keeping Congress from tearing down these Government hotels and going out of the business.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I trust that in the future the Committee on Appropriations will get more accurate information. I trust that we shall not continue to repeat what has been a disgrace to the National Capital in the case of these Government hotels and in the procedure that has been followed with respect to the property owned by the Government south of Pennsylvania Avenue. Twenty years ago the Government acquired by eminent domain the square occupied by Poli's Theater and the four adjoining squares between that square and the Mall. That particular square was never intended for the erection of Government buildings, but was intended to be used as a park, so that the White House could be seen as the visitor goes along Pennsylvania Avenue from the Capitol to the Treasury. And yet the disreputable looking buildings on that property still remain standing, disfiguring what ought to be the most beautiful avenue of our National Capital, simply because the Government is deriving some revenue from the tenants of the buildings in question.

Now, the people of the United States through their Representatives in Congress never authorized the taking of the property between here and the Union Station and the property south of Pennsylvania Avenue for the purpose of engaging in the hotel business or of obtaining a little revenue from the miserable buildings that encumber the land. That land was taken over for the sole purpose of beautifying the city of Washington, and it seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations should not continue this practice of blocking the beautification of the National Capital on the flimsy excuse that these temporary buildings are bringing some little revenue into the Treasury and that therefore these temporary buildings should not be torn down. The other excuse that the Government has not yet acquired complete title to the land on which the buildings stand being clearly shown to be without the slightest foundation.

Following are the letters referred to:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1928.

Hon. FREDERICK W. DALLINGER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Pursuant to your inquiry whether there remains outstanding within the Capitol Plaza area any land to which the United States has not acquired the title, I caused an investigation to be made which discloses that the United States has possession of all the land except the following, the title to which is outstanding in the District of Columbia:

Lots 51, 52, 53, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, and 74, in square 633. These premises are occupied by the Arthur Public School Building.

Parts of lots 13, 14, 39, 40, and 43 in square 722.

A small triangular strip at the northeast corner of square 682.

A triangular parcel lying south of square 721, all as shown on the accompanying white—or key print—and upon blue-print maps of said squares 633, 682, 721, and 722, and blue-print map of the United States Capitol Grounds, all of which were submitted for my examination by Mr. August Eccard, civil engineer, Architect's Office, United States Capitol, who is prepared, on request, to call upon and to furnish you such other or additional information as you may desire.

An examination of the files of the department in this case disclosed that the Plaza Commission, created for the purpose of acquiring said property, negotiated a settlement with the Commissioners of the District, who executed a deed of sundry real estate properties within the so-called Plaza area for the agreed consideration of $43,120. Their authority in the premises, however, was by the commission referred to the Attorney General for an opinion. Under date of July 17, 1916, the commission was advised "that the said commissioners are without authority to execute the deed in question, and the requisite authority to execute such a conveyance and to determine whether the consideration shall be accepted must be sought from the Congress."

The department has no information regarding the occasion for the delay which has transpired in this matter.

Respectfully,

For the Attorney General:

GEORGE R. FARNUM,
Assistant Attorney General.

ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1928.

Hon. FREDERICK W. DALLINGER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In response to your inquiry relating to the condition of the ground purchased for the enlargement of the Capitol grounds, I wish to say that the Government owns all of the area to the north of the Capitol originally contemplated in the acts providing for its purchase, with the following exceptions thereto:

Lots 51, 52, 53, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, and 74 in square 633. These premises are occupied by the Arthur Public School Building.

Parts of lots 13, 14, 39, 40, and 43 in square 722.

A small triangular strip at the northeast corner of square 682.

A triangular parcel lying south of square 721.

These parcels are the property of the District of Columbia. None of the Government hotels are located upon any of the parcels of ground above referred to. All of the Government hotels are upon ground owned by the Government.

Respectfully,

DAVID LYNN,
Architect of the Capitol.

ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., January 27, 1928.

Hon. FREDERICK W. DALLINGER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: It has occurred to me that in the letter sent you yesterday, it might have been better if I had stated the date when the last payment was made through the commission formed to complete the purchase of the land for the enlargement of the Capitol grounds. The last payment was made August 12, 1927, and the voucher drawn on that occasion was for $67,965.02.

Respectfully,

DAVID LYNN,
Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the Government of the United States has no business to be in the hotel business. It has no business to be renting apartment houses to anybody, and running restaurants and dining rooms for anybody. Until the recent war the Government never thought of doing anything like that. Until the recent war there was no Member of either House or Senate so bolshevistic as to propose anything of the kind. But expediency during the war caused the Government to do that thing. And Congress has not yet been brave enough to stop it. Instead of having 37,000 employees, as we did before the war here in Washington, we got up to over 100,000 employees. The new influx into the city caused housing conditions to become acute, and it was hard for our employees to find proper housing. Then Congress built these Government hotels.

I predicted at that time that we would be years in getting rid of them, and I predicted at that time that you would have to go up against the influence of the occupants of those hotels before you could ever restore that property. That is what you are meeting every year, the influence of these thousand women who occupy these hotels. It is political cowardice that keeps those hotels from being torn down. You may put it on the question of sentimentalism or humanitarianism, but if you want that property to be vacated you need not turn those women out in the cold, for they can find ample accommodations now. If you will make a survey of this District, such as I have made within the last 12 months, you will find that the housing conditions right now are better than they have been at any time within the last 12 years. You will find more desirable apartments vacant and offered for rent right now than there have been at any time in the last 12 years. You will find many desirable private residences that have been vacant for 12 months and occupants can not be found for them.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not now. I have but eight minutes.

I have just as much sympathy for the Government employees as anybody. I want to do justice to them. But there is no duty resting upon this Government to furnish Government hotels for them when housing conditions are not acute at this time.

I will tell you what we ought to do. We ought to serve notice on these good ladies who are in these buildings that at a certain time we will tear them down, and let them make preparations to find lodgings elsewhere. They have found lodgings heretofore, Mr. Chairman, during the history of this Government, during the development of the city of Washington, during the upbuilding of the Capital established here. They have found lodging places otherwise than in Government-owned hotels, and they should do it again. I will tell you what has happened here. If you will investigate it, you will find many $1,500 employees in big jobs and drawing big salaries up to $4,000 and $5,000 in this housing corporation, and they do not want to give up their fat jobs, and such has been the case ever since we started it.

I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] that it ought to stop. I do not accuse the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. MADDEN] of being afraid, because he is one of the bravest men we have here. He was brave Wednesday when he came in here and helped to defeat that infamous bill the Federal reserve system was trying to cram down the throats of the American people, a bill which would have placed high-salaried members on retired pensions at $9,000 a year for life. He was brave enough to come in here and help us defeat it. But he does let these women kind of get around him. He is not afraid of men, but he is afraid of women. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the Senator, the gentleman from Texas, yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Senator is right; I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does the gentleman think that the women who are staying in these hotels can afford to pay the rent charged for the private apartments and dwellings that are now vacant in the District?

Mr. BLANTON. They would have to pay no more than thousands of other Government employees here. The gentleman from Wisconsin has lots of people on Wisconsin farms and in Wisconsin cities who get less salary, and who do not get 30 days' vacation on full pay each year; they do not get 30 days' extra sick leave, on doctors' certificates, at full pay; they do not get all the holidays that so numerously occur in Washington; they do not get to live here in the Nation's Capital, the most beautiful city in the world; they do not get all of the advantages the people here in Washington get, and if the gentleman will go home to Wisconsin he will find that his people back home are not half so well looked after as these selfsame ladies in these Government hotels.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will say to the gentleman that looking at the Capitol and having 30 days' leave, and so forth, does not fill empty stomachs on salaries of $1,200 and $1,400 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say this to my friend from Wisconsin: I will guarantee that if he will investigate it he will find that these good women living in these Government hotels get more food in one day for half the price than some of his people in Wisconsin get in a week. [Laughter.] Now, investigate it. Talk about full stomachs. Just investigate that situation and you will find they are better off than the people in the State of Wisconsin.

I am not thinking so much about just one particular handful of people of the United States. I am thinking about the 110,000,000 people who ought to have an equal partnership in the Government of the United States and ought to have an equal interest in everything it does. If we are going to give housing in Government hotels to some of them, we ought to give such housing to all of them. I dare say you will find some people in the State of Wisconsin living in houses where the roofs leak, with the wind howling through the door cracks and window cracks, and with not half so many of the comforts and conveniences that these salaried people have here in Washington. And you are going to just let it continue on. I am afraid that my friend from Wisconsin is a little too much influenced by this bunch of women. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER. None of these women have "contacted" with the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANTON. They may not have "contacted" with him personally, but they have through the mails and the newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FINANCE DEPARTMENT

PAY, ETC., OF THE ARMY

For pay of officers of the line and staff, $31,168,426; pay of officers, National Guard, $100; pay of warrant officers, $2,156,880; aviation increase to commissioned and warrant officers of the Army, $1,571,326; additional pay to officers for length of service, $7,778,298; pay of enlisted men of the line and staff, not including the Philippine Scouts, $51,022,306; pay of enlisted men of National Guard, $100; aviation increase to enlisted men of the Army, $460,723; pay of enlisted men of the Philippine Scouts, $976,854; additional pay for length of service to enlisted men, $3,286,620; pay of the officers on the retired list, $7,349,729; increased pay to retired officers on active duty, $216,638; pay of retired enlisted men, $10,631,858; increased pay and allowances of retired enlisted men on active duty $9,878; pay of retired pay clerks, $6,750; pay of retired veterinarians, $3,570; pay of not to exceed 65 civil-service messengers at $1,080 each at headquarters of the several Territorial departments, corps areas, Army and corps headquarters, Territorial districts, tactical divisions and brigades, service schools, camps, and ports of embarkation and debarkation, $70,200; pay and allowances of contract surgeons, $44,556; pay of nurses, $823,780; pay of hospital matrons, $600; rental allowances, including allowances for quarters for enlisted men on duty where public quarters are not available, $6,547,016; subsistence allowances, $5,855,602; interest on soldiers' deposits, $75,000; payment of exchange by officers serving in foreign countries, and when specially authorized by the Secretary of War, by officers disbursing funds pertaining to the War Department, when serving in Alaska, and all foreign money received shall be charged to and paid out by disbursing officers of the Army at the legal valuation fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, $1,000; additional pay to officers below the grade of major required to be mounted and who furnish their own mounts, $225,000; in all, $130,282,810; and the money herein appropriated for "Pay, etc., of the Army" shall be accounted for as one fund.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: On page 11, in line 12, after the comma following the word "mounts," insert "not to exceed."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to fix it so that not to exceed $225,000 will be expended to provide for the employment of men to look after the private mounts of Army officers below the grade of major.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Does the gentleman think there would be more than $225,000 spent for that purpose when that amount is mentioned in the bill.

Mr. COLLINS. I was told by finance officers of the War Department that if it was left as it is now it would mean they could spend whatever this might amount to.

Mr. BARBOUR. More than the $225,000?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read down to and including line 6 on page 18.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, on page 16, in line 24, I ask unanimous consent that the spelling of the third word in the line be corrected, changing the word from "officers" to "offices."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In line 24 of page 16?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Should the word be changed? It reads now "enlisted men and officers."

Mr. BARBOUR. The language should be "for ice issued to organizations of enlisted men and offices at such places as the Secretary of War may determine." It is not for the issue of ice to "officers" but to "offices." It is a misspelling, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read down to and including line 15 on page 19.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct the spelling of the next to the last word in line 19, page 18 of the bill. Instead of "storing" it should be "sorting." It is merely a transposition of one of the letters.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will correct the spelling of the word as indicated by the gentleman from California.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Army transportation: For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty; of authorized baggage, including that of retired officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men when ordered to active duty and upon relief therefrom, and including packing and crating; of recruits and recruiting parties; of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; of necessary agents and other employees, including their traveling expenses; of dependents of officers and enlisted men as provided by law; of discharged prisoners, and persons discharged from St. Elizabeths Hospital after transfer thereto from the military service, to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect): Provided, That the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment; of horse equipment; and of funds for the Army; for the purchase or construction, not exceeding $62,000, alteration, operation, and repair of boats and other vessels; for wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; for drayage and cartage; for the purchase, manufacture (including both material and labor), maintenance, hire, and repair of pack saddles and harness; for the purchase, hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of wagons, carts, drays, other vehicles, and horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official military garrison purposes; for purchase and hire of draft and pack animals, including replacement of unserviceable animals; for travel allowances to officers and enlisted men on discharge; to officers of National Guard on discharge from Federal service as prescribed in the act of March 2, 1901; to enlisted men of National Guard on discharge from Federal service, as prescribed in amendatory act of September 22, 1922; and to members of the National Guard who have been mustered into Federal service and discharged on account of physical disability; in all, $17,417,701, of which amount not exceeding $2,000,000 shall be available immediately for the procurement and transportation of fuel for the service of the fiscal year 1929.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: On page 21, lines 8 and 9, strike out "for purchase and hire of draft and pack animals, including replacement of unserviceable animals."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, we have now in the Army 24,900 horses—or, at least, we had that number on hand as of July 1, 1927—24,900 horses and 14,000 mules. In the 1928 bill 2,150 additional horses was provided for and 1,450 mules. This bill carries an additional number of horses to the extent of 2,150 and 1,450 additional mules.

In the Regular Army we have 8,591 men in the Cavalry and 9,190 horses, not including mules. This statement appears on page 304 of the hearings.

In addition to the number of horses that we have on hand there are a large number of privately owned horses—fed, sheltered, bedded, and cared for out of Government funds; in fact, this bill carries an item of $225,000 for the pay of persons to take care of privately owned horses of Army officers below the grade of major. It is to be used exclusively for pay of men to look out for the horses' general welfare. Each officer draws $150 if he owns only one horse and $200 if he owns two horses. In addition to this the privately owned horses are furnished with forage, bedding, shoeing, and everything else that might be necessary.

The testimony of Army officers that have appeared before the committee, summed up, is that the motor-drawn vehicle is supplanting the horse in warfare. General Fries testified that a human being could protect himself by a gas mask against a gas attack, and that his clothing could be so saturated with some sort of material that the gas could not touch his body for a long length of time; but this is not so with a horse. There is no gas mask or clothing that can be put on a horse. A horse's usefulness in modern warfare is over. He is obsolete.

A motor-drawn vehicle these days is infinitely superior, and in the event of a gas attack can be used; a horse can not. Furthermore, airplanes have taken the place of the horses in scouting work or for reaching a spot quickly. And an airplane drops gas, too. One officer said:

If you want to find out whether a horse is useful, look outdoors and see how many you see. The motor-drawn vehicle has taken his place.

Aside from all this we have more horses and mules in the Army now than we need. We have more horses in the Cavalry than we have men, quite a large number more counting the privately owned horses. In addition, there is testimony that a motor-drawn vehicle is a cheaper implement of warfare than the horse. The upkeep is considerably less. So I do not see the necessity of carrying on a large horse-buying program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not see the necessity of carrying on this buying campaign when practically all of the testimony was to the effect that the horse is out of date in warfare.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. And was it not also brought out before the committee that motor transportation is constantly increasing in the Army?

Mr. COLLINS. Sure.

Mr. HUDSON. And they are asking a larger item for motor transportation?

Mr. COLLINS. Sure. We have more horses and mules now than we need. There are other items that increase the number of motor-drawn vehicles. The number of new cars to be purchased is 450, and then there are 200 G. M. C. trucks that are to be provided with bodies. Also motor vehicles will be purchased. It is a waste of the people's money to expend this sum in the purchase of horses and mules. It should be expended for some useful purpose.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not think anyone will contend that at this time the horses and mules should be discontinued in the Army. The Budget recommended 2,400 horses and 1,981 mules. The committee cut the appropriations down to 2,150 horses and 1,450 mules, the same number that were provided in the 1928 bill. This will not meet the requirements of the Army. It will not take care of the losses during the fiscal year 1929. We had on July 1, 1927, 38,900 horses and mules. If purchases are made according to the amount which we propose to appropriate in this bill, we will have on hand July 1, 1929, at the end of the fiscal year, 33,410 horses and mules, a loss of over 5,000, even with the number that will be bought with this appropriation. I do not think it is safe, I do not think anybody will feel that it is safe in the next fiscal year to reduce in the number of horses and mules that we have in the Army more than we will under this appropriation. There are places where a motor can not go.

Mr. HUDSON. Nicaragua, for instance?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; I do not suppose the best automobile manufactured in the gentleman's State could climb to the top of the mountain where our marines recently went.

Mr. HUDSON. Not even a Ford?

Mr. BARBOUR. Not even the new Ford. I have not had an opportunity to ride in one yet.

Mr. HUDSON. The gentleman would enjoy it.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am sure I would. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that it would be safe to reduce this appropriation at this time.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will.

Mr. HUDSON. In relation to the reduction that has been made in the last few years as to the number of horses and mules the gentleman says that there would be a decrease of 5,000 in here?

Mr. BARBOUR. By July 1, 1929, even with this appropriation.

Mr. HUDSON. And without the appropriation what would the decrease be?

Mr. BARBOUR. I imagine it would be about 3,600 more.

Mr. HUDSON. The committee has appropriated for increase in the motor vehicles?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; we have taken care of the automobiles.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

BARRACKS AND QUARTERS AND OTHER BUILDINGS AND UTILITIES

For all expenses incident to the construction, installation, operation, and maintenance of buildings, utilities, appurtenances, and accessories necessary for the shelter, protection, and accommodation of the Army and its personnel and property, where not specifically provided for in other appropriations, including personal services, purchase and repair of furniture for officers' quarters and officers' messes and wall lockers and refrigerators for Government-owned buildings as may be approved by the Secretary of War, care and improvement of grounds, flooring and framing for tents, rental of buildings and grounds for military purposes and lodgings for recruits and applicants for enlistment, water supply, sewer and fire-alarm systems, fire apparatus, roads, walks, wharves, drainage, dredging channels, purchase of water, and disposal of sewage, $12,668,944: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the rental of offices, garages, and stables for military attachés: Provided further, That not exceeding $100,000 shall be available immediately for the procurement of fuel for the service of the fiscal year 1929 and not exceeding $80,000 shall be available immediately for making alterations to the barge-office slip, New York City, on Governors Island Ferry: Provided further, That not exceeding $15,000 of this appropriation shall be expended for completing work incident to and of repairing the old building known as the "Castle" at Fort Niagara, N. Y. In addition to this amount, the Secretary of War is authorized to expend such sums as may be contributed from private sources for the rehabilitation of such old building.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask a few questions of the gentleman from California in charge of the bill. I desire to call attention to the references to previous statutory enactments on page 24 of the bill.

On top of page 24 you refer to the act of March 3, 1927, and on the previous page you give the title of that act. That act consists of a little pamphlet which contains only one enactment. Of course, that is the law, but that same enactment appears in the Statutes at Large for the last Congress. That Statutes at Large is an official document and what it contains is the statute laws without question. I would like to know why the Appropriations Committee follows the practice of referring to acts contained in little pamphlets that are in the possession of practically nobody except the Secretary of State, and do not set out the Statutes at Large, which are in the possession of every Member of Congress, every court, and every department and bureau, and in the hands of many lawyers?

Mr. BARBOUR. I presume it is matter of custom. Provisions of that kind have been carried in appropriation bills "from the time the memory of man runneth not to the contrary."

Mr. RAMSEYER. In 1925 we adopted a code of law which is supposed to contain all the Federal statutes in force on December 7, 1925, and whatever is in there is presumed to be the law. Enactments subsequent to December 7, 1925, we have in the Statutes at Large for the last Congress.

Mr. BARBOUR. This particular citation is of an act approved March, 1927.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes; that is in the Statutes at Large for the last Congress, the Sixty-ninth Congress.

Mr. BARBOUR. But it would not be in the code.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I understand that; but is in the Statutes at Large. Why does not the committee cite that which is in the possession of every Congressman and many lawyers and all the courts, so that any one interested in knowing what the law is, upon which this item of appropriation is based, can refer to a volume in his possession instead of hunting up a little pamphlet that is in the possession of very few people?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is not only perfectly agreeable to me, but I think the suggestion is a good one.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I called this to the attention of the House last week. At that time no appropriation bill was under consideration. The Members present at that time all agreed that our practice in the past in not referring to the United States Code (1925) was bad and should be corrected.

Mr. BARBOUR. If we can do that, I think it would simplify matters and furnish all the information desirable in regard to them. If that can be done it should be done. I think it would be an improvement to cite these acts as the gentleman says.

Mr. RAMSEYER. My inquiry to this point has been directed to references to enactments subsequent to the enactment of the Code, which contains all the statute laws up to December 7, 1925, and the gentleman agrees with me that, rather than to cite the date of the act, it would be better practice to cite the Statutes at Large and the place where the act can be found therein.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think so, because the date itself does not mean anything to one reading this bill.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Now, in regard to the next line, there are cited the sections of the Revised Statutes. To be sure the gentleman understands that the Revised Statutes are a codification of the United States Statutes made in 1878, and contain the enactments of Congress up to 1873. From 1878 to 1925 there was no codification of the United States Statutes. We now have this new codification of 1925. These sections, 1136 and 3734, of the Revised Statutes, referred to on page 24 of the bill, can be found in the United States Code of Laws. I know that there is some objection to making reference only to the Code of Laws, because the enacting clause of the code recites:

The matter set forth in the code * * * shall establish prima facie the laws of the United States * * * in force on the 7th day of December, 1925.

Personally I am inclined to the opinion that it would be entirely safe to cite only the sections of the United States Code. It is very important that we should refer to the Code of Laws, because, as I stated before, this code is in the possession of every Member of Congress, the heads of the departments, the chiefs of bureaus, the courts, and in addition to that, something like seven or eight thousand copies have been sold to attorneys all over the United States. The point I have been attempting to make is that when it is necessary to refer to enactments prior to December 7, 1925, without taking any chances whatever, you can make reference to the Revised Statutes or the Statutes at Large or act of a certain date and then in parenthesis or in brackets right after the words "Revised Statutes," or "Statutes at Large" or act of a certain date you could insert "U. S. C.," the initials standing for United States Code, and the title so-and-so and the section so-and-so, so that anybody who wants to look up the statute to which reference is made and see what you have done can use the code and see exactly the statutory law on which a particular item of appropriation is based.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. It is all very well to refer to the code, but we find that the code does not state the true condition in several cases where we have referred to it, that it is not the law. If we refer to the code in the act making the appropriations, then we say that that is the law. If we repeat the code and the act itself and the number of the Statutes at Large, of course, that is going to make a lot of work, with more or less cost, and the question is, Should we do it until we know definitely what the cost is?

Mr. RAMSEYER. My suggestion would not involve taking any chances, so far as the legality of the act is concerned.

Mr. MADDEN. I am afraid it would.

Mr. RAMSEYER. For instance, in the case here, in lines 1 and 2, on page 24, reference is made to section 1136 and section 3734 of the Revised Statutes. My suggestion is to let that stand and then in brackets, which would not take over an inch of space, refer to the United States Code and the title and the section, the reference could be abbreviated; and then the courts and the heads of departments and the chiefs of bureaus and the Members of Congress and all of the lawyers who have the code can easily find it.

Mr. MADDEN. If you refer to the code, we have to keep the Statutes at Large also as a reference, have we not?

Mr. RAMSEYER. No. The reference to the Statutes at Large would only be necessary to acts since December 7, 1925.

Mr. MADDEN. I mean the Revised Statutes. Are you going to ask the committee to put this in this bill as we go along now? I hope the gentleman will not do that. Suppose he gives us a chance to get ourselves adjusted to it, and let us put it in next year.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I am not going to hold up proceedings here to offer amendments. I know that it would entail a little work, but it would be work that a clerk could easily do.

Mr. MADDEN. We could do this as we are making up the bill, but it would be hard work for us to do it on this bill now.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I hope the next bill that the gentleman brings in will have it so arranged.

Mr. MADDEN. We can not do that because the bill is already made up.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Then in the next bill after that. Will the gentleman consider it at all, without making any definite promise?

Mr. MADDEN. We will consider it very carefully, and we will come and consult with the gentleman.

Mr. RAMSEYER. What would be the objection to getting unanimous consent to permit the clerk of the House, after the citations in this bill, to include in the engrossed copy of the bill the references to the United States Code whenever that is possible?

Mr. MADDEN. We would not want to take the chances on the clerk doing that. We want to know definitely what we are doing, if it ought to be done.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Then why not let one of the gentleman's own clerks do it; one in whom he has confidence?

Mr. MADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that we will study it seriously and in a friendly way.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I assure the gentleman that I am offering the suggestion in a perfectly friendly way.

Mr. MADDEN. We will study the meeting of the minds.

Mr. RAMSEYER. During most of the period between the year 1873 and the year 1925 chaos prevailed with respect to our United States statutes. You could not find without an infinite amount of work what the statute laws of the United States were. Now, we have made a start to bring about some order. If Congress does not pay any respect to its own work we will soon have the same chaos that we have had heretofore for nearly a 50-year period.

Mr. MADDEN. We might select a special committee and put the gentleman from Iowa upon it, and see what can be done in the matter.

Mr. RAMSEYER. You have had two years in which to do it.

Mr. MADDEN. We have not thought about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, before the amendment is reported I want to call attention to line 21, page 24, to the words "purchase and." This is the first time that those words have appeared in this bill. They constitute legislation upon the bill. Hence I make a point of order against them.

Mr. BARBOUR. May I suggest that the point of order has come too late? The paragraph has already been discussed. There has already been debate on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman slept on his rights.

Mr. COLLINS. I merely yielded.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate, if on any subject, has been on the subject of this paragraph. Therefore the gentleman's point comes too late.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Page 24, lines 21 and 22, strike out the words "furniture for officers' quarters and officers' messes and."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, what I am after is to prevent an expenditure for the first time since 1923 for furniture for officers' quarters, and then only during the war period. We are beginning a program of furnishing the homes of Army officers with furniture. There is no law for it. It is the first time regular household furniture has ever been furnished for Army officers. This is an opening wedge. It is $326,000 now. It will be more next year. If the House wants to adopt this policy it is their affair. I am calling your attention to it. I do not think it ought to be begun.

It is said that it might save us money in hauling charges. We know that that is not going to be the case. We also know that expensive furniture of all kinds in time is going to be bought; perhaps not now, but in time it will be bought; and there is no limitation whatever on the amount that can be expended for furniture. The hearings say it is to be heavy furniture—406 sets; but there is no limitation on the amount that can be expended for each article or set of furniture, and we know the kinds that will be purchased in time.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman's amendment provide that we could not buy furniture for the barracks that we are building?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What are we going to do for furniture for the men?

Mr. COLLINS. It has never been customary to furnish quarters for Army officers.

Mr. MADDEN. I was wondering whether the building program would go that far.

Mr. BARBOUR. It will permit furniture for noncommissioned officers' quarters to be purchased.

Mr. MADDEN. Will it furnish the new quarters that we are building for the Army?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it ought to be seriously thought out.

Mr. COLLINS. I think the chairman of the subcommittee is in error. The language of the bill says, "Purchase and repair of furniture for officers' quarters and officers' messes."

Mr. MADDEN. That is different.

Mr. COLLINS. This is to be expended solely in the furnishing of officers' homes, according to the language of the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. I submit to the gentleman from Mississippi that it includes noncommissioned officers' quarters as well as commissioned officers' quarters. We are building in our housing program a considerable number of noncommissioned officers' quarters. Does the gentleman want those noncommissioned officers to furnish their own quarters?

Mr. COLLINS I am taking the statement in the bill. This is to be expended in connection with the officers' quarters.

Mr. BARBOUR. You say that certain statements are in the hearings. Can you show us where they are?

Mr. COLLINS. Let us see—on page 1001 is the estimate of $326,400 for the purchase of 9,546 pieces. I think this is 408 sets.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. The heading of the paragraph is "Purchase of furniture for officers' quarters, and so forth."

Mr. BARBOUR. "And so forth." There you have it.

Mr. COLLINS. No; that refers to refrigerators.

Mr. BARBOUR. A noncommissioned officer is an officer in the contemplation of the language of the bill.

Mr. COLLINS. The point I make is that none of it will be spent in furnishing noncommissioned officers' quarters.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that construction of the language of the bill is correct, as given by the chairman of the subcommittee, would he have any objection to an amendment providing that this appropriation can only be made for the purchase of furniture for noncommissioned officers.

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly I would have an objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then that verifies the position of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not think it affects his position at all.

Mr. COLLINS. The Secretary said, "There is quite a serious lack now, and it is a hardship to the officers."

If it were ever contemplated to furnish noncommissioned officers' quarters, he would have said so.

Mr. BARBOUR. When he says officers that includes commissioned and noncommissioned officers. I am waiting for the gentleman to point out in the hearings where it is shown that this is all to be used for commissioned officers' quarters.

Mr. McDUFFIE. As a matter of fact, is a noncommissioned officer an officer and is he treated as an officer in the Army? Do they not speak of commissioned officers as being officers in the military service?

Mr. BARBOUR. A noncommissioned officer is treated as an officer just the same as the commissioned officer in the matter of supplying furniture for quarters. We are building quarters for noncommissioned officers and commissioned officers. This is to purchase furniture for officers' quarters, and it includes noncommissioned officers just as well as commissioned officers. That is my recollection of the testimony that was given; and I am still waiting for the gentleman from Mississippi to show me that I am wrong.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I simply asked the question for information, because I have always understood that an officer in the military service was generally regarded as a commissioned officer, and that noncommissioned officers, corporals and sergeants, were treated as enlisted men.

Mr. CLAGUE. Here is what General Summerall stated before our committee. On page 23 of the hearings General Summerall testified as follows:

> It furnishes 408 sets of furniture for the families of officers and married noncommissioned officers.

Mr. BARBOUR. That was my recollection of the testimony. It is clear that furniture will be furnished to noncommissioned officers who are married.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKS. For the benefit of the gentleman from Alabama, who asked the question as to whether a corporal or sergeant is an officer or enlisted man, I will state that a corporal and sergeant are enlisted men. There is no question about it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Not at all. A corporal and a sergeant are not officers. They are enlisted men.

Mr. COLLINS. I will admit that General Summerall stated what has been read, but at the same time I will state that everywhere else in the hearings the word "officer" has been mentioned and the word "noncommissioned" has not been mentioned. And I feel quite certain that this furniture will go into officers' homes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment by way of substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Page 24, line 21, after the word "for," add "noncommissioned," and after the word "and" add "noncommissioned."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the substitute, or at least I reserve a point of order against it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the point of order is a good one, I wish the gentleman would state it.

Mr. BARBOUR. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I have very few words to add to what the amendment itself expresses. It has been clearly developed here, not only by the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee, but by some other gentleman just a moment ago, who read from the testimony, that it was the purpose of this language specifically and solely to provide for the purchase of furniture for the messes and quarters of noncommissioned officers.

Mr. BARBOUR. Oh, no.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what I understood the gentleman to read from the hearings.

Mr. BARBOUR. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And that has been the argument, as I understood it, that was made in justification of the appropriation. I do not know what the practice has been heretofore, but if the gentleman from Mississippi accurately stated the situation it is an absolute innovation upon legislation, in providing for the conveniences of commissioned officers, to buy furniture for their homes. If that has been the practice heretofore I would raise no objection to it, but it seems from his statement that we are now proposing to embark upon the proposition of the Government just going in and furnishing the homes and messes of commissioned officers. I am not familiar with the hearings and I do not know what was contemplated by the appropriation, but it seems to me that if the purpose of this appropriation is the one that has been stated, as evidenced by a reading of the hearings, the gentleman ought to accept the amendment.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. The question we were discussing was whether or not any money would be spent for the purchase of furniture for noncommissioned officers' quarters. It was stated there would not be any spent for noncommissioned officers' quarters. But the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CLAGUE] read from the hearings a statement by General Summerall to the effect that a certain amount of the money would be spent for furnishing the quarters of noncommissioned officers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman propose to embark upon a new program here and furnish money for the homes of commissioned officers?

Mr. BARBOUR. It is not a new idea, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama. That has been done almost throughout the history of the country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was assuming that the statement made by my colleague from Mississippi accurately stated the facts and precedents, and I stated that if this has been the appropriation recognized and authorized heretofore I should not have made the suggestion in my amendment, and I was assuming that the gentleman from Mississippi, when he said that since 1923 no such appropriation had been made, was accurately stating the record.

Mr. BARBOUR. Not since 1923, but prior to that there were such appropriations.

Mr. COLLINS. The Secretary of War says:

> As I recall the figures, they call for 408 sets of heavy furniture. No heavy furniture has been purchased since 1923.

And not only that, if the gentleman will permit one further statement, the language of the law has been changed in order to permit the purchase of this furniture. The word "purchase" has been written into the bill for the first time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The law has not been changed, but it is being interpreted differently in the bill as it stands now.

Mr. COLLINS. The word "purchase" has been added to the language of the bill so as to permit this procedure.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SPEAKS. I think the purpose is to avoid the payment of freight charges which sometimes equal the cost of the furniture. For instance, an officer may be ordered from California to New York. The Government is under the necessity of transporting his furniture. The gentleman can readily see that the freight charges might be equal to the cost of the furniture. So the purpose is to establish in the new quarters certain heavy furniture and avoid excessive freight charges. Suppose an officer is transferred from California to New York and six months later ordered from New York to Panama. The gentleman from Alabama will note that the Government is transporting a lot of heavy furniture clear across the country, then beyond the limits of the United States, and it is obvious that the freight charges might be more than the original cost of the furniture. Having this heavy furniture installed in quarters is undoubtedly a convenience and a very decided economy.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the gentleman if there is not a limitation upon the amount of freight paid on furniture in such a transfer?

Mr. SPEAKS. Yes; there is a limitation on the amount of household effects and baggage an officer can transport at public expense.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is my information.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPEAKS]. The gentleman has had a lot of military service and understands military terms. I call the gentleman's attention to the language here, "furniture for officers' quarters and officers' messes." Does the gentleman think that includes noncommissioned officers?

Mr. SPEAKS. It does not.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is the point the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] has been trying to make, that the noncommissioned officer is an enlisted man and will not benefit by this legislation.

Mr. BARBOUR. But the testimony shows he will, and it is so intended.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But the law shows he will not because it says "officers," and that means commissioned officers.

Mr. BARBOUR. It means commissioned officers and noncommissioned officers.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Then it should say "noncommissioned officers," I will say to the gentleman, if it means that. Here is an expert on military matters [Mr. SPEAKS] who bears out the suggestion that it means commissioned officers.

Mr. BARBOUR. I would refer the gentleman to Noah Webster.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Well, I refer the gentleman to the common practice in military circles, as testified to by General SPEAKS, the gentleman from Ohio. When you speak of an officer in the Army, you mean a commissioned officer and not an enlisted man.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I suggest the gentleman refer it to the Comptroller General; he will decide it eventually.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Probably so. I am trying to get some information as to the distinction between officers and noncommissioned officers from somebody, but nobody seems to be able to give it except the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SPEAKS. The military grades or distinctions are officer, noncommissioned officer, and private or enlisted man, and the gentleman knows the story of the wide gulf separating the officer from the enlisted man. Sergeant and corporal are merely grades of enlisted men and are not officers.

Mr. McDUFFIE. This language does not say noncommissioned officer, but simply says officers, and under the language as written in the bill it means commissioned officers.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I think we can arrive at a conclusion in this matter very quickly if some military gentleman here will tell us whether or not—suppose a charge were leveled against a noncommissioned officer for an offense committed; would that charge wind up with the conclusion that he had acted out of harmony with the principles of an officer and a gentleman?

Mr. BARBOUR. Of whom are you asking that question?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Anybody who knows. That ought to settle it very clearly, Mr. Chairman, because there is the evidence of the Army officer himself, and in making a charge against a noncommissioned officer they do not charge him with having violated the precepts which ought to move and animate an officer and a gentleman. Therefore, in the eye of the Army officer, the noncommissioned man is not an officer. He might be the other thing but he is not an officer.

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman from Nebraska has answered his own question.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I think so.

Mr. BARBOUR. To the gentleman's satisfaction?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Entirely. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I understand no one speaks in response to the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Nobody answers. They stand mute.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption along the line of what the gentleman has just said?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The manual of court-martial procedure provides for the preferring of charges against enlisted men and officers, and you would not try an enlisted man on a charge involving any one of those Articles of War.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Certainly not. That is the evidence which I sought, and there you have it, gentlemen. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD) there were—ayes 19, noes 48.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Panama Canal: Signal Corps, $34,120; Corps of Engineers, $609,350; Ordnance Department, $329,000; Chief of Coast Artillery, $133,847; in all, $4,038,716.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order in reference to a law administered by the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would not interrupt the reading of the bill at this time if it were not for the fact that my attention has been called to a situation which I think you will be pleased to know of. I especially ask the attention of members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce who may be present.

We are passing monthly scores of bills by unanimous consent which permit the building of bridges over navigable streams, and a large number of such bridges have already been or will be constructed in my State. As a result of the hearings before the Senate on what is called the Walsh resolution, newspapers of St. Louis made inquiry of the Missouri public service commission and the State finance department as to whether they had any control over the holding companies for public utilities. The answer was they had absolutely no control.

Therefore, the situation that presents itself is this: You can grant the consent of Congress to build a bridge over a river, so far as my State is concerned, and that bridge might be erected for $1,000,000, but there is no provision whereby the Government or the State has any jurisdiction over the amount of bonds that may be issued to complete that project.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], as he usually does, gave us a detailed explanation as to the policy of Congress in reference to the building of bridges and how they protected the public from excessive tolls, and so forth. But upon this phase he did not touch.

Now, gentlemen, I serve notice, unless I am convinced that there is some protection to the people of my State and to the country, that there is a limitation somewhere upon the amount of bonds that can be issued for building bridges, I propose to object to the consideration of any bill which grants the consent of Congress to private individuals to construct a bridge. I shall object unless there is a paragraph inserted which will give the War Department or some other Government agency control over the situation.

I telephoned Major Daly, of the Engineer Corps of the War Department, and he tells me that so far as he knows there is nothing in the law which would give the War Department any power in the matter whatever.

I have had cases called to my attention whereby individuals have made a great deal of money out of the right granted them to construct bridges, and I understand other than promoting the projects do nothing. They assign their rights to others before actual construction commences. Some of the promoters live in States hundreds of miles from the location of the bridge. They are interested from a monetary standpoint only, not being citizens of the community where the bridge is to be constructed. There is now no check on their financial operations so far as placing a limitation on the amount of bonds that can be issued. Surely, now that I call it to your attention, the Congress will not approve. You should be willing to extend some safeguard to the people who buy the bonds.

It was not so very long ago—I remember it myself—when this Congress was passing legislation by unanimous consent which extended the right to build dams over rivers for the purpose of generating electricity. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and the late Doctor Foster, from Illinois, put a stop to it, and as a result you have the Water Power Commission to-day.

I want the people of my State to be protected, especially when men from other States come there to sell securities for projects not only in Missouri but throughout the country. Part of the money to construct toll bridges in Indiana, Ohio, and other States is secured by selling bonds to the people of St. Louis. I want to see the Congress do something to protect not only the people of St. Louis but throughout the country from being sold securities for a project for which securities twice the amount of the actual cost of construction have been issued for it means eventually the promoters will default in the payment of interest and the value of the securities will fall far below the price actually paid by the public. Remember, gentlemen, there is no law which prevents a promoter from issuing $4,000,000 in securities for a $2,000,000 project either in my State or in the Federal Statutes.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will.

Mr. NEWTON. Does the gentleman appreciate that in bridge bills, in numerous instances, the request for the bridge comes from a municipality, a county, and sometimes the State. Does the gentleman think that under those circumstances Congress ought to pass on the question of the issue of bonds?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I eliminate such projects, but when it comes to the individuals I think the public ought to be protected. I have no objection to the building of the bridges, provided the Representative in Congress says they are necessary. A gentleman came to my city the other day and offered to construct a bridge. He was looking for the cooperation of the people in that part of the city. He said there was a certain firm in New York, White & Co., I think, that had decided to set aside $25,000,000 or $50,000,000 for the purpose of building bridges, and was backing him. I have no objection to their doing the work at a reasonable figure if the people are protected in the issue of securities. It is up to the purchasers of the securities to investigate whether they are putting their money in a proposition that will pay. What I want to do is to insist that the securities issued will not exceed the cost of construction, plus a maximum of, say, 10 per cent.

I insist as the bills read now these individuals are not limited in the amount of securities they can issue in connection with their project. If I am wrong, I will yield to any gentleman for information.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman does not refer to these municipally constructed bridges?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No.

Mr. NEWTON. Of course, as to these other bridges no bill is introduced unless it comes from the Member from the district where the bridge is to be constructed.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Let me illustrate that. Several friends of the gentleman, we will say, from his district send him a letter and tell him that Mr. Jones has decided to construct a bridge over a river in that district. Mr. Jones is given a letter of introduction to the gentleman from Minnesota and comes down here.

The people who write the gentleman are responsible citizens, friends of the gentleman. Would the gentleman from Minnesota introduce that bill for Mr. Jones? I admit that if the request came from my district, under similar circumstances, I would introduce it, if two responsible citizens, friends of mine, requested me to do so, and I think every other Member of the House would do the same. It has been the policy to do it. Members introduce bills for people they have never met, people who do not even live in their district or community.

Mr. NEWTON. Does not the gentleman think that the individual Member introducing a bill, who sponsors it before the committee and on the floor of the House, is going to inform himself as to whether or not the community involved wants the bridge?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I venture to say that not 1 Member in 10 does. It has not been the policy. I hope the gentleman gets my point—that there is no protection as to the amount of bonds that might be issued, no matter what the Member might do before the committee or on the floor, after the promoter has the consent of Congress to go ahead with the work. The Member then has no control over the individual and neither has the Government.

Mr. NEWTON. Does the gentleman refer only to the toll highway bridges?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes. As far as the railroad bridges are concerned, I understand that the Interstate Commerce Commission has control.

Mr. NEWTON. Yes. So that it is only toll highway bridges the gentleman has in mind?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes. I am giving information to the House. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

If the gentleman thinks there is merit in my suggestion, I hope that his committee will consider it. Until I am convinced, as I said before, that there is going to be some provision in the bills to protect my people and the gentleman's people—and they sell these securities all over the United States—from inflation I propose to object to the consideration of bridge bills granting the consent of Congress to individuals to construct bridges. If you pass them you will do so over my objection, and, as you know, I spend my time on the floor while the House is in session.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman understands, of course, that it is the practice of the committee before favorable action is taken upon a toll bridge to not only have a written statement from the Member from the district in which the bridge is to be constructed but to be advised that the State highway commission or some other State or municipal body approves of the proposition. That is the care that the committee takes in order to keep in touch with local sentiment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I might say for the benefit of the gentleman that I have personally prepared bills—not since I have been a Member of Congress but prior thereto, when acting as secretary for Representatives and Senators—and that at no time has the committee ever asked for a written expression of any kind in connection with any one of the bills I prepared, and not one of the bills I prepared ever failed to pass under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. NEWTON. Is the gentleman now referring to the ordinary bridge bill, or is he referring to the toll highway bridge bill?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The toll highway bridge bill.

Mr. NEWTON. I wish to say to the gentleman that that practice has been put into effect by the committee during the present Congress.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The committee has at all times impressed me with its willingness to do everything in its power to protect the municipality or the State or the county and the Government in so far as excessive tolls are concerned, but I am calling attention to a condition in reference to the issuing of securities. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] has introduced a so-called blue sky bill, and if it is not in conflict with the Constitution—and I have a great deal of respect for his ability as a lawyer—I expect to vote for it, if it ever gets before this House. I feel sure that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] will look into the subject I advance before he calls up any more such bills.

Let me call your attention to an editorial appearing in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, January 28, which I referred to at the outset. It follows:

MISSOURI, A HELPLESS SPECTATOR

The Jefferson City correspondent of the Post-Dispatch has been authoritatively informed that "holding companies for public utilities * * * only are beyond the control of both the Missouri Public Service Commission and the State 'blue-sky' department."

The head of our "blue-sky" department, Securities Commissioner F. T. Stockard, says that because of legal exemptions he has no means of controlling the sale of securities in holding companies.

A great many of our public utilities are now the wards of holding companies. All our Bell telephone companies are in that position. So is the Laclede Gas Co. J. K. Newman, of New York, and his local associates are eager to put our street railway company under the control of their holding company. Samuel Insull, of Chicago, famous as a contributor to political campaign funds, has been gathering up public utilities in Missouri and tucking them under the wing of his holding companies.

None of these holding companies—in fact, no holding company—has ever applied to the Missouri Public Service Commission for permission to issue securities, for the excellent reason it does not have to ask or obtain such permission.

Again, no holding company has ever asked our "blue-sky" department for permission to sell its securities in Missouri. And, again, the reason is the same—it does not need that permission.

So, as regards the activities of holding companies, the State of Missouri is a helpless spectator. So, too, is every other State.

We speculated the other day on the "legal residence, if any," of holding companies. Is a holding company, we asked, "a fabled creature dwelling in a zone of economic neutrality in which it enjoys all the financing prerogatives and legal immunities that conduce to a happy, prosperous, and, as in the case of Mr. Munroe, of Laclede Gas Light celebrity, a get-rich-quick life?"

Pretty soft for the holding company, if that is it. And, according to our officials at Jefferson City, that is just about it.

The other editorial was from the St. Louis Star, and was published on the same day. It follows:

WHY A BLUE SKY LAW?

The board of governors of the Investment Bankers' Association has recently gone on record against the blue sky laws as the sole means of preventing the sale of worthless securities. The board is not convinced there is a "legislative panacea" to assure sound management of any investment trust. Fraud acts with broad powers, it believes, would be more effective.

The blue sky laws in Missouri and other States were passed when it was apparent that fraud acts already on the statute books afforded little or no protection to the investor, and after the sellers of sound securities had failed to drive the sellers of fake securities out of business. Nobody familiar with administration of these blue sky laws would presume to say these laws are a "panacea." There is no panacea for fraud. The blue sky laws often fail to prevent the sale of fake stocks and bonds because the attention of administrators of these laws is not called to the sales until many persons already have been swindled. But these laws afford a measure of protection to the public, and a measure of protection is better than no protection at all.

The cure for this evil is not by repealing the blue sky laws, which the board of governors does not suggest, or in depending upon the general law-enforcement machinery and fraud acts, but in the cooperation of organizations like the Investment Bankers' Association with the blue sky law departments and prosecuting officers. All of these agencies, working together, can keep the selling of worthless stocks to the public at a minimum, even if they can not wholly suppress such sales. The blue sky law in Missouri is far from perfect, but it justifies itself every time some inexperienced and incautious citizen with a few dollars saved is kept from wasting his money on lithographed trash.

I understand the House will not be in session to-morrow. It will give me time to confer with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], chairman of the subcommittee on bridges of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I hope to reach an agreement with him whereby he will submit an amendment to each bill to be called up Monday where consent of Congress is granted to an individual or individuals, other than the class of bridges I enumerated, to meet my views on this subject. I do not desire to obstruct legislation, but I will be forced on Monday to offer objections to every bridge bill of this class unless such an amendment is proposed.

I will submit to the gentleman from Illinois a suggestive amendment reading as follows:

Provided, That bonds or other securities issued against or based on the construction and revenues of said bridge and approaches shall not exceed the actual cost of such construction and operation, economically made, plus a maximum of 10 per cent added thereto; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War prior to the issue of any such bonds or other securities to determine the total thereof which may thus be issued.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] has always shown a desire to protect the municipalities, counties, and States in connection with toll bridges, and I feel that had he known the States did not have the power to control the situation he long since would have made provisions along this line. Until a few days ago I entertained the opinion this matter was under the control of the various States, but it develops they are without power to protect the public in this connection, nor have they any control over holding companies for public utilities.

I have not examined the calendar, but I am informed close to 100 bridge bills are ready for consideration Monday. This is a most important matter, and I hope every Member of the House will be on the floor Monday, so we will be assured of a thorough discussion of the question, agree upon a proper amendment for the protection of the public, and make it unnecessary to object to the bills, which I know so many Members are very anxious to have passed.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 10, page 27 of the bill, in order to correct the spelling of a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "at" be changed to "as," in line 10, page 27.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction of the spelling will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT

ORDNANCE SERVICE

For the current expenses of the Ordnance Department in connection with purchasing, receiving, storing, and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, comprising police and office duties, rents, tolls, fuel, light, water, and advertising, stationery, typewriting and adding machines, including their exchange, and office furniture, tools, and instruments of service; for incidental expenses of the ordnance service and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance small arms, and other ordnance stores; for publications for libraries of the Ordnance Department, including the ordnance office; subscriptions to periodicals, which may be paid for in advance; and payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance; and for maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, $1,010,430: Provided, That the Ordnance Department is hereby authorized to employ, under its various appropriations, not exceeding four consulting engineers as the Secretary of War may deem necessary at rates of pay to be fixed by him not to exceed $50 a day for not exceeding 50 days each and necessary traveling expenses.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, I regret to do so at this hour, but I feel compelled to make a point of no quorum. I shall at this point make a proposal that will interest many Members and in addition a large number of people in every State in the Union. I have promised many Members to notify them when the subject I propose is being discussed, so I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BARBOUR. May I inquire of the gentleman what the subject is?

Mr. SPEAKS. I will be frank with the agreeable chairman of the subcommittee. I am going to propose an amendment to the item on page 42, providing $4,000,000 for the purchase of ammunition and various other articles. I propose to offer an amendment reducing that sum by $550,000, and if successful in the effort, I will then propose that the $550,000 be utilized for the national matches authorized by law and which are compulsory. Now, I do not care to make my preliminary statement relative to the matches until the Members especially interested are present.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPEAKS. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Would it be agreeable to the gentleman to pass over that section for the present?

Mr. SPEAKS. I will be pleased to do so, if I can have assurances that my rights and privileges will be properly protected.

Mr. BARBOUR. It will be done without prejudice. Then when we come to the national rifle practice item we can take up the two subjects together, the gentleman can offer his amendment, and we can have a proper discussion under that item.

Mr. SPEAKS. I will be very glad to do that. I withdraw my point of order that there is no quorum present, in view of the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. BARBOUR. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph on page 42, "Ordnance stores, ammunition," be passed over at the present time, and that it be taken up for purpose of amendment when we reach the item regarding national rifle practice. Will that be agreeable to the gentleman?

Mr. SPEAKS. It will be.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to pass over the first paragraph on page 42, ending with line 8, to be returned to later. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

MOLINE-ROCK ISLAND BRIDGE

For repairs and alterations, including construction of a draw or lift span in the aid of navigation, of the bridge connecting the city of Moline, Ill., with Rock Island, Ill., to be available immediately, $50,000.

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph. It is legislation on an appropriation bill, and it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes a point of order against the paragraph. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] wish to be heard?

Mr. BARBOUR. This item provides—

For repairs and alterations, including construction of a draw or lift span in the aid of navigation, of the bridge connecting the city of Moline, Ill., with Rock Island, Ill., to be available immediately, $50,000.

This bridge has been in existence for some time, and this item is merely for repairs and alterations. It is a Government-built bridge, a Government-owned bridge. It was built by the United States in 1870–1873, and undoubtedly it was authorized by law at that time.

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Chairman, the committee without question has been informed that this is in the interest of navigation, and if it were, and the project had been authorized, the appropriation would be proper. But this is an appropriation for an unauthorized project. It has never received the consideration of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and there has never been general legislation with respect to this matter.

The bridge in question is at the lower end of what is called Moline pool. Moline pool, in its northern part, is a part of the authorized waterway, but the waterway at this point diverges to the right, to the Iowa side, and the boats pass through the locks at the head of the island. Now, if anyone wanted to drive a boat through this bridge they would immediately have to turn around and come right back and then out through the locks.

In my judgment there can be no question about this thing. When we look at the hearings that were held before the gentleman's committee we find that the only witnesses who appeared were asked to say what the repairs would reasonably cost, and they said $50,000, including the erection of this drawbridge; and then when they were asked what the cost of the drawbridge would be, they said that would be $50,000. I think that exactly states the truth of the matter. The only repair contemplated here is the conversion of this bridge into a drawbridge, and it is for the sole benefit of one concern, the John Deere Plow Co.

In that connection I would have this to say: If it were proper in the aid of navigation I would have no objection whatever, but for a number of years there has been a constant movement on the part of certain interests in Moline, by persuasion or otherwise, to induce a change of the watercourse through the Mississippi River at this point.

A number of years ago they started by extending a dam from the head of Rock Island up the middle of the stream, about 3 miles, and then little by little they have built from that dam toward the Iowa shore, and from the Iowa shore toward the dam, until a few years ago the citizens around there waked up to the fact that there was then only a small gap of about 400 feet between the ends of these dams, and that certain boats that were loaded with rock and other materials were ready to be dropped into this gap and effectively, without the authorization of Congress, to dam the Mississippi River; to throw the water over into the Moline pool and thereby give them such a depth of water as to compel all navigation to go that way.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Is there not a dam on the Moline side of the river just below this bridge and connecting the mainland with Rock Island?

Mr. LETTS. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. That would prevent navigation from going down on the Illinois side?

Mr. LETTS. No; not in my judgment; because if the purposes of these gentlemen can be effectuated they will tear that dam out in 20 minutes.

I will say to the gentleman that there are two power dams in the Moline slough. One of them belongs to the United States Government and is a part of the United States arsenal at that point, and there we produce power for the use of the arsenal, and we sell the excess that is produced.

At this point I ought to say an investigation should be instituted in that regard, because we are almost giving that power away.

In addition to this power dam there is the power dam of the Moline Power Co., and it has been the boast of some gentlemen connected with that concern that sooner or later they are going to throw the main channel of the Mississippi River down the Illinois side of Rock Island rather than on the Iowa side, as it now is.

Mr. TABER. That would be a lawless procedure, would it not?

Mr. LETTS. It would not be a lawless procedure if they are able to proceed step by step, as they have done.

Mr. TABER. They would have to secure legislation to permit them to do it.

Mr. LETTS. Certainly, and this is one of the steps by which they are seeking that legislation. They know they could not come here and get a program of that kind through Congress. They realize that the only way they can effectuate their purpose is to come down and, step by step, put Congress and the Government in a position where the only logical thing to do is to go through with it, finish it up, and dredge it. Necessarily the next step would be that the bridge which now exists from the lower point of the island to the city of Rock Island would require reconstruction to be made into a drawbridge and then the Government will be called upon to do necessary dredging in that slough.

It is not an impossible thing in any sense. It is a very feasible plan, because with the dam which extends upstream at the upper end of the island and the dams on the Iowa side most of the water of the river is now thrown into the Moline pool. If these power dams were destroyed they could throw that water all down on the Illinois side.

A year ago, when this matter was in the river and harbor bill, I reached an agreement with that committee whereby they agreed to put in their bill a stipulation that no additional power wheels should be placed on the dams at the lower end of the pool. That was in order to safeguard the people of Davenport with respect to their water rights and to permit only such water to pass over the dams as was then being passed through the wheels now in use. The Davenport people and the Bettendorf people get all of their water for the purpose of the city out of the center of the stream on the other side of the island. Even now, when the water is low there is at times great uncertainty as to whether or not the intake will be sufficiently below the water to supply the people of that community with the water that is necessary. If any more water is diverted to the Moline side of the Rock Island Arsenal the people of Davenport are going to suffer very seriously through a lack of water suitable for ordinary purposes and fire protection. The island itself is sizable, being about 999 acres and being about 2½ miles long. The channel is naturally on the Iowa side. This movement is only in line with other steps that have been taken by which it is hoped eventually to throw the waters of the Mississippi over to the Illinois side. This is not a part of the waterway project that has been adopted by Congress.

It is only true that the Moline pool is a part of the waterway in so far as it permits boats to come down through the pool and then out at the upper end of the island through the Government locks and down on the Iowa side. This bridge is below that point, and just below that are the two dams of which I have spoken, and also the plant of the John Deere Plow Co., which is the only concern that would benefit by this improvement.

I may say that it appears in the hearings that gentlemen of the committee were told that the John Deere Plow Co. was the only concern that would benefit. When asked why that company did not load above the bridge, the answer was that they would have to buy additional ground. If they did that, no other difficulty seemed to present itself, so far as navigation is concerned.

I am very serious about this thing. I wish the chairman of the subcommittee might consent that this matter should go out of the bill for the time being; that a thorough examination of this condition be made, and if it is found that navigation requires it and it is a proper matter, I at a future time would have no objection to it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I respectfully submit that the argument which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LETTS] has made is almost exclusively confined to the merits of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair heard the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LETTS], because it seemed helpful to the Chair to have the facts as far as possible on which the law or the question of order is determined, but the Chair will now hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, the item in question reads:

For repairs and alterations, including construction of a draw or lift span in the aid of navigation, of the bridge connecting the city of Moline, Ill., with Rock Island, Ill., to be available immediately, $50,000.

The Chair, as, of course, the present distinguished occupant of the Chair is well aware, can go no further than the language of the provision or paragraph or section to which the point of order is made. The point of order, if valid at all, must be directed to section 2 of rule 21, and I have here the manual, referring to page 364, of the edition of 1925, in which the Chair will find the following language with reference to the construction of the terms, work in progress or the continuation of work already done under authority of law, and near the middle of the page I read the following:

But appropriations for rent and repairs of buildings or Government roads and bridges have been admitted as in continuation of a work, although it is not in order as such to provide for a new building in place of one destroyed.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to finish what I have to say on the question of the point of order and then I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. BLAND. This is on the point of order. I want to direct the gentleman's attention to the language, "including construction of a draw or lift span," which is a new feature, as appears from the gentleman's statement, and differs from the authority which the gentleman has presented.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman, of course, will have an opportunity to make a reply to my feeble effort to try to show that this paragraph is in order.

The manual refers specifically to volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, on page 538 of the current edition, paragraph 3803, from which I read:

An appropriation to repair a bridge built by the Government was held in order as for continuation of a public work. On January 28, 1897, the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when Mr. Frank W. Mondell, of Wyoming, moved an amendment making an appropriation for the repair of the bridge across Big Wind River, on the Shoshone Reservation in Wyoming.

Mr. Joseph G. Cannon having made a point of order against the amendment, on the ground that it was not such a public work as was contemplated by the rule, Mr. Mondell stated that the bridge was originally built by the Government.

The Chairman overruled the point of order.

It will be noted that the point of order was made by the distinguished parliamentarian, who for many years, probably subsequent to this time, was the Speaker of the House, Hon. Joseph G. Cannon. The chair was occupied at the time by another distinguished Member of the House from Illinois, the Hon. Albert J. Hopkins, who had a reputation as one of the leading parliamentarians of this House as well.

The gentleman from Virginia has suggested that the construction of the draw or lift span in aid of navigation is new work. It is part of the bridge. That is simply a detail with reference to the kind of repairs and alterations that are to be made upon the bridge.

Mr. LETTS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. LETTS. How is it a repair of that which they have had when it is supplying something entirely different and for a different purpose?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It appears this bridge has become, at least in the opinion of the Bureau of the Budget, I will say, an obstruction to navigation.

Mr. LETTS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And there is legislation on the statute books which prohibits all constructions in rivers and upon waters under the control of the United States to operate as obstructions to navigation.

Mr. LETTS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I yield.

Mr. LETTS. Does the gentleman contend that it gives authority to tear down and build a different kind of bridge?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is no showing in the language of this provision that it is proposed to tear down anything. The language is for repairs and alterations, including the construction of a draw or lift span in the aid of navigation. The bridge is there.

Mr. LETTS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. LETTS. Will the gentleman point out any legislation that has held that this has any relation whatever to navigation in that part of the stream?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman misapprehends the purpose of my argument. I am not arguing on the facts. I have called the attention of the Chair to what is stated in the paragraph itself. It is proposed as a part of the repairs and alterations to include the construction of a draw or lift span in the aid of navigation. It is not new construction but is a part of the bridge.

Mr. LETTS. Will the gentleman yield again at this point?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. LETTS. Are we going to legislate, now that this is necessary, for navigation or are we going to let the proper committee deal with the subject?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Whether it is necessary or not at this time and in this bill to make appropriations for the object in question goes to the merits. I say that it appears, from the language of the paragraph, that this draw or lift span is a part of the repairs and alterations of this bridge. This bridge was constructed by the Federal Government. It is at the location of the Rock Island Arsenal, a part of the establishment of the War Department, and most certainly Congress in passing an appropriation bill can provide for repairs and alterations made necessary by whatever cause. Something has perhaps occurred. It is suggested in the language of the provision that is proposed that it may have become necessary in aid of navigation.

That only adds to the necessity for the work. I respectfully submit that it is not proposed here to build a new bridge, it is not proposed to erect new construction, there is nothing destroyed to be replaced, but it is for the purpose of making repairs and alterations in the present structure.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Illinois state to the Chair the original authority by which the bridge was built?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to the memorandum sent by the Bureau of the Budget. It is as follows:

The bridge at Moline, Ill., a Government-owned structure, crosses the south branch of the Mississippi River and connects the city of Moline, Ill., with Rock Island, upon which is located the Rock Island Arsenal of the Ordnance Department of the Army. The bridge is a fixed structure, built by the United States in 1870–1873, and has a vertical clearance of 15.5 feet at low water. The demands of present and prospective commerce render such clearance inadequate and the bridge for this reason has been decreed by the Chief of Engineers of the Army to be obstruction to navigation. The purpose of this estimate is to enable the War Department to make such changes in the bridge as will permit free and unobstructed navigation thereunder.

It appears that the Chief of Engineers has decreed that the bridge in its present shape and condition is an obstruction to navigation, and there remains nothing for the War Department to do but to blow up the bridge and remove it or come to Congress for an appropriation for the necessary alterations and repair. No private corporation, and not even the Government itself, may maintain a bridge which in its original construction or by reason of subsequent conditions becomes an obstruction to navigation. Now, you can not have a bridge without some span.

Mr. LETTS. This bridge was built as a war measure. There is no connection with the erection of this bridge and the convenience of the public. No one at that time had any idea about navigation, because there was no water over there sufficient to float any kind of a boat until the other works of which I spoke were constructed—the building of the dams. So the gentleman is mistaken when he assumes that the reconstruction of a bridge by putting in a draw has any relation to its original purpose.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May I add, Mr. Chairman, that it is suggested that there must be a span. There is a span there now. This simply alters the span—it is an alteration and not a building of a new span. It would not be a bridge at all without a span. This is to make alterations which the War Department has found necessary under existing conditions, and it seems to me that it is clear that there is a sufficient authorization.

Mr. LETTS. I again draw attention to the fact that this is a new project with relation to the waterway of the Mississippi River at that point, and has never received the consideration of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. There has been no legislation for it at all. If there is any authority for the appropriation as in the interest of navigation it will be because of the legislation in this provision to which I object.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. ALLEN. I may drift away a little from the point of order, but I hope the Chair will bear with me, because the item refers to a bridge in my district. I have been surprised at Judge LETTS's remarks in regard to the feeling that prevails there. I never heard of it. This provision, as I understand it, is for the alteration and repair of a bridge that has the indorsement of the engineers and the Bureau of the Budget, and I fail to see, in my district or in Moline, where there is any disposition to take away any rights on the Iowa side. It is true that we have vast interests on the Illinois side; with these barge lines that have been started we look for wonderful results. It is true Moline will be one of the great shipping points on the Mississippi River. The John Deere Plow Co., one of the leading manufacturers of agricultural implements of the country, will furnish alone 500,000 tons. Moline has many other large industries and will be one of the largest and busiest ports on the Mississippi River.

This bridge is an obstruction to navigation, and at a point very vital to the success of the shipping on the river. I do not know that I can say anything to this committee better than what has been said by the Budget and by the Army engineers. I might read one extract from the hearing from Major Lewis:

Mr. BARBOUR. You have another bridge, have you not?

Major LEWIS. Yes, sir. There is one going to Davenport, and also a bridge over to the city of Rock Island.

The Government is in the position of owning a bridge which is obstructing navigation on the river. If that were a privately owned bridge, under the river and harbor act the Secretary of War would, when it was complained about, call a public meeting to determine whether or not it was a fact that navigation was being obstructed, and if so, under this act of Congress he would be authorized to direct the owner of the bridge to open it for navigation. We are in the position now of owning the bridge ourselves. It is a five-span bridge, and the simplest and cheapest plan is to take the island end span and make a vertical lift or draw out of it.

In conclusion, this is a step forward in the development of the Middle West. It so happens that in my district Moline and Rock Island are growing, thriving, manufacturing cities. For God's sake, let us not cripple them. Let us give them the help that seems to be due them at this time. I leave that with you, gentlemen.

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. LETTS. Is the gentleman informed of the fact that during this last winter, because of these dams that have been built around Davenport and Bettendorf, throwing the water into the Moline pool, the manufacturing concerns at Bettendorf and Davenport had to close up because of lack of water?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not so understand it; and I say to the gentleman from Iowa that I think he has a wonderful city over there. I think that he is more scared than hurt. I think that those three cities are all going right ahead.

Mr. LETTS. The gentleman knows that when the matter was under consideration before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors last year Davenport and Bettendorf sent down a large delegation, including the mayors and some of the most prominent men there, and those interested in the water company, and that Moline sent down the strongest delegation it could get up, and I ask the gentleman whether in his heart he believes that this is just a flitter, if there is not some substance to this, and if the people on the Iowa side are not endangered in their water supply?

Mr. ALLEN. I have never been asked by any organization or by any individual in the city of Moline about this, with one exception, and that was to call attention to the opposition that the gentleman was likely to bring on the floor here, following up with the following part of this telegram, which I shall read, and that is all I have.

The telegram is to the effect that the John Deere Plow Co. expect to construct at their own expense docks and shipping facilities to connect their factories with the barge terminals, the cost of which will be at least $50,000 and probably more. That is the sort of company that is interested in the development of this barge line, but they have to have this lift in the bridge to get the barges around to their shipping point. We are going to make your city a good city too, Judge LETTS.

Mr. LETTS. When this matter was under consideration in the subcommittee, I think it was the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] himself who inquired about the authority of law for this appropriation, and the answer was that it was contained in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899. I have asked the gentleman from Illinois and all those concerned to point out any law that is authorization for this appropriation. I have carefully read the act which was given as the authority of law, and I fail to find one word relating to the subject in the whole of the law.

Mr. ALLEN. Is the gentleman aware that the island between Moline and Davenport is the property of the United States; that the bridge connecting the island with Moline is the property of the United States; that the construction of the proposed lift is for the purpose, and the sole purpose, of aiding navigation on a navigable river of the United States? In other words, the construction of the proposed lift by the United States on a bridge owned by it and located on its property, in order to aid the navigation of its river, is questioned by the gentleman, if I understand him, on the sole ground that the United States lack power in the premises.

The products of the farms and factories of the Mississippi Valley are in immediate and pressing need of river transportation. Every hour of delay in providing that transportation means loss to the farmers and manufacturers and workmen, as well as to the merchants and other men engaged in commerce and business in that section. The situation is not one to be solved by technical quibbles but by practical sense and effort.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, it was my purpose to call attention to the act of March 3, 1899. I have just sent for it, but I have not had time to examine it. I shall read to the Chair the language of Colonel Robbins, before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, as it appears in the hearings. The question was raised whether the Moline Power Co. or anybody else had any rights in this matter. Mr. Robbins replied and said:

They have some rights under the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, which authorizes the Secretary of War to order a bridge altered when it interferes with navigation.

In this case the bridge happens to be owned by the Government, and they would claim the right of every other American citizen under that law, and say that because the bridge is owned by the Government does not alter the basic principle of that law.

As I say, I have not had time to examine the act of March 3, 1899.

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Chairman, I have carefully examined that act, and there is not a word in that that can be regarded as authority for an appropriation of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know by what authority this bridge was originally built. If this bridge was built under authority of law and is a Government bridge, the question is quite different from what it would be if it were built without authority of law.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The memorandum from the Budget states that it was built by the War Department, as part of the War Establishment. There has been no dispute of that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Assuming that this bridge was built in accordance with law, then much of the argument made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LETTS], and to some extent that made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], goes entirely to the merits of the question and not to the point of order.

Mr. BARBOUR rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I think it advisable to look into this matter further. In order to afford time for that purpose, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to have until the House meets again for the consideration of this bill in order to find what authority was originally given for the construction of this bridge.

The gentleman from California moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10286, the War Department appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL MONDAY

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has made very substantial progress on the War Department appropriation bill to-day. It would seem now that we shall probably finish it in one more day. In view of the state of the business of the House and the fact that many of the committees are working very hard on their bills, I think that we shall lose no time, and perhaps gain in the end, if we adjourn over until next Monday. Therefore, I ask unanmious consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will this bill be in order on Monday?

Mr. TILSON. No. Monday will be Consent Calendar day. We have a very long Consent Calendar, so that it will probably take all day. This bill will be taken up again on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday morning, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of papers on the Speaker's desk, I may be permitted to address the House for 35 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday morning, after the reading of the Journal and the disposal of business on the Speaker's table, he may be permitted to address the House for 35 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TENNESSEE WATER POWER AND MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, some days ago the House gave me permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a communication from the public utilities commission of my State bearing on the water resources of Tennessee and Muscle Shoals. I have received a letter from former Senator Shields bearing on the same subject, on a live legislative matter, and I would like to insert that, too.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting a letter from former Senator Shields, of Tennessee, in regard to the matter which the gentleman from Tennessee was privileged to extend on a former occasion. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following letter from former United States Senator John K. Shields upon the subject of Tennessee water-power resources and Muscle Shoals:

KNOXVILLE, TENN., January 25, 1928.

Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: When we discussed the Madden bill (H. R. 8305), and especially the provisions providing for the construction of dams on the Clinch River, some days ago, I had not read the bill and was unable to express any opinion of how these provisions affected the sovereign and property rights of the State and people of Tennessee, but have since carefully considered the copy you gave me and come to a definite opinion in regard to these matters.

I have also carefully read the letter concerning the same matters which you received from the railroad and Public Utilities Commission of Tennessee, in which the commission ably presents the sovereign powers, rights, and interests of the State and the people in streams, in which I agree with them in the abstract, but I do not think that the opinions expressed and authorities referred to are applicable to dams constructed or authorized to be constructed by the Congress for the improvement of navigation and the national defense.

The object of the Madden bill is to authorize and direct the Secretary of War, for the United States, to execute to the Air Nitrates Corporation and American Cyanamid Co. a lease of property of the United States known as the Muscle Shoals development at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River, Ala., to be operated and maintained primarily for the purpose of generating and manufacturing air nitrates to be used for the national defense and agricultural fertilizers, the lessees obligating themselves to manufacture, distribute, and sell fertilizers, and for the improvement of navigation. These were the purposes for which the Muscle Shoals development was constructed by the United States.

It has been ascertained since the construction of the Wilson Dam that in dry seasons there was not sufficient water to assure the production of sufficient power and that the construction of other dams in the Tennessee River and its tributaries is necessary.

The Clinch River has been surveyed under the direction of the Secretary of War and navigation dams and storage reservoirs located which when constructed will improve navigation upon that river as well as upon the entire Tennessee River, and supply the necessary water power at Muscle Shoals in dry seasons, and therefore the United States contracts in the lease to construct the Cove Creek Dam and authorizes the Air Nitrates Corporation and American Cyanamid Co., through a subsidiary corporation, to construct three navigation dams upon this river, the power produced by the Cove Creek Dam to be covered by the lease and that produced by the other three dams to be used, owned, and enjoyed by the lessee. These four dams are all to be constructed for improvement of navigation, the national defense, and incidental power production.

The three dams below Clinton: Congress has the unquestioned power to authorize the construction of these dams for the improvement of navigation and incidental power production by persons or corporations at their own expense. This power has been frequently exercised for many years and never challenged. The Hales Bar Dam in the Tennessee River, the Keokuk Dam in the Mississippi River, Dam No. 12 in the Coosa River, and many other large dams have been constructed under acts similar to the provisions granting the lessee licenses to construct these dams. It has been a favored way of improving navigation of streams as well as developing water-power resources without cost to the United States. The permits and licenses granted under the provisions of the Madden bill are to be governed by the provisions of the Federal water power act in all things, but the lessees are to have preference over all applicants to the Federal Water Power Commission for licenses to construct them.

The incidental power generated by these dams, its distribution and sale, however, will be subject to the laws and constituted authorities of Tennessee, no question of interstate commerce being involved in the generation, use, and sale of hydroelectric power. This is conceded by the provision in the bill that the lessee shall "construct, operate, and maintain such dam or dams subject to the applicable State and Federal laws."

Section 9 of the Federal water power act under which they are to be constructed provides, in section (b), that each applicant for a license hereunder shall submit to the commission—

"(b) Satisfactory evidence that the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State or States within which the proposed project is to be located with respect to bed and banks and to the appropriation, diversion, and use of water for power purposes and with respect to the right to engage in the business of developing, transmitting, and distributing power, and in any other business necessary to effect the purposes of a license under this act."

The Madden bill does not undertake to enable the licensee at these dams to override the authority of the State but merely provides that after the lessee has complied with the laws of the State, then, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, he shall have his preliminary permit and consequent license if desired. The time allowed the lessees to construct the dams is less than that which the Water Power Commission is authorized to allow power companies applying to it for permits and licenses.

The Cove Creek Dam: Congress has the power to construct dams for navigation improvement and the national defense as here contracted and to lease the waterpower produced. This has been done in a number of cases. The act of Congress providing for the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie navigation improvement by the United States authorized the waterpower incidentally produced to be leased or disposed of, and it was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States v. Chandler, Dunbar Co. (229 U. S. 53).

The pertinent provisions of the contract of the United States to construct the Cove Creek Dam are as follows: The lessor, for the purpose of navigation improvement, national defense, incidental flood control, and to secure the maximum production of fertilizers at Muscle Shoals in time of peace, covenants and agrees to acquire and construct with reasonable promptness Cove Creek Dam on Clinch River approximately 8 miles north of Clinton; the lessor covenants and agrees to acquire by good and marketable title, free from all defects and encumbrances, all such lands, rights, easements, and servitudes as may be necessary for the construction, operation, and maintenance of said dam, and to complete the construction thereof in good faith, and with reasonable diligence, the property when completed to become a part of the properties leased.

The power produced, its distribution and sale by the lessees, is subject to the control and regulation of the laws and constituted authorities of Tennessee as in all other cases, which I think is admitted by the provisions of the lease.

With these views of the meaning and proper construction of the provisions of the proposed lease concerning dams on the Clinch River, I am of the opinion that they do not violate any of the sovereign powers, rights, and interests of the State and people of Tennessee and are constitutional and valid. If you have any doubt of this, you could offer an amendment to the bill that no provision of the lease shall violate any of the sovereign rights of the State, which will doubtless be accepted, because if it is done they will be void.

The lease contains a contract by the United States that it will not construct or allow to be constructed a dam on the Tennessee River or its tributaries that will materially impair the full enjoyment by the lessees of the property leased, which is objectionable and should be stricken out. Congress had no power to make such a contract, because it does not relate to or affect navigation, but solely to the private business of the lessees. However, it is void, meaningless, and harmless, and entitled to no serious consideration.

The chief objection, it is understood, to the Madden bill comes from the power companies, and especially those that have made application to the Federal Water Power Commission, but not to the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission of Tennessee, for permits and licenses to construct the dams on the Clinch River, as well as dams on other rivers in Tennessee, which will doubtless be granted by the Federal Water Power Commission if the Madden bill is not enacted granting such licenses to the Air Nitrates Corporation and American Cyanamid Co. by the United States.

In other words, the contest is between the United States in its effort to improve navigation and provide for the manufacture of fertilizers for the use of farmers and nitrates for national defense, and the Cyanamid Co., which owns the process for the manufacture of nitrates on the one part, and the power companies which desire by their application more than 20 dams on the Tennessee River and its tributaries in east Tennessee for power purposes, the granting of which will give them power to dispose of the hydroelectricity produced and transmitted to other States almost in their absolute discretion.

The water-power companies have long opposed the generation and sale of hydroelectricty by others than themselves. They opposed the completion of the Wilson Dam; they opposed and by delay defeated the proposition of Henry Ford to lease the Muscle Shoals developmpent, and it is said the Fertilizer Trust joined them in this fight. The 13 associated power companies opposed a similar bill to the present one and had a bill introduced granting them a lease, although they owned no processes for the manufacture of air nitrates and their proposition to do so was of doubtful construction. They have introduced no bill to the present Congress, doubtless because of the Walsh resolution pending in the Senate for the investigation of the power companies; but there are two bills for Government operation or lease, and it is probable that they will gain control of the electric power under these if the Madden bill is not enacted. It is also quite certain if the Madden bill is not passed in the present Congress there will be no proposition from a company manufacturing fertilizers in the future, and the Muscle Shoals power will all pass into the hands of the power companies and be lost to the agricultural interests of the country.

There is another point I would call your attention to: The Air Nitrates Corporation and the American Cyanamid Co. are chemical manufacturing companies and not water-power companies. The construction of the dams on the Clinch River will assure ample power at Muscle Shoals all the year to conduct their business to produce the maximum amount of fertilizers provided for in the lease. They must dispose of the power produced by the dams on the Clinch River, and it will be more profitable for them to sell it to manufacturing companies located near the dams, which will be of very great advantage to Tennessee in the increase of population and taxable property. They in all probability will have no expensive distribution lines to transmit it a distance or out of the State.

I do not wish anything I have said in this letter to be construed as a criticism upon the members of the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission of Tennessee, for they are all gentlemen of integrity and ability and are patriotically asserting and defending the sovereign rights of Tennessee and the people in the water power resources of Tennessee and are not and can not in any way be influenced in the discharge of their duties contrary to the interests of the people of the State by anyone. I favor and approve their assertion of the State's rights which the power companies have ignored and are now attacking by a bill in the chancery court of Nashville.

I have written you quite at length about this matter because I am deeply interested in the manufacture of cheap fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, the provisions for the national defense, and the development of the water-power resources of the Tennessee River for the benefit of the people of Tennessee.

Yours truly,

JOHN K. SHIELDS.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, following the special order just made, I may address the House for one hour on Tuesday on the coal-strike situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday, following the address of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL], he may address the House for one hour on the coal-strike situation. Is there objection.

Mr. BARBOUR. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, would not some other day be just as convenient to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CASEY. I will say to the gentleman that I had an allotment of time in the general debate on this bill, but I was compelled to postpone speaking on account of attendance on a hearing on another appropriation bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not want to object to the gentleman's request, but I am very anxious to dispose of this appropriation bill at the next session of the House, and if an hour were allowed to the gentleman on Tuesday that could not be done.

Mr. TILSON. I doubt if next Calendar Wednesday will be crowded. Perhaps the gentleman might get time on Calendar Wednesday. He can get it by unanimous consent.

Mr. CASEY. Then I modify my request, Mr. Speaker, to the extent that I be given one hour on Calendar Wednesday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposal of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposal of business on the Speaker's table, he may address the House for one hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

IMMIGRATION AND THE CRIME WAVE

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, on January 27, 1928, my colleague, Hon. ROBERT ALEXIS GREEN, of Florida, delivered an address over the radio on the subject of "Immigration and the crime wave," which address I ask may be inserted in the RECORD by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address recently delivered over the radio by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me today, I herewith insert in the RECORD an eloquent and patriotic address delivered by the Hon. ROBERT ALEXIS GREEN, Representative of the second congressional district of Florida, over the radio on January 27, 1928, discussing the subject Immigration and the Crime Wave. The address is instructive, entertaining, and worthy of the careful consideration of the Nation.

The address is as follows:

Friends and citizens of America, the subject of immigration is so wide in its scope that it will be impossible for me to give a detailed discussion of it in the short time which I will talk to you this evening; however, it is one of the most important subjects now affecting the citizenship of our great Nation. A high order of citizenship is vital to any nation. A nation's strength in itself and its power and position in the affairs of other nations is established and maintained solely by the stable type of citizenship comprising it.

Our Constitution vested in the Congress the power to regulate and control immigration. However, the subject of immigration was vainly attempted to be regulated by treaty up until about the year 1882, when the American Government tried to settle the Chinese question by a treaty in which it was recited that the right of races to migrate was inherent and inalienable. This was to apply as between the Chinese millions and the United States. Thus it was found imperative that the United States should pass her first immigration law. The influx of aliens grew steadily until by the year 1907 the high peak was reached with the admission of 1,285,349 persons.

This alarming situation brought about the passage of the illiteracy test act in 1917, which only retarded slightly the great influx of foreign hordes. In 1910, 1,041,570; in 1913, 1,197,892; and in 1914, 1,218,480 entered. The abnormal conditions during the World War period, of course, directed the attention of the world in channels other than that of immigration, but soon after the World War—during the reconstruction period—again immigrants by the hundreds of thousands turned their eyes and hopes toward the United States, causing the necessity of the 1921 numerical control act. This act was found inadequate to cope with the situation, and on May 26, 1924, Congress made its third effort to limit the annual influx of aliens. The immigration department of our Government is now working rather effectively under the provisions of this and subsequent acts of Congress, but in spite of all efforts of Congress and the diligence of immigration officials there are to-day in the United States probably 16,000,000 persons of foreign birth, 7,000,000 of whom are not American citizens. Thus you will see the necessity of all efforts at the restriction of immigration.

NEED MORE HELP

The immigration department employs about 2,700 persons. Of this number, nearly 800 are immigrant inspectors and more than 700 are border patrolmen. It can readily be seen that this number is inadequate to cope with some 7,000,000 aliens and some 10,000 miles of border to patrol.

If the border to be patroled could be averaged among the few patrolmen on the 8-hour basis, making allowance for sick leave and other possible absentees, it would be reasonable to approximate 25 miles of border per day to be inspected by one patrolman. Then when we consider that the quota law does not apply to Canada, Mexico, Central America, South America, and some of the islands, it is very easy to see the weakest place of our present immigration laws and their enforcement. Hundreds of thousands of aliens cross these borders annually, thousands of whom remain in the United States. Millions of aliens come into this country either by land or sea annually; the admissibility of these people has to be passed upon by our Bureau of Immigration. Of course, this number includes tourists, students, and aliens of all classes. I merely mention this to show how impossible it is for the limited personnel of our department to cope with this tremendous situation.

GIGANTIC TASK

Our country has a total population of more than 100,000,000, 15 per cent or possibly 20 per cent of which is foreign born, and in almost every case speaking a language foreign to ours. It is readily seen that we have a great task to Americanize, assimilate, and amalgamate these foreigners. These 15,000,000 or possibly 20,000,000 persons of foreign birth, 7,000,000 of whom are aliens, are indeed a heavy burden for American society and for American institutions to carry. These foreigners, in general, exact a tremendous toll from our civilization. In January, 1927, 113,105 aliens were inmates of United States prisons, penitentiaries, jails, insane asylums, hospitals, and poorhouses. The economic loss represented by these figures is appalling. Each of these aliens, considered economically, is less than zero; he is a distinct liability. The amount of money expended annually to support these aliens would, within a few years, build hard roads enough to "checker-board" the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Rio Grande to Canada. I know of no good reason why the United States should be so foolish as to permit these conditions to continue.

There are many suggestions to the Congress which would strengthen our National immigration and deportation laws. Recently the House Committee on Immigration, of which I am a member, approved a deportation law which, if passed, will help a great deal; however, my feeling in the matter is that any and all aliens in the United States who are found guilty of violating any law whatsoever of the United States or of any State of the Union, should be, without delay, deported. Aliens who are found guilty of operating gambling houses, "gun-toting," violating in any manner State or Federal prohibition laws, or any other infraction of our minor laws, should be instantly deported the same as if he had committed a graver offense. Probably 80 per cent of those who violate the laws are "repeaters." You can examine the statistics of almost any penal institution and find that a high percentage, in some cases more than 80 per cent, of those who are in prison have been convicted of offenses other than the one for which they are serving.

ALIENS SHOULD BE REGISTERED

In my opinion all aliens, by law and practice, should be compelled to register upon entering the United States and should be compelled to carry on their person such certificate of registration. I believe further that omission of or refusal of any alien to avail himself of the United States laws of naturalization should be grounds for his deportation at the discretion of the trial court. No alien should be permitted to stay in the United States more than five years without becoming a naturalized citizen. To-day there are hundreds of thousands of foreigners in the United States who have been here for years and years, have never declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States, do not desire to be citizens of the United States; but on the other hand many of them are ready, waiting, and willing at all times to foment trouble and disloyalty to the United States Constitution, laws, and institutions.

A few months ago the United States was brought face to face with the underhanded bolshevistic and communistic working of undesirable aliens. This was brought to a climax during and just after the notorious Sacco-Vanzetti trial. These two depraved and abhorrent murderers committed their acts some seven years before justice was administered to them. A perverted sympathizer of Sacco and Vanzetti, named Edward H. James, a socialist or Red, referring to the trial said:

"You had a crazy judge and jury in Plymouth. You had the same crazy judge and jury in Dedham. You had a crazy Supreme Court of Massachusetts sitting in the courthouse in Boston, saying it was right. The trial of these men was an infamy that cries to Heaven. Take them out from prison. Then punish those who committed the infamy. I am not telling you what to do. I am interpreting history for you. * * * Justice is terrible when it strikes. Revolutions are not made to order. Either we break the Government or the Government breaks us."

These statements of his were taken up by sympathizers of Sacco and Vanzetti and so radical did their minds incline until the courthouse, the court, and other officials had to be guarded and protected from unlawful attacks. Even the homes of the judge and attorney had to be protected by armed guards. After the conviction of these men their friends perpetrated a series of outrages all over the world, exploding bombs and blowing up buildings. So vicious were their designs until when the veterans of the Allied Armies of the World War made a pilgrimage back to Paris and other scenes of their great deeds of heroism, it was necessary for these exponents of humanity and democracy to have guards against the inroads of these numerous Reds.

A leader in the movement to set free these two murderers was Felix Frankfurter, who worked for the defense of Mooney and Billings, red murderers. Notable among this array of reds may be mentioned Charlotte A. Whitney, who was convicted of criminal syndicalism in California for advocating the overthrow of the State by force, and who was not long ago pardoned by the Governor of California. A petition purporting to contain almost half a million signatures protested the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti; thus we see there are hundreds of thousands of these reds, communists, bolshevists who are here working in this country to destroy our Constitution, our people, our Army, our Navy, our churches, our schools, our homes.

It is time that the United States should have a general awakening and educate her citizens to the needs of the hour; educate them to pure Americanism and the protection of our Nation and her institutions. It is time that our immigration and deportation laws have teeth put into them whereby the courts and other officials of our country can instantly ascertain the activity of aliens in crime, lawlessness, and red propaganda and promptly deport them.

CRIME WAVE

The crime wave is engulfing America. Almost every newspaper you pick up has a startling headline like the following: "Fireburg sets seven fires;" "Paroled moron sought as girl's slayer;" "Lost girl sought on Island;" "Hickman, fiendish slayer, captured;" "Fox (Hickman) wins plea for new judge;" "Hotelling confesses attacking and slaying 5-year-old girl;" "Hickman seeks highbrow jury;" "Remus declared insane." This, my friends, is evidence that the crime wave is sweeping the United States because the red-blooded American citizens are apparently becoming careless relative to the enforcement of the laws of the country and apparently careless relative to properly educating the rising generation.

It is time we were instilling in the youth of our land their duties as courts, as peace officers, jurors, and law-abiding citizens. The youth of to-day will fill these places to-morrow. It is time the citizens of the United States should look with disgust and contempt upon the violation of laws and discontinue signing requests for pardons, paroles, and other impediments to the justice of the law. It is time that Americans should look upon real American laws and institutions as theirs and endeavor to protect them instead of taking the side of and protecting and shielding criminals, law violators, and enemies of society. It is time the country should denounce so-called alienists along with other deterrents to law enforcement, justice, and civilization. Often the origin of these ills can be traced to undesirable immigrants. I do not mean to say that all aliens are undesirable; some are high type, splendid people, and make good citizens.

ACROSS THE BORDERS

From south of the Rio Grande hundreds of thousands of Mexicans are pouring into our country, oftentimes at the behest of the various employers of large industrial enterprises. These who would decoy to our lands and then employ undesirable alien labor in competition with the splendid American laborer surely should be stopped. Cheap labor to-day may be an expensive liability to-morrow, and surely in the Mexican peon laborer this condition has obtained. The American laborer resides among us, pays taxes, contributes to the welfare and upbuilding of society and really stands at the helm of the ship of state of our mighty Nation. On the contrary, foreign labor drifts into our country, obains what it can for its hire, gives as little return as possible, in most cases, and then invariably thrusts itself for a charitable existence upon society, in the founding of which it has not assisted.

Another reason why the quota should apply to the country south of the Rio Grande and the islands is because their population in the main is composed of mixtured blood of white, Indian, and negro. This makes their blood a very great penalty upon the society which assimilates it. The United States already has sufficient race and blood troubles.

Influx of all types of undesirable aliens and their amalgamation with our people will cause a general weakening, physically and mentally, of our civilization; and instead of our Nation then being the mistress of the world, leading in art, science, invention, finance, statesmanship, culture, and general civilized development, would it not be reasonable to believe that we would assume a secondary place as compared to those nations which have kept their blood white and purely Caucasian? I do not tell you that these things will come to pass, but I do say we already have enough Japanese, Chinese, Italians, Negroes, and other foreign strains. It is time to entirely stop the islands, Europe, Asia, and Africa from dumping their scum and riffraff on our beautiful American shores.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], who is now in the coal districts investigating the conditions there, be permitted to address the House for half an hour on Monday. I do that in pursuance of a request by wire that I have just received.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman says he is in the coal districts?

Mr. MORIN. Yes. I have just received a wire from him. I did not know before that he was there.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is the same subject that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CASEY] wishes to speak about?

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to discourage unanimous consent for talking on Monday, which is set aside for the Consent Calendar.

Mr. MORIN. Then I make it Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday, at the conclusion of the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CASEY], the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] may be permitted to address the House for half an hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE HOUSE RULES

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report to accompany House Resolution 107, amending paragraph 34 of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I have here a bill (H. R. 6461) for the construction of an irrigation dam on Walker River, Nev. It is an Indian matter. It was referred to the Committee on Irrigation. I have conferred with both the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and with the chairman of the Irrigation Committee, and both are agreeable to the transfer of this bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6461) for the construction of an irrigation dam on the Walker River, Nev.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to be transferred from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 131) entitled "Joint resolution providing for a commission to investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S–4 and upon methods and appliances for the protection of submarines," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ODDIE, and Mr. SWANSON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until Monday, February 6, 1928, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Saturday, February 4, 1928, as reported by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

(10.30 a. m.)

Department of Agriculture appropriation bill.

District of Columbia appropriation bill.

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION—SUBCOMMITTEE ON HOSPITALS

(10 a. m.)

To authorize an appropriation to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons entitled to hospitalization under the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (H. R. 5604).

COMMITTEE ON ROADS

(10 a. m.)

To amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented (H. R. 358, 383, 5518, 7343, and 8832).

To amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and authorizing appropriation of $150,000,000 per annum for two years (H. R. 7019).

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

(11 a. m.)

A meeting to consider favorable reports from the office of the Chief of Engineers on rivers and harbors projects.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

(10.30 a. m.)

That the use of submarines be prohibited and their construction discontinued in this and every other country (H. J. Res. 139).

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—SUBCOMMITTEE ON POLICE AND FIREMEN

(10.30 a. m.)

To fix the salaries of officers and members of the Metropolitan police force, and the fire department of the District of Columbia (H. R. 9346).

COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS—SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 8

(10.30 a. m.)

To authorize the assignment of railway postal clerks and substitute railway postal clerks to temporary employment as substitute sea post clerks (H. R. 58).

To authorize the Postmaster General to require steamship companies to carry the mail when tendered (H. R. 6864).

To prescribe more definitely the rates of compensation payable to steamships of United States registry for transportation of foreign mails (H. R. 6865).

For Monday, February 6, 1928

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

(10 a. m.)

To establish a Federal farm board to aid in the orderly marketing and in the control and disposition of the surplus of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce (H. R. 7940).

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

(10.30 a. m.)

To regulate the employment of minors within the District of Columbia (H. R. 6685).

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

(10.30 a. m.)

To provide for the increase of the Naval Establishment (H. R. 7359).

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

(10.30 a. m.)

Department of Agriculture appropriation bill.

COMMITTEE ON ROADS

(10 a. m.)

To amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented (H. R. 358, 383, 5518, 7343, and 8832).

To amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and authorizing appropriation of $150,000,000 per annum for two years (H. R. 7019).

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

338. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV a letter from the Secretary of Navy, transmitting draft of a proposed bill "To provide additional pay for enlisted men of the United States Navy assigned to duty on submarine vessels of the Navy," was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XII,

SENATE

SATURDAY, February 4, 1928

(Legislative day of Wednesday, February 1, 1928)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

ROBERT W. STEWART—RECUSANT WITNESS

The Sergeant at Arms (David S. Barry) appeared and said: Mr. President, acting under instructions of a warrant issued to the Sergeant at Arms by the President of the Senate, Robert W. Stewart was taken into the custody of the Senate. He has applied for and obtained a writ of habeas corpus, which is returnable Tuesday, February 7.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 133), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be, and it hereby is, authorized in its discretion to employ counsel to represent the Senate in any proceedings taken by Robert W. Stewart to secure his release from the custody of the Sergeant at Arms in any court.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the resolution will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I trust that the Committee to Audit and Control will be able to take the matter under immediate consideration.

I submit a further resolution, in the form of a motion. I move that the President of the Senate be directed to certify to the district attorney for the District of Columbia the report made on yesterday by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys for appropriate action by that officer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion is agreed to. Does the Senator from Montana ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution submitted by him?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so referred.

Mr. FESS subsequently said: I ask leave to report Senate Resolution 133 from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I call the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Without objection, the report will be received and the substitute resolution will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out all after the word "Resolved" and insert:

That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ counsel at a cost of not to exceed $2,500, to be paid out of the contingent expenses of the Senate, to represent the Senate in any proceedings taken by Robert W. Stewart to secure his release from the custody of the Sergeant at Arms in any court.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Montana?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. KING. I just came into the Chamber and I was wondering whether the last resolution which the Senator offered contemplates the abandonment of any policy of procedure which would bring Mr. Stewart before the Senate?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not at all. I am very glad that question has been asked.

Mr. KING. It looks as though it might be inconsistent.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not at all. Under the procedure which was contemplated, should Colonel Stewart appear here he would be relieved from the custody of the Senate at any time he would signify a willingness to answer the questions which were propounded to him. Thereupon the power of the Senate is gone; we could not hold him for a moment.

But, Mr. President, this is an offense, a grave offense, punishable by imprisonment. I think that the time has come when the dignity of the Senate of the United States ought to be recognized and it ought to be appreciated that it is no trifling affair to defy its authority, however high the recusant witness may stand. I am not content at all to excuse Colonel Stewart if he should now agree to testify. His offense is properly punishable, as was the offense of Mr. Harry F. Sinclair, who was sentenced to 90 days in the common jail.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield just for a question. I do not want the Senator to hold the floor, however.

Mr. CARAWAY. I just came into the Chamber. I understood a motion was made to certify the matter to the district attorney of the District of Columbia. Is that the plan?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Have we ever had anything but delay in any matter that went down to the courts? Sinclair is out, and they have been pretending to try a contempt case before Judge Siddons since the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. It seems to me that anything which is certified down there we might as well say is merely off our hands and that the parties involved are in no danger of being punished.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely wish to inquire of the Senator from Montana the purpose of certifying the record to the district attorney. Is it to inform the habeas corpus court of what transpired before the committee and in the Senate? Or is it to enable the district attorney to institute a criminal prosecution?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I asked that the proceedings be certified there in order that the district attorney might procure an indictment against the offender.

Mr. GEORGE. For his refusal to testify?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it the Senator's view that indictment of the witness for his refusal to answer the questions propounded by the committee would in no manner bar or embarrass direct action by the Senate?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think it would not. If the Senator from Alabama will yield for a moment further, I desire to say that it is regrettable that these interminable delays occur, but we know of no way to avoid them.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is more than regrettable; it has become a national scandal. There is not a law-abiding and law-enforcing citizen of America who does not realize that the proceeding which is going on here now in the court is just a farce. If there is no way to punish people for corrupting Cabinet members, for defying the courts, and defying the Congress, we might as well know it. What is the use of certifying anything to court when we know we shall never live long enough to hear the end of it?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that Mr. Stewart has sued out a writ. I presume the Senate will respect that writ. I take it that the certifying of the record there is to assist in determining whether or not he is entitled to release under the writ.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Idaho will not live long enough to have that question determined by the court.

Mr. BORAH. That may be true, but I am in fairly good health.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know; but if the Senator lives to be as old as Methuselah—and I would be very glad if he should—he will not see the end of this matter.

Mr. BORAH. The question is, Mr. President, the writ having been allowed, it is our duty to send the record down there so the court may have everything before it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not think so. What does the court care for that?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, Senators who have just spoken have said some of the things that I had in mind. The resolution was about to be passed without anything being said by the Senate, and I did not want that to happen so far as I am concerned.

This man Stewart has challenged the Senate and its authority. He has defied the Senate. He has been congratulated by other oil magnates for his impudence and insolence. They are encouraging him to stand out against the Senate. I do not think that the Senate should permit this case to drag along as the Sinclair case has dragged. We ought to keep behind this case until it is disposed of. This man ought to be put in prison. If he were a poor man in the common walks of life, he would be in jail now. There would not be any writ of habeas corpus for him. No delay would be had in his case.

But these men, who think more of their money than they do of their country, can go unwhipped of justice. They can come here and connive together to rob the Government, to steal its property, and when we catch them like we would any other thief, they sit up and tell Senators on the committee who want to know the truth that it is none of their business. Are we going to permit this thing to continue?

The trial of the Sinclair case is a farce. It has been a farce in this city for months. They have sidetracked the main issue to go off trying a detective and a juror, that they tried to bribe, for the purpose of dragging the main case along until they wear it out. Has Sinclair ever served a day of his sentence for contempt of the Senate? Not a day. We ordered him sent to prison months and months ago. Has he served any time? None whatever. The penitentiaries are full of people who have committed far less offenses than those of Sinclair and Stewart. But the big, rich men can go and commit their crimes and defy the courts, mock the statutes, and then come to the Capitol itself and flaunt their insolence and insults in the face of the Senate and get away with it.

This morning the papers tell us that certain big oil magnates are wiring Stewart congratulating him for refusing to tell the Senate the things the Senate wants to know and that the Senate has a right to know. Mr. President, we are reaching a pitiful pass in this country. The money supply of the United States is being manipulated for the benefit of the stock gamblers, the grain gamblers, and the cotton gamblers.

On yesterday, while Stewart was defying the Senate and refusing to tell about what he had done with the money they had stolen from the Government, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York raised the rediscount rate and broke the stock market and caught the little fellows going and coming and shut them out in a day; and this man is defying the Senate at the Capitol and the banking system of New York is being used to crush out the small shareholders and stockholders for the benefit of the big financial men of the country. God help the Senate to wake up to the evils and dangers that are upon us as a people!

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WILLIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by Washington Post, No. 12, Grand Army of the Republic, at Lawrence, Kans., praying for the passage of legislation granting increases of pensions to $50 per month to all widows of Civil War veterans not now receiving that rate, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn and Long Island, N. Y., praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Buffalo, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Brookhart bill, relative to the distribution of motion pictures in the various motion-picture zones of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club of Sheridan and the Kiwanis Club of Douglas, both in the State of Wyoming, protesting against any amendment of the immigration laws that would result in restricting the immigration of Mexican farm laborers into the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BLAINE presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to create a special committee to thoroughly investigate the existing bituminous coal strike in all its phases, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to enact necessary legislation for a survey of the Wisconsin-Fox Rivers waterway and for the completion of such waterway, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

[See the foregoing joint resolution of the Wisconsin Legislature when presented on yesterday by Mr. LA FOLLETTE and printed in full, page 2404, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.]

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN ANARCHISTS

Mr. TRAMMELL subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning when different Senators were being accorded the privilege of speaking out of order by unanimous consent, presenting petitions and memorials, I had in my hand a letter which I had received from the Commissioner General of Immigration replying to a communication which I had addressed to him relative to the law governing the question of the deportation of alien anarchists.

As Senators will recall, last year, at the time there was so much in the press and so much being said over the country regarding Sacco and Vanzetti, open and brazen anarchists, who had to pay the penalty—and as much as I dislike to see anyone pay that kind of a penalty, they should have paid it, in my opinion—there arose in the minds of many people the question of the authority of the Federal Government to deport alien anarchists.

I was of the impression at that time that the law covered the situation, and that there was ample authority, and I so stated in my State, and I believe also in the city of Washington, which expression was given some publicity. I heartily believe such men should be deported.

I took up the subject recently with the Commissioner General of Immigration, that I might have a letter from him stating to me specifically what the law was on the subject. I have his reply here, which I desire to have placed in the RECORD.

So far as I am concerned, I think we ought to do everything we can to discourage the spirit of anarchy, either on the part of alien anarchists or on the part of those who may not be aliens. I wish to have this letter published in order that it may be seen and known throughout the country that the alien anarchist is subject to deportation, and also that there is a penalty for those who encourage anarchists in their spirit of anarchy.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
BUREAU OF IMMIGRATION,
Washington, January 28, 1928.

HON. PARK TRAMMELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TRAMMELL: I have your letter of January 23, 1928, in which you inquire whether under the immigration statutes authority is vested in the Secretary to deport alien anarchists.

Section 19 of the immigration act of February 5, 1917, among other classes, directs the deportation of "any alien who at any time after entry shall be found advocating or teaching the unlawful destruction of property, or advocating or teaching anarchy, or the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law or the assassination of public officials."

Section 28 of the said act reads as follows:

"That any person who knowingly aids or assists any anarchist or any person who believes in or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or who disbelieves in or is opposed to organized government, or all forms of law, or who advocates the assassination of public officials, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining or teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, to enter the United States, or who connives or conspires with any person or persons to allow, procure, or permit any such anarchist or person aforesaid to enter therein, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"Any person who knowingly aids or assists any alien who advocates or teaches the unlawful destruction of property to enter the United States shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

The act of October 16, 1918, as amended by the act of June 5, 1920, deals entirely with alien anarchists and other kindred classes. This act provides for their exclusion and deportation from the United States, and also provides for the imposition of a severe penalty against an alien who returns to or enters the United States or attempts to return or enter the United States after he has been excluded and deported or arrested and deported in pursuance to provisions of the said act.

Concerning the policy in regard to the deportation of anarchists and other kindred classes, you are advised that the usual procedure is followed in these cases; that is, when information is secured from any source that a person is suspected of being an alien anarchist, the lead is always followed and in the event it is ascertained that the subject is an alien and is deportable under the provisions above referred to, deportation is ordered after the subject is accorded a hearing.

Very cordially yours,

HARRY E. HULL,
Commissioner General.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 3019) to amend the immigration laws, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. HOWELL, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2984) for the relief of Ella S. Brown, and it was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS IN PENNSYLVANIA COAL FIELDS

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I desire to read into the RECORD a telegram received by me yesterday from Representative LAGUARDIA and to commend it to the Interstate Commerce Committee, which has in charge at present the resolution providing for an investigation of the conditions existing in Pennsylvania coal fields. The telegram is as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 3, 1928.

HON. HIRAM JOHNSON,
United States Senate:

Have just made first tour of mining district and have interviewed several people. I have never witnessed such distressing conditions. Misery, suffering, and humiliation of strikers and their families simply beyond description. The brutality of private police of mine owners and utter disregard of law shocking and amazing. The poor, unhappy, and miserable strike breakers are veritable prisoners. They are not only exploited, but being debauched and depraved by their employers. A crew of these strike breakers crazed with hootch were armed with shotguns yesterday and told to shoot into the barracks where the families of the miners are living. They even deliberately shot into the school while in session. Have personally seen signed confession of one of these gunmen admitting being instructed and paid by private police to commit these outrageous acts. Mine owners not only maintain private police force, but have private jail, where miners are unlawfully detained and viciously assaulted. Please press your resolution to a vote. An investigation should commence at once. Am continuing my observations. Mr. McCory, of Daily News, most helpful. He has an abundance of documentary evidence and was witness to cowardly assault instigated as above stated.

F. H. LAGUARDIA,
Member of Congress.

In addition to that, Mr. President, I read into the RECORD the brief confession that is referred to in the telegram of Representative LAGUARDIA, as follows:

I, Hampton Matthews, of my own free will and accord and under no duress, do hereby make this statement, and I realize that anything I may say can be used against me. I, Hampton Matthews, employed by the Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Co. as a strike breaker, and another colored man by the name of John Thomas, employed by the same company, living in house No. 65, at mine 6, did on the night of February 1, 1928, shoot at, with intent to do bodily injury, to the stores and barracks home of the striking miners and their families across the county road from the mine at Bruceton, Pa.

I fired six shots from a revolver into the windows of the occupied barracks. John Thomas, my buddy, fired about six shots into the windows with a sawed-off shotgun.

POLICE ACCUSED

We were promised $25 each for doing this by a coal and iron policeman employed by the same company, known to me by the name of Wilkenson or Williamson.

I saw six coal and iron police stop the auto of the squire as it left the State road to come on company property after us. The coal and iron police held the squire and his constable back while we ran down the State road, where we stuck up three striking miners, but did not molest them. We continued on up the back way into the mine, and finally hid in company house No. 65.

All of this was done with the knowledge of the coal and iron police.

I beg of the committee that has in charge the resolution providing for an investigation of the conditions existing in the Pennsylvania coal fields speedy action. I ask that speedy action realizing, sir, that that committee has much to do; but to-day, as I understand from those who come from the States that are interested, there is no opposition of any kind or character to the resolution which I have introduced. I ask, therefore, that a committee meeting be held at the earliest possible moment, and, because there is no opposition to the resolution, that the resolution be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from California permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. This matter is so urgent, and the situation is so serious, why does not the Senator ask to have the committee discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, so that it may be considered and adopted by the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I have confidence in the committee. I have assurances that it will act; I expect it to act within a very brief period. If, however, it does not act within a very brief period, either because of congestion of business or for any other reason, I shall pursue the course which is suggested by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I came into the Chamber a moment ago and heard merely the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from California. I wish to give him some assurance that the resolution he has introduced will have a very early hearing by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thank the Senator.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT DOCUMENTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report showing the number of documents received and distributed by the Treasury Department during the calendar year ended December 31, 1927, together with the number remaining on hand January 1, 1928, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT—THE EVIL AND THE REMEDY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD an address by William G. McAdoo at a law-enforcement meeting at Richmond, Va., under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Anti-Saloon League, and other organizations, February 1, 1928.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The prohibition question to-day has become far wider and far deeper than prohibition. There is, in fact, no prohibition question in the sense that the policy of prohibition is in issue. The people of this country have already settled that by putting into the Constitution a provision prohibiting the "manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes within the United States and all territory subject to its jurisdiction." The real issue, the fundamental issue, is: Shall the Constitution and the laws of the United States be respected and obeyed by the people and by the duly constituted officers of every State in the Union? Or shall a State in its sovereign capacity be permitted to disregard any part of the Constitution of the United States which it elects not to obey?

Before I discuss the question it is important to review briefly the history of the eighteenth amendment. For more than 50 years those who favored prohibition proceeded by lawful and constitutional means to win public opinion to the adoption of the policy they advocated. During those 50 years they were forced to submit to the will of an adverse majority, which was not yet ripe to follow their counsels. However unpalatable that submission and however obnoxious the evil which they sought to suppress, they resorted to no violation of law to secure their ends. They were content with a campaign of education and persuasion. By the slow but resistless enlightenment of public opinion they finally reached their goal and the legal steps which the Constitution prescribes for the adoption of an amendment were duly and solemnly taken. How was this done? First by securing such overwhelming support of public opinion that, by a two-thirds vote in each House in the Congress of the United States, a resolution was adopted submitting to the 48 States the eighteenth amendment for their acceptance or rejection.

The Constitution requires that the legislatures of three-fourths of the States shall ratify an amendment before it becomes a part of the Constitution. In the present instance the legislatures of 46 out of the 48 States, acting independently, ratified the eighteenth amendment and thus it became, in January, 1920, a part of the supreme law of the land. The validity of the amendment was at once attacked in the courts by the State of Rhode Island and certain brewing and distilling interests. In the Supreme Court of the United States eminent counsel appeared on both sides, among them Charles Evans Hughes, in support of the amendment, and Elihu Root against it. The case was ably and exhaustively argued. The Supreme Court delivered a decision upholding the validity of the amendment and putting a quietus on every legal technicality and question by which skillful lawyers attempted to impeach it. The policy of prohibition is, therefore, firmly anchored in the Constitution and every unlawful effort on the part of any individual or group or on the part of a sovereign state to thwart or defeat it is in direct contravention of the supreme law of the land.

One frequently hears the suggestion, in fact, the charge, made by some who occupy high official positions in certain States that the Federal Government, in the exercise of its duty to enforce the eighteenth amendment, is encroaching upon the rights of the States. Let us examine that. How does the Federal Government derive its powers? How did the Constitution, under which the Federal Government was formed, come into being? It came into being and its powers originated wholly through the action of the States, which by their votes ratifying the Constitution, granted to the Federal Government the powers embodied in the Constitution, powers which up to the time of such grant were possessed exclusively by the States themselves. The same thing is true of all other powers subsequently granted to the Federal Government in the form of constitutional amendments; the States granted them. Whatever power the eighteenth amendment confers on the Federal Government was conferred by the free and solemn act of the forty-six State legislatures which ratified the amendment, and this made it as binding upon the two nonconcurring States as if they had formally ratified it.

Those who claim, therefore, that the Federal Government has, by some surreptitious or illegitimate or sinister means, usurped the power of the States in connection with the suppression of the liquor traffic, and that these Federal powers constitute a violation of State rights, have no ground to stand upon. The measure of Federal power and State power and the dividing line between the two are prescribed by the Constitution, including all amendments thereto, and the Supreme Court of the United States, by upholding the validity of the eighteenth amendment, has declared that the power which that amendment confers upon the Federal Government is valid and binding upon all the States. Can any State be heard to say that its prerogatives are invaded by a constitutional provision to which the consent of the States was secured in the manner which the Constitution itself prescribes?

The organized liquor traffic, with its vast profits at stake, would not, however, accept this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. It was not willing to face the necessity of having to appeal to public opinion. It realized that if it was relegated to the lawful means prescribed by the Constitution for repealing or changing the eighteenth amendment it would take even longer to get the amendment out of the Constitution, if it could be gotten out at all, than it took the prohibitionists to put it in. Therefore, the liquor interests deliberately entered upon a course of political action to secure the destruction of the eighteenth amendment without having to wait for the repeal of the amendment by the constitutional method. Their devices is to gain political control in certain States and to use the power of these State governments to thwart the purpose of the amendment. They have been successful in capturing political power in the States of New York and Maryland. The course they have pursued in those States illustrates their method of preventing enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, and shows how the action of the State governments can be used to bring about a situation in the other States which would be the same as if that amendment had never been adopted. Let me refer again to the charge made by the opponents of prohibition that the eighteenth amendment confers a monopoly of power upon the Federal Government at the expense of the States.

That nothing could be less true is shown by the tactics which these same opponents of prohibition have adopted and which prove that they well know that success or failure in enforcing the amendment is largely in the hands of the States. So far is the eighteenth amendment from conferring a monopoly of power upon the Federal Government that the amendment expressly places the obligation of concurrent enforcement on the States. These powers are as broad as those conferred on the Federal Government. The effort of the amendment is to secure cooperation by the States toward a common purpose, and to that end it addresses a mandate to each State to enforce the amendment. If a State refuses to perform its constitutional duty the result is to leave the amendment largely a dead letter within that State. Chief Justice White, in his concurring opinion in the Rhode Island case, said that "when no State legislation was enacted, there would be no prohibition," and that "the refusal of a State" to give effect to the amendment by definitions and sanctions "would result in no amendment to be enforced in such refusing State." In other words, the States can by the exercise of illegitimate and arbitrary power defeat the effectiveness of the very amendment which they write into the Constitution. Such action would be in deliberate disregard of the Constitution, not merely of the amendment itself, but of section 2, Article VI, which provides that the Constitution of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land. Section 3 of the same article requires the governor of each State and the members of the legislative and judicial branch of the State government to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. Only by violation of these constitutional obligations can the States defeat the eighteenth amendment.

There is much misunderstanding of the way in which the action of certain States in refusing to use their police power to aid prohibition enforcement operates on the Constitution. In order to clarify it we must start with the obvious proposition that a law amounts to nothing, is of no effect or consequence, if it is not enforced. Enforcement is the necessary complement to lawmaking, the necessary other half of the process to make an effective law.

A law without enforcement, without the machinery or the agencies to enforce it, is like a body without the spark of life, without the breath that makes it a living thing. It is a corpse. The eighteenth amendment without any agencies or without adequate agencies to put its provisions into effect, to bring them home to those who would violate them, is no more valuable or useful for the purpose for which it was intended than if it did not exist. To give life, meaning, reality, existence to it, it must be coupled with enforcement. Deprived of enforcement, it is nothing; it is dead.

Now, as we have already seen, the eighteenth amendment contemplates enforcement not merely by the Federal Government but by the States. The Federal Government is not equipped to perform the duties of ordinary police enforcement. It has not the agencies at hand, nor could it equip itself with the necessary agencies without radically altering its character. Police enforcement, on the other hand, is the normal and principal function of the State governments. It was not the intention of the eighteenth amendment to transfer this activity to the Federal Government and leave the States without responsibility for enforcement. On the contrary, the very purpose of the amendment was to avoid such overburdening of the Federal authorities, and the amendment, therefore, granted full powers of concurrent enforcement to and imposed upon the States the duty to exercise them. In a State, therefore, which has fulfilled its obligations the entire police machinery is available to enforce the amendment. All its executive and judicial officers, its sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables, the police forces of its cities and towns, its police courts, its criminal courts, are available and active in the work of carrying prohibition into effect. This is what the Constitution contemplated. These are the means upon which it relied for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. Deprived of the police organization of the States, enforcement of the amendment becomes a nullity, a dead thing.

It was at this vital point that the tactics of the organized liquor interests, foreign and domestic, chose to strike. They perceived that while it was impossible to kill the amendment by the lawful constitutional method of a repeal or amendment, they could accomplish the same result by gaining control of State governments and withdrawing from the support of the eighteenth amendment the enforcement agencies of these States. They have been successful, as I have said, in the States of New York and Maryland. Let us examine the effect of this action by the State of New York. Shortly after the adoption of the eighteenth amendment the legislature of that State, in performance of its constitutional duty, enacted the Mullan-Gage law for the enforcement of prohibition. The entire police machinery of the State was thus brought into action as the Constitution contemplated to carry out the provisions of the eighteenth amendment. The State agencies for police enforcement in New York, including the judges of the courts of higher and lower jurisdictions, sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, and police officers of the various towns and cities, comprise in the aggregate more than 32,000 officials, whose activities in prosecuting violators of the prohibition law afford an adequate, and the only adequate means, for the suppression of offenses against such law. If prohibition is to be enforced in New York it must be primarily by means of this State police machinery. If this is withdrawn, nothing is left but the enforcement agencies of the Federal Government. What do these amount to? A total personnel of a little more than 500. A comparison of the relative strength of the available State and Federal agencies is so startling and serves to illustrate so clearly the utter inadequacy of an enforcement program which does not rely primarily upon the employment of the State police agencies, that I wish to call attention to the deadly parallel of the figures:

NEW YORK STATE		FEDERAL
Judges of courts of superior jurisdiction and county judges	209	Judges of courts of superior jurisdiction	17
District attorneys and deputies (no figures).		District attorneys and assistants (no figures).
Police judges	304	United States commissioners	68
Justices of peace	3,543	United States marshals and deputies	79
Sheriffs and undersheriffs	124	Prohibition agents	281
Deputy sheriffs	1,386	Customs officers available for prohibition enforcement	71
Constables	3,516
State police	573
Police force of cities	22,010
Police force of villages	424
Total	32,089	Total	516

Is it not obvious that when the State force of more than 32,000 officials was withdrawn from enforcement and that task was relegated to the Federal personnel of 500, enforcement was rendered impotent?

The aim and ambition of the opponents of prohibition was, therefore, attained in 1923, when the New York Legislature repealed the Mullan-Gage law—the State enforcement act—thus declaring that, so far as the laws of the State of New York are concerned, the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes within that State are not unlawful and that no violators of the eighteenth amendment within the State of New York can be prosecuted in the State courts. Immediately upon this repeal the traffic in intoxicating liquors within the State, so far as State law was concerned, was sanctioned, leaving upon the insignificant force of Federal officials within the State the sole responsibility and duty of enforcing prohibition. The same is true of Maryland, where no law for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment has ever been enacted. Maryland has consistently refused to cooperate with the Federal Government in the suppression of the liquor traffic. Is it any wonder that prohibition is not enforced in either of these States?

Considerable misunderstanding of the consequences of the repeal of the State enforcement act in New York has been created by recent utterances of the governor of that State. After giving his approval to the act repealing the State prohibition law, the governor now says that "there devolves upon the State the sacred duty of sustaining the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law. They are as much a part of the laws of this State as our own statutes and our own constitution," and he then goes on to imply that even in the absence of a State enforcement act the police agencies of the State are available for the enforcement of prohibition. His effort is apparently to create the impression that no State enforcement statute is necessary, because even in the absence of such a statute the State officials are under an obligation to enforce the Volstead Act. This position is entirely misleading and has no justification in law. While it is, of course, true that the eighteenth amendment is a part of the laws of every State the eighteenth amendment is not self-executing and requires an enforcement statute to put it into effect. The Volstead Act is such a statute, but it is not true that the Volstead Act is a part of the laws of the State of New York. It is a Federal statue and can only be enforced in the Federal courts. The courts of New York are completely without jurisdiction to give effect to its provisions. They can take jurisdiction of no indictment based upon the provisions of the Volstead Act.

They can sentence no one to fine or imprisonment for violation of its terms. Because the State courts are thus without jurisdiction to enforce the Volstead Act, the police find themselves paralyzed in any efforts they may make to enforce prohibition in the State courts. The "sacred duty" upon State officials of which the governor speaks doubtless exists, but the means of performing it were taken away from them when jurisdiction over prohibition offenses was removed from the State courts by repeal of the State enforcement act. The living organism of State enforcement has had its head struck off by closing the State courts to prohibition cases, and while the duty remains, the situation is precisely as if we were to say that a policeman is under a duty to protect a bystander from murderous assault when we have taken away from him the gun which is his only means of giving such protection. If we take from the police the legal right to carry and use a gun, how can we say that they are under a duty to do something which requires the use of a gun? Access to the State courts is obviously essential to State enforcement of prohibition, and access to the State courts is only possible under a State statute.

It is the object of the organized liquor interests, foreign and domestic, to destroy the eighteenth amendment, State by State, and to bring other States into the same category into which they have succeeded in bringing New York and Maryland.

This, then, is the issue: Shall disobedience to the supreme law of the land, as practiced by New York and Maryland, be permitted to establish a doctrine which, carried to its logical conclusion, means the destruction of constitutional government and the disappearance of those guaranties of life, liberty, and property which are essential to the security and well-being of the people and to the continuation of our form of government? The issue can not be evaded. It must be fought to a conclusion in the forthcoming national campaign. The contest between the two great political parties for the control of the Presidency and the Congress of the United States affords the only national referendum for the decision of great questions of this kind, and we must have the courage and sincerity to present this issue squarely to the people so that their judgment may be rendered in the light of reason and with full knowledge of the facts.

The life of democracy is discussion—thoughtful, honest, fearless. Democracy depends for existence upon the continuous exercise of popular intelligence and reason. The people can not be habituated to the exercise of reason where there is a vacuum of honest discussion. Much of the growing cynicism about the success of popular government is due to the fact that political leaders are so afraid of incurring unpopularity that they shrink from issues which arouse controversy or disagreement; and yet disagreement is certain to arise about every question which is important enough and vital enough to incite political agitation or demand political action.

This is illustrated in our own country by this fundamental question of enforcing the Constitution. Everybody is interested in it; everybody is talking about it. The best intelligence and the most courageous leadership is needed to extricate the country from the sorry and serious predicament into which a policy of drift, neglect, and opportunism has brought it. If the Constitution is to be upheld, if respect for law is to be preserved, if the tremendous social benefits to be derived from the suppression of the liquor traffic are to be realized, the question of effective enforcement must be faced and solved. I recognize that public men, built on the safety-first plan, shrink from taking a definite stand on this question. Too frequently they allow their personal interests to obscure the superior demands of the public welfare. Yet the question is present, insistent, and imperative. It must be solved if law and government, and an expression of the public will, registered in the most solemn form, are not to be reduced to the level of a common farce. The responsibilities of patriotic citizenship, therefore, demand that we should face it, not as timorous politicians or cowardly opportunists, but as brave men and women determined upon righteousness at any cost.

We stand at a crisis. The eighteenth amendment is as firmly anchored in our fundamental law as the bill of rights. But have we the benefits that the amendment was intended to secure? We have not. The question we must consider is what constructive means can be found to secure to the American people the benefits of the most ambitious single attempt ever made by any people in human history to better their health, their social and economic conditions, and their general environment. Since prohibition is the settled policy of the people of the United States so long as the eighteenth amendment remains in the Constitution, nothing remains except to compel obedience to it, just as we compel obedience to all laws, Federal and State, against crimes and misdemeanors and against infractions of ordinances and regulations for the protection of society.

I do not wish to imply that compulsory obedience and law enforcement are alone sufficient to produce all the benefits which the amendment can bring. I only say that they are indispensable. If we are to have the full advantages of prohibition we must, of course, have something besides police enforcement. We must have patriotic obedience to law. We must teach its virtue and importance as the first duty of good citizenship. We must have education which will bring home to the rising generation the purpose and the value of prohibition, and thus make it less and less necessary to rely upon police enforcement. No better way can be found of securing ultimately the benefits of this great reform than by introducing into every public school in the land a short course designed to acquaint the pupils with the evils and dangers of intoxicants and narcotics, as shown by experience and scientific research. Such education is imperative because in a democracy the people should understand the wisdom and justification of the laws which they are asked to obey. There can be no doubt that in the long run such a policy of education will destroy the opposition to prohibition, much of which is based upon sheer ignorance and prejudice. However, the process of education is slow in producing its results. Meanwhile the ground will be cut from under it if flagrant disobedience of law is permitted with impunity under the very eyes of the generation we are attempting to educate. Education can not make headway against unabashed lawlessness. It can only do its work where there is seen to exist a resolute and successful determination to enforce the law.

It is therefore imperative that the American people shall frankly face the question of enforcement and the issues which it raises. Present conditions can not be allowed to continue. If the law is a good law it must not be repealed; and if it remains unrepealed it must be enforced. The evils from which we suffer are not the evils of prohibition, but the evils of nonenforcement of prohibition. We can rid ourselves of these only by substituting enforcement for nonenforcement. The patriotic intelligence of the country should, therefore, be directed to the best means of securing enforcement.

Thus far no effective effort on the part of the Federal Government has been made. This is due partly to inadequate appropriations and partly to the failure of the Federal Government to secure from the States the cooperation which is essential if enforcement is to be made less difficult and more successful.

Before I discuss this point, it is of outstanding importance to impress the fact that the powers of government must be intrusted only to those who have the honest will to enforce the law. It is not to be expected that the law will be enforced by officials who are hostile to it and who are willing to remit the performance of their public duties in exchange for political or personal advantage. This must be stressed repeatedly in order to bring home its fundamental importance to the voters and thus prevent the Government from falling into the hands of those from whom it would be idle to expect law enforcement on any terms. If we are to have a Government without the will to enforce the law, as we shall have if we put control in the hands of those who are hostile to the law, it is a waste of effort to consider ways and means of enforcement; in that case we shall have to make up our minds to submit supinely to a régime of bootlegging and corruption.

The supreme need is to put law enforcement in the White House; it is of less importance to put it in party platforms. In the White House it will transform law violation into law obedience; in party platforms it will mean nothing unless translated into the strength and authority of a fearless, righteous, and resolute President.

Attempt is being made to convince the country that no matter if a wet is elected President, the Constitution and laws will be enforced. This is both unsound and untrue. Neither the Constitution nor the laws of the United States are self-executing. The President is charged by the Constitution with the express duty of protecting and defending the Constitution and executing the laws of the land. In doing this he has of necessity wide latitude and discretion. If he is opposed to the laws which he is called upon to execute, he can neglect them or fail to exert his power and authority in such manner that the despised laws will become impotent, without subjecting himself to tangible criticism or possible impeachment. To say that a President hostile to the eighteenth amendment and the prohibition laws can not seriously imperil effective enforcement throughout the United States is upon its face an absurdity. The President has the power to appoint the judges of the Supreme Court, the judges of all the circuit and district courts throughout the United States, the district attorneys, the United States marshals, the Secretary of the Treasury and his assistants—those officials being directly charged with enforcement of the prohibitive laws. If he should appoint to these responsible positions men who are hostile to the laws, the effect upon their successful enforcement would be profound. Moreover, the President is primarily responsible for the Budget, through which the Congress makes appropriations for prohibition enforcement. He can largely influence the size of the appropriations, which, if inadequate, seriously impair the ability to enforce the law. He has the power to veto appropriation and other bills enacted by the Congress, and through much power he might be able to reduce the appropriations to such a small amount as to paralyze prohibition enforcement. He has a tremendous influence upon public opinion, and through his speeches and messages to the Congress, and the use of general patronage, which is a powerful weapon in his hands, he could, if he was opposed to the eighteenth amendment and the prohibition laws, lead a formidable movement for their repeal. The White House in the hands of the liquor interests would be a veritable Gibraltar of offensive operations and the doom of the eighteenth amendment would be written boldly upon the face of the Constitution.

Assuming that a President and other high officials are elected, who have the courage and the will to enforce the law, there still remains the difficult question of the best method to accomplish it. How can enforcement overcome the inherent obstacles which beset it? This is an administrative question, but all who support the eighteenth amendment must reach agreement concerning it in order to secure united action against its opponents.

We must start with the proposition that the effectiveness or ineffectiveness of enforcement is in direct proportion to the extent to which the State governments cooperate or fail to cooperate. In those States which, in compliance with their constitutional duty, have enacted enforcement statutes and whose officials recognize their sworn, as well as their patriotic duty to support the Constitution, the prohibition law is as well and capably enforced as any other law. On the other hand, prohibition has not yet had a chance in States which have no enforcement law, or which, having such a law, permit their officials to ignore and flout it with impunity.

The chief cause of the present revolting conditions of nonenforcement in certain sections of the country is the refusal of a small number of States to carry out their constitutional duty to cooperate in enforcing prohibition. The bad example of these States naturally serves to discourage and dampen enforcement elsewhere. The culpable negligence of these States puts an unfair and intolerable burden on States which are trying to do their duty. While the latter are appropriating from their revenues large sums of money to defray the expenses of enforcement, this burden is increased and their efforts are largely frustrated by the inflow of illicit liquor from States which make no effort to enforce the law. Naturally they become disheartened and their vigor tends to relax in the face of what appears to be a hopeless task. We are menaced by a return of the very conditions which national prohibition was specifically designed to destroy, namely, the overflowing of the dry States, which constitute the great majority, by liquor from a small minority of States which persist in remaining wet. The rights of the dry States are thus flagrantly invaded; they are deprived of the protection which the eighteenth amendment was intended to give them.

In this state of affairs it might seem logical for the Federal Government to take complete charge of the situation by frankly shouldering the whole burden of enforcement. If the States will not enforce the law, it may be argued, the Federal Government must. This would require a tremendous extension of the police power and enforcement machinery of the Federal Government. If it should undertake directly the task of prohibition enforcement throughout the country it would have to increase its staff of enforcement agents to a veritable army; it would have to post thousands of these officials in the cities and towns and villages of the land and establish a great network of supervising and supporting agencies unlike anything which it has ever attempted before in any field of its activities. The wisdom of such a step is doubtful, for three reasons:

(1) Obviously this is not what the eighteenth amendment intended. The language of that amendment expressly indicates that the States are to do their share in enforcing prohibition. This negatives any intention to require the Federal Government to build up a great centralized police machine such as would be required for exclusive Federal enforcement. It indicates, on the contrary, that the primary and largest share of the responsibility for enforcement should fall on the States. In view of their greater fitness to perform the task through their highly organized police power and its employment to the full in accordance with the obligation which the amendment lays upon them it was recognized that the task remaining to be performed by the Federal Government would be more national than local in scope.

(2) It might well be represented as threatening the balance of our political system were the Federal Government required to exclusively employ the great number of police agents necessary to enforce the prohibition laws. It would lend weight to the hitherto unwarranted charge of bureaucracy and excessive centralization. It might create a weapon of patronage capable of wide abuse, and which conceivably, in dishonest hands, might aid in the formation of a Federal political machine of sufficient strength to dominate the internal politics of the States.

(3) In States willing and able to enforce the law it would lead to needless expense and duplication of effort.

Exclusive Federal enforcement ought, therefore, not to be resorted to except as an extreme measure; and in saying this I speak as an earnest advocate of the full exercise of Federal power in every case where it is necessary in order to accomplish the results intended by the Constitution. Fear of the Federal Government, which is sometimes alleged on no better ground than because it is the Federal Government, is but an idle and misleading pretext, for the Federal Government is the people's government in as full sense as the State governments; but precisely because I take this position I see no reason to involve the Federal Government prematurely and before the advantages of its action are clearly seen to outweigh the disadvantages. It is true that the Federal Government has unlimited police power under the eighteenth amendment to enforce prohibition; but I prefer to see it exercise that power in accordance with the obvious intention of the amendment, viz, that the primary and major part of the task should be performed by the States.

The question, therefore, for the consideration of all who believe that the present disgraceful condition of nonenforcement should be ended, is how to enlist more effectively the cooperation of those States whose efforts are beginning to weaken under the negligence of other States, and how to induce the States which are not enforcing prohibition to discharge their constitutional duty. In other words, the task is to rouse the States to more energetic and effective action. To this end all the possible excuses for State laxity or inaction must be examined and removed.

What, then, are the excuses which the States can allege for laxity in enforcing prohibition? The most plausible is that if their State or municipal police officers are required to devote the necessary attention to tracking down offenders against the prohibition laws, they will not have sufficient time left for the performance of their regular duties of detecting and arresting ordinary lawbreakers. It is said that the laws against theft, burglary, assault, and murder can not be properly enforced if the police must also give to prohibition enforcement the amount of attention necessary to render it effective.

This argument was recently used in one of our large cities by a candidate for the office of mayor in support of a platform pledge not to employ the police in enforcing prohibition. It is gratifying to observe that he was defeated for election; but the speciousness of the argument conceals a possible element of truth. Certainly strict, vigorous, and effective enforcement of prohibition in States which have allowed the situation to get out of hand requires the time and services of a great number of police officers. Prohibition enforcement, if seriously undertaken, throws undeniably an added burden on the existing State and municipal governments; and if this added duty is to be satisfactorily discharged, an enlarged police force in many places will be required, with resulting increase in cost.

The second excuse which the States can offer is that they can not afford the increased expenditures necessary to bring their police forces up to the requisite strength for effective enforcement. They can claim that the eighteenth amendment places upon them new burdens, the satisfactory and efficient discharge of which exceeds their resources; and that this added burden must be shouldered in part by the Federal Government either in the form of direct Federal enforcement of the law or in some other way. This is the only argument which can be made with any pretense of validity; but it contains a sufficient element of sound truth and reason to point the way, I believe, to the most helpful step that can be taken toward securing a satisfactory solution of the problem.

Recognizing that the States are in the first instance the proper agencies for enforcement and are so regarded by the eighteenth amendment; recognizing that the duty so imposed throws a new and heavy financial burden on the States; recognizing that the Federal Government is, by the amendment, obligated with the States to do its full, if not the major part, it seems to me that a great incentive to enforcement could be supplied, and the present situation vastly improved, if the Federal Government would apply to prohibition the policy which it has in recent years increasingly pursued with justice and success in other fields of social melioration—the policy of bearing a part of the financial burden of State activities which are of benefit to the Nation as a whole, and which are executed as a part of a nation-wide plan.

By means of such financial aid the Federal Government can contribute, as it properly should, in carrying out these nation-wide measures, while the actual administration can be left in the hands of the local agencies. There is thus the least possible danger of a tendency toward bureaucratic centralization and the least possible waste and duplication of effort. As applied to prohibition, this policy would mean that the Federal Government would contribute annually, on an equitable apportionment, a reasonable amount of money toward the cost of enforcement to each State which entitled itself to such aid by having on its statute books an enforcement law measuring up to the standard of Federal requirement; this money to be applied by the State to building up and increasing the efficiency of its police and other agencies for enforcing this law. Such a policy would get rid of the dual responsibility now existing, would recognize the wisdom of local self-government as applied to the prohibition problem, and would throw upon the States the primary and direct responsibility for enforcement. Thereafter, Federal enforcement could be largely confined to the exercise of a general inspection and supervision of State enforcement activities, such supervision being designed to secure effective cooperation between the two authorities. This would avoid any appearance by the Federal Government of attempting to supplant or minimize local self-government. Such a distribution of functions between the States and the Federal authority would leave the Federal Government free to concentrate and increase its direct enforcement program in those States like New York and Maryland, which, having no State enforcement laws, would be entitled to no appropriation under the act and where accordingly the whole task of enforcement must necessarily be assumed and vigorously performed by the Federal Government. The Federal Government could then concentrate with greater thoroughness on the protection of our international boundaries and seacoasts against the illicit importation of intoxicants and on a closer supervision of attempted interstate traffic in the prohibited beverages. In all these ways responsibility would be more definitely fixed, and efficiency of administration should be vastly improved.

Of course, the act embodying the policy I have outlined would have to carry a provision that if any State receiving Federal aid failed to make honest and efficient use of the funds so received or failed to administer its prohibition laws strictly and effectively Federal aid would be withdrawn and direct Federal enforcement would be substituted, as in the case of States having no enforcement law.

Such a policy of Federal aid to the States for prohibition enforcement would be merely an extension of a practice which is now a well-recognized part of the operations of our Government. Since 1911 no less than a dozen acts have been passed applying the policy to different lines of governmental activity. Of these the best known are the so-called good roads acts, the acts for agricultural extension work, and the vocational education acts. The principle has also been applied for a much longer time to the maintenance and support of the State militia. In all these instances, as in the case of prohibition, the States are engaged in carrying on activities which are of direct benefit to the Nation as a whole; activities which involve and require nation-wide conformity to established Federal standards, with which there must be cooperation and uniformity in State policy. The Federal Government, representing all the people, has a direct interest in maintaining these standards, and therefore assumes, in the form of a grant of financial aid, a part of the burden, in consideration of the efficient cooperation of the States in the execution of the prohibition laws, for which both the State and Federal Governments are responsible. There is thus no suggestion of compulsion against the States—no attempt to force Federal authority or interference upon an unwilling State. The States are not required to accept Federal assistance unless they so desire.

To extend the policy of Federal aid to prohibition enforcement would mark no unprecedented or daring advance beyond the already existing practice. The policy has already been applied to the enforcement of a measure of police regulation in the case of the Chamberlain-Kahn Act of 1918 for the suppression of venereal diseases.

The plan offers two great advantages:

First. By making possible a definite and clean-cut distribution of functions between the two authorities it would tend to fix responsibility. One of the chief obstacles to effective enforcement at the present time is the absence of a clear division of responsibility between the Federal Government and the States. Both are nominally purporting to perform the same task of direct enforcement against offenders and thus have given ground for the specious claim of "double jeopardy." The fact that the Federal Government is supposed to be enforcing the law tends to lull the State governments into a feeling that there is no need for them to put forth the full measure of effort which they might devote to the task. More and more the States thus rely upon Federal authority and feel less and less responsibility for their own part in enforcement. The present situation is a standing invitation to the practice, so fatal to efficiency, popularly known as "passing the buck." Prior to national prohibition the dry States, having sole responsibility for the enforcement of their own laws, enforced them with a greater degree of effectiveness than some of them appear to be doing now. Under present conditions failure of enforcement in some States is due largely to the increase in the burden which is thrown upon these States by the obstinate refusal of other States to do their part. The plan I propose would greatly facilitate the task of States in the former class, because it would mobilize the strength of Federal enforcement in the nonenforcing States, and thereby keep the latter from making the task more difficult for the States which are enforcing the law.

Second. Setting the meaning and purpose of the eighteenth amendment in clearer light before the public opinion of the country. There is altogether too great a tendency to represent the eighteenth amendment as a matter of exclusive Federal power and concern. Efforts are constantly being made to whip up the doctrine of State rights against what is supposed to be an instance of Federal encroachment.

This argument can only succeed by concealing or misrepresenting the true provisions of the amendment. The amendment recognizes State power and authority as fully and explicitly as Federal authority; it deals with both on equal terms; it relies for its effectiveness as much on one as on the other. The eighteenth amendment does not ignore or minimize the position of the States. On the contrary, it affirms the equal position of the States and the National Government. This needs to be brought into relief and properly emphasized, but it naturally tends to be obscured in the popular mind so long as the Federal Government undertakes to duplicate the work of the States and engage through its own agencies in the task of direct police enforcement. In doing so, where the States themselves are seeking to enforce the law, the Federal Government seems to the average citizen to be taking over State functions. Conflicts and uncertainties are always bound to arise where two sets of agencies are thus seeking to perform the same task, and the result is to create a wholly unnecessary jealousy and suspicion between the two jurisdictions. This would be removed if the constitutional authority of the States under the eighteenth amendment were emphasized and if the Federal Government were to cooperate rather than compete with them in the discharge of their obligations and assist them financially in carrying the burden. Prohibition would be seen in its proper position of a great cooperative enterprise by the States to improve the living conditions of their people through the exercise of their administrative machinery of local self-government.

We have reached a point when the questions I have been discussing must be seriously considered by the American people. Nothing appears to be more certain than the nation-wide determination not to give up prohibition. But if it is not to be given up, it must be enforced. An unenforced law is a festering ulcer in the body politic of whose consequences we already perceive disquieting symptoms. We can not trust to mere expressions of good intentions and pious commonplaces for enforcement of law. Enforcement requires more than good intentions. Constructive work must be done, and the constructive thing now vitally necessary is to improve the system of administration, to create a better feeling among the people and among the States toward enforcement, and to promote more effective cooperation between them and the Federal authority. Enforcement must be so organized as to present prohibition as a matter of State concern no less than of national concern, and it must be made clear that it depends for success upon the popular will and upon the administrative organs of local self-government.

How can we create that finer atmosphere of mutual tolerance and good will in the discussion, as well as the solution, of this great problem which affects so vitally the public welfare? I do not condemn those who hold opposite views to mine. I do not regard them as unpatriotic citizens; I do not say that they have no right to express their opinions. It is not the difference of opinion to which I direct my argument but to the fundamental question of the duty and obligation of every patriotic citizen to yield obedience to the Constitution and laws of the land. I direct my argument against the resort by thoughtless but well-meaning citizens to methods that are unlawful and unconstitutional in order to effect the changes which they think should be made in the law and to the gravely mistaken course adopted by some of the sovereign States to secure, by means which are clearly incompatible with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, a result which they are entitled to strive for only by the lawful means which the Constitution itself leaves open to them. My plea is for obedience to law while that lawful procedure is in process. My condemnation is of unlawful methods, of extra-constitutional methods, which, unless rebuked not alone by public opinion, but by translation into action of the supreme will of the people, as expressed in the supreme law of the land, will inevitably increase the already serious tendency to disregard the Constitution and lawful authority everywhere, with a corresponding demoralization in law enforcement throughout the land. My appeal is to that splendid spirit of America which created the Constitution and which for 139 years has maintained our great democracy in its full integrity, has reared upon this continent the mightiest Nation on earth, has protected the sacred rights of life, and liberty, has produced upon this soil a strong, virile, prosperous, and resourceful race which has never been conquered by obstacles and which has never surrendered to enemies within or to foes without our boundaries. Shall we allow that spirit to die, that spirit of reverence for the Constitution, that spirit of obedience to law, as expressed by the solemnly recorded will of the majority, that spirit of patriotism which has been exalted by sacrifice and consecrated by the blood of battle? No! We must maintain the Constitution, not alone by obedience to it, but by pursuing the lawful processes it prescribes for change or amendment, if we are dissatisfied with its provisions. Let us look always with reverent eyes and patriotic hearts upon the noble constitutional edifice won by the blood of our fathers and maintained by the blood of their sons. That edifice rests upon the foundation of the 48 sovereign States which are integral parts of the Federal Union. Each State has contributed a column to the support of the constitutional structure. No sovereign State would deliberately attempt to pull down the column it has contributed to the constitutional edifice, and yet if the doctrine now mistakenly advanced that a State may determine for itself what part or parts of the Constitution it will obey, should prevail, the end of constitutional government is in sight. The glory of America is the Constitution. Let us summon the conscience, the pride, and the spirit which has made America great and the envied of all the nations of the earth, to the performance of the most solemn and sacred duty of the patriot in the forthcoming campaign and redeclare through its results that America, under the Constitution, shall march forward to grander victories for humanity and righteousness than she has yet achieved!

ELIGIBILITY TO THE PRESIDENCY

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in The Protestant for May, 1927, relative to the correspondence between Mr. Charles C. Marshall and Gov. Alfred E. Smith relative to the eligibility of Governor Smith for the Presidency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Widespread interest has been manifested in the recent open correspondence between Mr. Charles C. Marshall and Gov. Alfred E. Smith relative to the bearing of the latter's membership in the Roman Catholic Church on his legal qualifications for the Presidency of the United States.

The attention accorded to the correspondence demonstrates the deepening public interest in the papal question as an issue in the politics of our country. Mr. Marshall is a New York lawyer and Episcopalian. His first open letter to the governor of that State appeared in The Atlantic Monthly in April. The answer appeared in the newspapers April 18.

In that letter Governor Smith was urged to make a public statement that would remove the apparent conflict of his allegiance to the papal government as a Roman Catholic with that due to the Government of the United States as a citizen and high official. The letter concluded with this declaration:

"Nothing will be of greater satisfaction to those of your fellow citizens who hesitate in their indorsement of your candidacy because of the religious issues involved than such a disclaimer by you of the convictions here imputed, or such an exposition by others of the questions here presented, as may justly turn public opinion in your favor."

Notwithstanding Mr. Marshall's learning and skill in the issues tended by him and the good he may have accomplished in bringing them to the public attention, it appears doubtful whether they can be settled by any possible declaration of Governor Smith. No such declaration could be admitted as competent in the determination of the issues by a court of justice.

The matters in controversy are grounded in law and not in fact. No one admitted to be a citizen of the United States could testify as to his eligibility to public office in France or England. Only by examination of the constitutions and statutes of the sovereignties affected could such an issue be determined.

The nature and scope of Governor Smith's fealty to the sovereign pontiff and its effect on his allegiance to this Republic and on his qualifications for the Presidency can be ascertained only from the constitution and laws of the Papacy and those of the United States. The questions involved have been fully and conclusively answered by the public canon law.

No public or private statement by any Roman Catholic layman can amend the statute law of the Papacy nor alter its status as a civil sovereignty and member of the family of nations. No such statement can purge the Roman See of its assumption of suzerainty of all civil governments nor palliate its declared hostility to every fundamental of American constitutional law.

The net result of the open letter to Governor Smith has been simply to give the attentive ear of the Nation and furnish the occasion for his elaborate disclaimer, carefully prepared with clerical aid, and treating matters over which he has not an atom of authority and of which he cleverly feigns ignorance. Under the most elementary principles of law he is utterly incompetent to testify concerning his subjection to solemn statutes enacted by the Sovereign Pontiff and expressly declared by him to be binding on every Roman Catholic in the world under the direst sanctions of both heaven and earth.

The only avenue by which he can escape the binding and paramount force of those statutes leads away from the Church of Rome. Subjection to its law and dogma is the very essence of membership in that church. The Papacy itself as the only source of supreme legislative, executive, and judicial authority for the entire membership has repeatedly so declared.

In his constitution Providentissima promulgated at Rome on the day of Pentecost, 1917, addressed to his enthroned hierarchy throughout the world, giving his legislative approval to the new codex juris canonici (code of canon law), Pope Benedict XV uttered ex cathedra these solemn and mandatory words:

"Therefore, having invoked the aid of divine grace and relying upon the authority of the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, of our own accord and with certain knowledge, and in the fullness of the apostolic power with which we are invested, by this our constitution, which we wish to be valid for all time, we promulgate, decree, and order that the present code, just as it is compiled, shall have from this time forth the power of law for the universal church, and we confide it to your custody and vigilance."—A commentary on canon law, by Rev. Charles P. Augustine, in eight volumes, published at St. Louis, 1921, with imprimatur of Archbishop Glennon, volume 1, pages 67 and 68.

After a paragraph ordering delay of one year to give time for study of the new code before placing it in operation, the papal constitution closed in this stringent and universal injunction:

"For no one, therefore, is it lawful willingly to contradict or rashly to disobey in any way this our constitution, ordination, limitation, suppression, or derogation. If any should dare to do so, let him know that he will incur the wrath of Almighty God and of the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul."

Assembled at Rome for that purpose by a motu proprio of Pope Pius X and working under the presidency of Cardinal Pietro Gasparri as Secretary of State in the Papal Government, the ablest canonists living had spent more than a decade in compiling the code and arranging its provisions from the vast accumulation of statutes enacted by the sovereign pontiffs and the church councils since last similar compilation had been finished centuries ago.

Obviously, no statement given to the public press by Governor Smith or by any other Roman Catholic layman or cleric lower in ecclesiastical rank than the Sovereign Pontiff could have the slightest effect on the iron grip with which the code so written and so promulgated binds every subject of the pontifical throne.

At its very threshold the code expressly repeals all conflicting earlier laws, but no others unless specifically repealed by its express declarations. Consequently the great preponderance of canon law existing before the code was promulgated remains in full force and effect.

While the sanctions of the canon law include spiritual and ecclesiastical penalties, they are by no means limited to them. They include corporal and capital punishment. Half a century ago Rev. Sebastian B. Smith, a Roman priest, wrote a textbook on elements of ecclesiastical law, which was published in three volumes by the Roman Catholic house of Benziger Bros. with imprimatur of Cardinal McCloskey then reigning at New York and of various other prelates in this and other lands. It ran through at least nine editions. On page 90 of volume 1, this statement appears:

"Has the church power to inflict the penalty of death? Cardinal Tarquini thus answers: 1. Inferior ecclesiastics are forbidden, though only by ecclesiastical law, to exercise this power directly. 2. It is certain that the Pope and ecumenical councils have this power at least mediately—that is, they can, if the necessity of the church demands, require a Catholic ruler to impose this penalty. 3. That they can not directly exercise this power can not be proved."

Paramountcy of the canon law to all other is abundantly set forth in the highest ecclesiastical authorities. Relations of church and state are treated but meagerly in the new code. Previous canonical doctrines on that subject are therefore not materially altered. Addressing the cardinals in opposition to Colonna, Pope Boniface VIII made this striking declaration:

"How shall we assume to judge kings and princes and not dare to proceed against a worm! Let them perish forever, that they may understand that the name of the Roman Pontiff is known in all the earth and that he alone is most high over princes."—Aus den Tagen Bonifaz VIII, page 152, by Finke, published at Munster, 1902.

The ablest Pope that has reigned in recent times has stated the papal attitude in these bold terms:

"But if the laws of the State are manifestly at variance with the divine law, containing enactments hurtful to the church, or conveying injunctions adverse to the duties imposed by religion, or if they violate in the person of the Supreme Pontiff the authority of Jesus Christ, then truly to resist becomes a positive duty; to obey, a crime."—Great Encyclical Letters of Leo XIII, page 185.

The law which binds Governor Smith and all Roman Catholics in subjection to the pontifical throne was declared with striking force and clearness in the last clause of his bull Unam Sanctam by Pope Boniface VIII, as follows:

"And this we declare, affirm, define, and pronounce, that it is necessary for the salvation of every human creature that he should be subject to the Roman Pontiff." (Elements of Ecclesiastical Law, Smith, vol. 1, p. 255.)

This assumption of paramount prerogatives with the right to annul and set aside the constitution and laws of civil governments is far more than academic. It was exercised with tremendous effect September 30, 1861, when Pope Pius IX condemned the new Juarez constitution of Mexico and declared it null and void in his allocution of that date, in part in these words:

"Thus we make known to the faith in Mexico and to the Catholic universe, that we energetically condemn every decree that the Mexican Government has enacted against the Catholic religion, against the church, and her sacred ministers and pastors, against her laws, rights, and property, and also against the authority of this holy see.

"We raise our pontifical voice with apostolic freedom before you to condemn, reprove, and declare null, void, and without any value, the said decrees, and all others which have been enacted by the civil authorities in such contempt of the ecclesiastical authority of this holy see, and with such injury to the religion, to the sacred pastors, and illustrious men."—The Mexican People, De Lara and Pinchon, page 212.

Failing to whip Mexico to her knees with that thunderbolt of denunciation, he caused the Archbishop of Mexico City to visit Paris and induce Emperor Louis Napoleon, whom he approached through his Spanish Roman Catholic wife, to invade Mexico and establish the Hapsburg Empire of Maximilian on the ruins of Mexican liberty.

The Sovereign Pontiff to whom all human creatures are thus subjected reigns over the most autocratic governmental system that ever encumbered the earth. His government has the essential attributes of a sovereign state and member of the family of nations. Its status appears from the following facts which no intelligent person will deny:

First. The Pope occupies a throne identical in every particular with those of emperors and kings.

Second. He wears a triple gold crown whose three stories are designed to attest his superiority to all other crowned rulers.

Third. He maintains diplomatic relations with more than half of the civil powers.

Fourth. He makes treaties, usually called "concordats," with many civil governments.

Fifth. He has his own distinctive flag.

Sixth. He has a secretary of state at the head of his foreign relations.

Seventh. He confers titles of nobility, many of them on American citizens, in derogation of our Constitution and laws.

Eight. He enacts and enforces his own elaborate and autocratic system of law, covering virtually the whole field of human rights.

The foregoing pertain exclusively to a sovereign and autocratic state. They have no possible use in religion. The papal system is everywhere imperium in imperio—an intruded government within the government. It feigns religion, but practices politics. It is alien in spirit to every land it inhabits.

While the civil law of continental Europe and Latin America and the common law of English-speaking lands mutually exclude each other from lands in which either obtains, the canon law of the Papacy is intruded equally into common-law and civil-law countries and there enforced in derogation of the law of the state. That condition engenders strife and conflict in every land where the Papacy is strong enough to enforce its demands. That is the tragic condition in Mexico and Nicaragua now.

The Papal Government is fundamentally autocratic. Its laws and dogma and authority all flow from the will of the Sovereign Pontiff, in whose election no Roman Catholic but the 70 cardinals has any voice whatever. The Pope alone creates all the cardinals and the cardinals in secret conclave elect the Pope. The college of cardinals is studiously kept preponderantly Italian in nationality, and has not in centuries elected any but an Italian of its own membership to the pontifical throne. Perverse human ingenuity has never brought forth a more selfish and autocratic corporate establishment.

Its law condemns every principle and ideal of the American Government. Its Sovereign Pontiffs have condemned in a hundred official documents the sovereignty of the people and government by consent of the governed. In his encyclical Immortale Dei, of November 1, 1885, Pope Leo XIII said:

"The sovereignty of the people, however, and this without any deference to God, is held to reside in the multitude; which is doubtless a doctrine exceedingly well calculated to flatter and to inflame many passions, but which lacks all reasonable proof and all power of insuring public safety and preserving order."—Great Encyclical Letters, page 123.

It lays the ax of its denunciation at the root of our public school system. Canon 1374 of the new Code of Canon Law enjoins that—

"Catholic children must not attend non-Catholic, neutral, or mixed schools; that is, such as are also open to non-Catholics. It is for the bishop of the place alone to decide, according to the instructions of the apostolic see, in what circumstances and with what precautions attendance at such schools may be tolerated without danger of perversion to the pupils."

The foregoing translation was published six years ago by the Jesuit magazine America in No. 19 of its documents on The Catholic Mind. A standard Roman Catholic textbook on the Growth and Development of the Catholic School System in the United States, by Rev. J. A. Burns, president of Holy Cross College, at Washington, D. C., was published in 1912 with imprimatur of the late Cardinal Farley, then Governor Smith's direct ecclesiastical superior. On page 223 it says:

"We deny, of course, as Catholics the right of the civil government to educate, for education is a function of the spiritual society, as much so as the preaching and the administration of the sacraments."

Enforcement of that legal doctrine 400 years in Latin America has produced illiteracy, moral depravity, and political unrest amounting to a tragedy of the first magnitude. The doctrine rests fatally upon Governor Smith. No clever denial made in furtherance of his presidential ambition, whether vitiated with the Jesuitical principle of mental reservation or not, can absolve him from complete subjection to papal law. Its provisions are imperative and mandatory.

He can not purge himself of these legal restraints by declaring them not articles of faith. The law and dogma of the Papacy are fatally intertwined. The latter is used to enforce the former. Infallibility of the Pope is a basic doctrine. Its inescapable grip on all Roman Catholics gives to papal legislation handed down ex cathedra—from the pontificial throne—a unique sacredness and validity to them incomparably superior to all secular legislation. Pope Benedict XV, in the quotation already made from his constitution Providentissima, pronounced the wrath of Almighty God on those who disobey the new code. In its third chapter the vatican council declared the jurisdiction of the Roman Pontiff as binding on the faithful as matters of faith and morals. It said:

"This power of jurisdiction of the Roman Pontiff, which is truly episcopal, is immediate; to which all, of whatsoever rite and dignity, both pastors and faithful, both individually and collectively, are bound to submit, not only in matters which belong to faith and morals but also in those that appertain to the discipline and government of the church throughout the world."—Dogmatic Canons and Decrees, published 1912 with imprimatur of Cardinal Farley.

The late ex-Mayor Mitchell, of New York City, patriotically sought to disregard its binding force by permitting judicial investigation of the papal institutions drawing $2,000,000 a year from the city treasury. The Roman power, led by Tammany Hall, of which Governor Smith is now potential head, overwhelmed the Roman Catholic mayor in the next election.

Vacillating between religion and politics, the system that has so blighted Latin America must not triumph here. * * *

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the pending appropriation bill, House bill 9136, may be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9136) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the clerk may report the pending amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the pending amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 113, after line 6, insert:

HOWARD UNIVERSITY

Salaries: For payment in full or in part of the salaries of the officers, professors, teachers, and other regular employees of the university, the balance to be paid from privately contributed funds, $160,000, of which sum not less than $2,200 shall be used for normal instruction:

General expenses: For equipment, supplies, apparatus, furniture, cases and shelving, stationery, ice, repairs to buildings and grounds, and for other necessary expenses, including reimbursement to the appropriation for Freedmen's Hospital of actual cost of heat and light furnished, $80,000;

For the construction and equipment of a chemistry building, $150,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such building and equipment at a cost not to exceed $390,000;

Total, Howard University, $390,000.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk may read the article which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From Washington Times, Friday, November 11, 1927]

RACE PREJUDICE LAID TO REPUBLICAN PARTY

Charges of racial prejudice were made against the Republican Party last night by Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, who spoke at the first meeting of the convention for amity in interracial relations, arranged by the inter-racial committee of the Bahais.

"The colored race owes much to the Republican Party," Doctor Johnson said, "but in its most prosperous régime and in its present dominant hour it is conforming to every phase of the régime of prejudice."

Dr. Albert R. Vail, of Chicago, made a short address. The convention, which met last night in the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, will hold a final meeting to-night in the Playhouse, 1814 N Street NW.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I simply wished to put that article into the RECORD at this point so that the Republican Party may see how much the president of Howard University loves them for this unconstitutional aid awarded each year for their faithfulness to the party.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk the amendment which I now offer.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the pending amendment been agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment has not been disposed of. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. I desire that the amendment which I sent to the desk shall be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 19, at the end of line 3, after the word "Indians," to add the words "to be immediately available."

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the clerks be authorized to correct all totals in the bill which may need correction on account of amendments which have been or may be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all the committee amendments have been agreed to except the one beginning on page 33, line 11, relative to the Flathead irrigation project in Montana. I ask that that amendment be now considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Under the subhead "Irrigation and drainage," on page 33, after line 10, it is proposed to strike out:

Flathead irrigation project, Montana: The unexpended balance of the appropriation for continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., contained in the act of May 10, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 464–466), as continued available in the act of January 12, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 945), shall remain available for the fiscal year 1929, subject to the conditions and provisions of said acts: Provided, That the unexpended balance of the $395,000 available for continuation of construction of a power plant may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the construction and operation of a power-distributing system and for purchase of power for said project, but shall be available for that purpose only upon execution of an appropriate repayment contract as provided for in said acts: Provided further, That the net revenues derived from the operation of such distributing system shall be used to reimburse the United States in the order provided for in said acts: Provided further, That the Federal Power Commission is authorized, in accordance with the Federal water power act and upon terms satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, to issue a permit or permits or a license or licenses for the use, for the development of power, of power sites on the Flathead Reservation and of water rights reserved or appropriated for the irrigation projects: Provided further, That rentals from such licenses for use of Indian lands shall be paid the Indians of said reservation as a tribe, which money shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent: Provided further, That the public notice provided for in the act of January 12, 1927, shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior upon the 1st day of November, 1930: Provided further, That in his discretion the Secretary of the Interior may provide in such repayment contracts for covering into construction costs the operation and maintenance charges for the irrigation season of 1928 and all undistributed operation and maintenance cost, and may extend the time for payment of operation and maintenance charges now due and unpaid for such period as in his judgment may be necessary, not exceeding five years, the charges now due so extended to bear interest payable annually at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid, and to contract for the payment of the construction charges now due and unpaid within such term of years as the Secretary may find to be necessary, with interest payable annually at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid: Provided further, That not more than $35,000 of said reappropriated balance of $395,000 shall be immediately available for operation and maintenance, and $75,000 shall be available for construction of laterals near Ronan upon the execution of appropriate repayment contract as provided for in said acts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the committee has recommended the excision of the entire provision of the bill relating to the Flathead irrigation project in the State of Montana. There is involved in this amendment a controversial question relating to the subject of power development on the reservation.

In the 1926 appropriation bill a provision was carried for the development by the Government of what is known as the Newell Tunnel site. There is at the outset of Flathead Lake, in what is known as the Pend d'Oreille or Flathead River, a power site capable by complete development of the generation of something like 200,000 horsepower. A relatively small development was at one time undertaken as a part of the Flathead irrigation project, the object being to generate power for the purpose of pumping water for irrigation. Something like $100,000 was spent upon that project. The legislation to which I have referred in 1926 contemplated that the project of development, which had been abandoned for some 10 years, should be resumed, and an appropriation was made for that purpose. If that development should go on and it should later be in contemplation to make the complete development of 200,000 horsepower, the small development, amounting to from 7,500 to 10,000 horsepower, would be simply overwhelmed, and anyone who undertook the general development would be obliged to assume the expense incident to the destruction of the smaller development.

The avails from that development, if there ever were to be any avails, were to be applied first to liquidate the expense of that minor development; second, to reducing the cost of the construction of a certain division of the project known as the Camas division; and, third, the reduction of the cost of the construction of the entire project. The Indians on the reservation were, therefore, to get nothing whatever out of that development. All the profits of the development, if there were any profits, were to go to the benefit of the settlers under the project. That is the state of the law now.

The provision of the pending bill contemplated the repeal of that legislation and reposing in the Water Power Commission, as it was reposed prior to that legislation, the right to award a permit for the development of the power; and it provided that the rentals or avails of the development should go, as provided in the act of 1922, to the benefit of the Indians on the reservation.

In other words, as I see the matter, Mr. President, the Indians can get nothing out of the thing as it stands now. The existing legislation of 1926, subsequently reenacted, is an absolute bar to the general development of the project and the generation of electricity to the capacity of the site.

As I view it, this legislation is all in the interest of the Indians. It may not be all they want; it may not be all they are entitled to; but it is absolutely necessary to get this other legislation out of the way before they can get anything.

At the present time I do not desire to take issue with anybody concerning that matter. It has been suggested that the matter might be allowed to go and be considered in the conference. That was not my idea about it; but I shall be very glad to accede to the view expressed that, so far as this amendment deals with the power question, it stand. I am perfectly willing to take this matter up with the conference committee. If the friends of the Indians—and I count myself among that number—desire to have that go out, as it has gone out, I shall not object; but I want to be heard before the conference committee on the subject.

But, Mr. President, I am very sure that the committee went far beyond what they intended to do in the amendment. It deals not only with the power project but with several other things. Indeed, the provisions which deal with the power question end up at the words "4 per cent," on line 17, page 34. Everything that follows after that has no relation whatever to the power proposition. It reads:

Provided further, That the public notice provided for in the act of January 12, 1927, shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior upon the 1st day of November, 1930: Provided further, That in his discretion the Secretary of the Interior may provide in such repayment contracts for covering into construction costs the operation and maintenance charges for the irrigation season of 1928 and all undistributed operation and maintenance cost, and may extend the time for payment of operation and maintenance charges now due and unpaid for such period as in his judgment may be necessary not exceeding five years, the charges now due so extended to bear interest payable annually at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid, and to contract for the payment of the construction charges now due and unpaid within such term of years as the Secretary may find to be necessary with interest payable annually at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid: Provided further, That not more than $35,000 of said reappropriated balance of $395,000 shall be immediately available for operation and maintenance, and $75,000 shall be available for construction of laterals near Ronan upon the execution of appropriate repayment contract as provided for in said acts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the committee as a whole thought that the best policy was that just announced by the Senator from Montana. The committee felt that the whole question ought to go into conference. Conferees will be appointed on the bill, and I assure both Senators from Montana and also the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that the idea is, when the matter gets into conference, to have a complete and thorough consideration of the whole question.

Some desired to have a part of this provision stricken out. The Indians' representative, or the man who claimed to be the Indians' representative, wanted it all to go out. The committee decided that the only way we could settle the thing was to take it into conference, when we could have the House conferees with us, as they were very deeply interested in this particular subject; and I assure the Senator that when it gets into conference we will welcome him or anyone else who desires to appear before the conferees.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not want to accede to that part of the amendment as expressive of the sense of the Senate that those appropriations ought not to be made.

Mr. SMOOT. The way it stands now the whole question will be open; and, really, I think that is the proper course to pursue. I know that the House Members are deeply interested in this question, and I know that they would like to hold a hearing in connection with the Senate conferees.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me inquire of the Senator from Utah whether the excision of that portion of the bill signifies that the committee is adverse to the particular provisions to which I have called attention?

Mr. SMOOT. No. I frankly say that the attitude of the committee was that every interest the Indians had should be protected, and that all the net profits from whatever plan was agreed to for the development of the water power should go to the Indians.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is to say, the committee did not consider these provisions of the bill at all; it dealt simply with the provision in relation to the development of power?

Mr. SMOOT. That was the principal part; but I will say that Mr. Grorud, claiming to represent the Indians, claiming to be their attorney—I do not know whether he is or not—asked that the whole thing be stricken out.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Indians are not at all interested in these provisions of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that, and I do not think there is any question about that; but in order to take the whole matter before the committee of conference the committee took this attitude.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if this does not signify—and apparently it does not—any adverse action of the committee with reference to those particular provisions of the bill to which I have now called attention——

Mr. SMOOT. It does not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no objection to its going to conference.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator from Montana takes his seat I should like to be advised further about this matter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, because there has been a very great deal of misrepresentation about this situation of affairs, I shall be very glad to give any Senator any information I can concerning the situation.

Mr. KING. I knew the Senator would. I will state to the Senator that from the information I have now I would be opposed to his position; and the Senator knows that when I differ from him there must be compelling reasons.

I confess that I am not fully acquainted with all the facts relating to the matter under discussion and am desirous of being fully advised so that I may vote intelligently upon the questions presented. I have read a portion of the hearings and talked with a number of Indians interested in the project and with one of the gentlemen representing the Indians. The important facts, as I gather them from the sources mentioned, are as follows:

That several years ago the Government launched an irrigation project and has expended, through the Indian Bureau or the Reclamation Service, or both, between five and six million dollars; that there are only about 30,000 acres of land under the project that have been irrigated; that a system has been devised and constructed at enormous cost; that hundreds of miles of canals and laterals have been built, though never used, and probably never can be used; that the greater part of the millions appropriated by the Government to build the system will never be returned to the United States; that the contracts written with the settlers, both white persons and Indians, will never be met by the debtors, and will have to be scaled down to less than 30 per cent of the face of the obligations; that there was an improvident use of public moneys, and incompetency upon the part of some officials in the Reclamation Service and, perhaps, in the Indian Bureau; that in connection with this irrigation project it has been demonstrated that hydroelectric power can be developed to the extent of more than 100,000 horsepower at four or five points on the Flathead River, between the Flathead Lake and the lands to be irrigated; that as a part of the general plan a numbers of years ago it was planned to build a hydroelectric plant for the purpose of pumping on to the lands under the reclamation project, notwithstanding the fact that it was claimed that the project was to care for over 100,000 acres by gravity; that the pumping scheme was abandoned, after a considerable amount of money had been expended, as being an impracticable scheme; that now there is a plan to have the Montana Power Co. obtain a lease for the building of a number of power plants, one of the conditions being that it will furnish 15,000 horsepower without cost to the Indian Bureau, and that power will be distributed by the bureau and sold to the few people residing in the vicinity of the project—and the testimony of the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], as I read the record, indicates that the number is limited—and that the profits, if any, derived from the sale of the power will be distributed to the settlers, three-fourths or four-fifths of whom are white people, so that the Indians in no event would receive more than 25 per cent of the same.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator has accurately recited the history up to this point, that the Indian Service has nothing at all to do with the distribution of the power. The irrigation district has the distribution of the power.

Mr. KING. As I understand, the Montana Power Co. is to construct a dam in the Flathead River and develop power, and 15,000 horsepower is to be delivered free of charge to the irrigation district; the irrigation district is free to dispose of it as it sees fit, and at such prices as it sees fit to charge—the profits derived from the sale of the power are to be distributed to those who live under the district.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken in two of his premises. First, they are not to furnish this 15,000 horsepower free of charge, but they are to furnish it practically at cost to the irrigation or reclamation project.

Mr. KING. It is to be free of charge to the district?

Mr. WHEELER. No; not at all.

Mr. KING. What is the district to pay for it?

Mr. WHEELER. The district, I understand, is to pay the power company about what it costs the company.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean that the capital invested is to be repaid or that interest thereon is to be received by the power company?

Mr. WHEELER. No; they are to pay for the horsepower that they get from whatever power company gets it.

Mr. SMOOT. The contract calls for 1½ mills per kilowatt-hour.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; those are the terms.

Mr. KING. That will be an inconsiderable price.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course.

Mr. KING. So it is practically free to the district.

Mr. WHEELER. Not free.

Mr. KING. The statement is accurate, is it not, that the Indians are only distributees of their pro rata share of the profits derived from the sale of the power?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. I would not want to agree that 1½ mills per kilowatt-hour is the cost price.

Mr. WHEELER. I said about cost price. I do not know, I am sure, what it would cost.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that it is one-half the price paid for power in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that money is to be taken out of the Treasury of the United States ultimately for the erection of some part of the power system?

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly; that is what this provides for, the taking of money out of the Treasury of the United States for the building of a transmission line, so that if the Interior Department wants to buy power from whoever develops the power site, they can do so.

Mr. KING. Does not the plan contemplate that the United States is being projected, willy-nilly, into the power business, to become the builder of the power line and the distributor of the power, and to that extent is not the project one that is to be owned and operated by the Government?

Mr. WHEELER. I think so. But let me say this to the Senator: There is no doubt but what originally the Indian Department and the Montana Power Co. entered into a tentative agreement whereby they were to give the Indians only about 30 per cent of the proceeds of the rentals.

Mr. KING. In my opinion, that was not fair to the Indians.

Mr. WHEELER. No; and I objected to it, and that has been stopped, I am sure. Next they entered into what some called a tentative agreement whereby they were to furnish this 15,000 horsepower to the reclamation project. The Indians took the position that this was unfair and that it would come out of their revenues. In other words, if the power company did not have to furnish this to the Government, they, the Indians, would be able to get more in the way of rentals for this power site.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for the purpose of permitting me to propound a question to the junior Senator from Montana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to ask the Senator whether or not it is his opinion that the Indians were correct in that assumption?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there was any doubt in the world but that they were right in their assumption, that if it had gone through in that way that would have been the result of it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; but I mean with regard to this 15,000 horsepower.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know that I quite understand the question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I understood the Senator, he just stated that the Indians felt that if this 15,000 horsepower were furnished at cost it would thereby diminish their revenue on the project to that extent. The question I ask the Senator is whether or not he feels that the Indians were correct in that assumption?

Mr. WHEELER. I would be inclined to think they were correct in it, although I would not be able to state definitely, because I have not any definite information on it. I would be inclined to think that if the power company, or whoever developed it, did not have to furnish that power to the Reclamation Service, they would be willing to pay more for it. I think that would be the natural result.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It seems to me, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me further, that provision with regard to this 15,000 horsepower being furnished to the Reclamation Service at cost is tantamount to reducing the water-power value of that site by 15,000 horsepower.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Indians were to be paid for this 15,000 horsepower that was furnished to the Reclamation Service; that is, they were to get a rental for it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; but at what rate?

Mr. WHEELER. They were to get a rental of $1, or whatever the commission rented it to the power company for.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I may trespass further on the time of the Senator from Utah——

Mr. KING. We are seeking information, and I am glad to yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The point I want to clear up is this: I have been informed—and the reading of the hearings before the committee would lead one to believe—that if this 15,000 horsepower is to be furnished to the Reclamation Service the Indians thereby will have their revenue from this entire project reduced by the amount of 15,000 horsepower. I do not see how any other construction can be placed upon it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, that is not correct at all. I would be very glad to give the Senator from Wisconsin more exact information about that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I surrender the floor, so that the Senator can make a statement.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me, I would like to straighten this thing out now.

Mr. KING. I am glad to have the Senator do so. I will yield the floor in order that the Senator may advise us of the situation as he understands it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This legislation contemplates that the legislation of 1926 and 1927, to which I have referred, would be gotten out of the way, so that the thing would be back in just exactly the situation in which it was before that legislation was enacted, except as it is modified here. That is to say, the Federal Power Commission would have the right then, the other thing being out of the way, to go on and issue a permit for the development of this power.

A good deal has been said about the Montana Power Co., as if this legislation would give the power site to the Montana Power Co. The Montana Power Co. has simply made an application to the Federal Power Commission for a permit to develop this power. There is another application before the Power Commission for the development of this power, and the Montana Power Co. may never get permission from the commission. It may be awarded to some one else. Any one of the great companies may at any time come in any make an application for the privilege of developing this power.

It is quite likely that the Montana Power Co. is in a situation to offer better terms than anybody else; but I want the thing understood. I have here a copy of the proposal the Montana Power Co. makes, and in order that the Senate may have full information in the matter I ask that it may be incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 17, 1927.

FLATHEAD IRRIGATION PROJECT AND POWER

(Memorandum for Commissioner of Indian Affairs)

Consideration of the factors in this matter, many of which have been discussed with subordinates of your office during the past week, lead me to make on behalf of the Montana Power Co. the following suggestions as a basis for an agreement, if the proper permits can be obtained and necessary conditions fulfilled, under which the Montana Power Co. or its subsidiary company, the Rocky Mountain Power Co., would undertake the development of the Flathead River power sites on the Indian reservation.

A. The Power Co. would agree to deliver at the plant to be erected at the Newell site electrical energy to be used by the irrigation project exclusively for pumping water for irrigation all power required by the Government for that purpose up to 10,000 horsepower at the price of 1 mill per kilowatt-hour.

B. The Power Co. will deliver, either at the Newell plant or at some place more convenient to the project to be agreed upon, such power as may be demanded by the United States for all project and farm uses and for sale up to 5,000 horsepower at a price of 2½ mills per kilowatt-hour delivered.

C. The Power Co. will pay to the United States each year during the life of its permits from the United States $1 per annual average horsepower generated at its proposed Newell plant and all other plants on the Flathead River on said reservation erected below Flathead Lake, the idea being that the United States may devote the sum so paid as it shall see fit, and that said payments are expected to cover all charges made on account of or through the Federal Power Commission, and that the remainder will probably be divided between the Flathead Indians as a tribe and the United States on account of the irrigation project in the proportion of one-third to the tribe and two-thirds to the irrigation project.

D. The Power Co. as soon as it starts construction on the Newell plant or any other plant will reimburse the United States for the cost, without interest, of the Newell tunnel, which sum is about $101,000, and does not exceed and shall not for this purpose be taken as exceeding $102,000.

E. The Power Co. will agree to press its applications already made and make other applications, if necessary, to the Federal Power Commission for permits to utilize the said power sites on the Flathead River, and will accept permits from said commission containing the usual provision of documents of that character and embodying the agreement to be made in accordance with this memorandum.

F. The Power Co. will agree to acquire the necessary rights to use Flathead Lake as a reservoir and make the necessary dam therefor, said dam shall be capable of raising the water level in said lake to elevation 2,893 feet above sea level; datum and rights to maintain the lake level to that extent shall be acquired.

G. The Power Co. will agree to start the necessary preliminaries to construction of the aforesaid dam and proceed diligently with the actual construction thereof and of the power plant at the Newell site as soon as proper borings of the site have been made for determination of foundation conditions, and will start those borings within six months from the date hereof.

H. The company will agree to equip the plant at said Newell site so as to produce 50,000 kilowatts at the beginning and thereafter to develop the said site to full capacity within a reasonable time, to be agreed upon in the above-mentioned contract and to be fixed in said permits.

I. It is contemplated that the above-mentioned contract shall contain such proper limitations and requirements as may be agreed upon looking to the development of the other power sites as the demand for power shall warrant and with the idea that the company shall either develop those sites promptly when the demand for power does warrant or permit of their being developed by other licensees of the United States.

J. The company will also be expected to make appropriate agreements looking to the regulation of the Flathead Lake reservoir so as to insure the best use of the water stored there for power purposes, not only at the Newell power site but at all other sites on the river, whether or not the lower sites shall be developed by the Power Co. or by others and also so that navigation on Flathead Lake shall not be interfered with.

K. The company furthermore agrees to make all proper appropriations of water for the development of these power sites or to acquire other appropriations or filings already made as may be useful or necessary for that purpose. The company will also agree that the United States for the irrigation project shall have the privilege of pumping water from Flathead Lake or the Flathead River for all purposes of irrigation on the Flathead irrigation project or the Flathead reservation lands whether included in said project or not.

L. The Power Co. realizes that after it has begun construction or the making of preparations therefor, it will have power from some of its existing plants on the reservation before power will be produced from any of these sites. A part of such power would be useful for farm and project purposes, and therefore the company will agree to deliver power for such purposes at a point on its line to any transmission line constructed by the Government in quantities required by the United States up to 500 horsepower at 2½ mills per kilowatt-hour.

M. The company realizes that it may be impossible to have final permits issued from the power commission before it starts making preparations and doing other acts that practically commit it to this development. The company desires to undertake this development at once if agreements contemplated by this memorandum can be reached. If they can not be reached, the company desires to go elsewhere for the power that it wishes to develop at this time. The company finds it is in a position where it must make further developments for its customers, and therefore desires to reserve the right to make other arrangements if on July 1, 1927, it is unable to make this contract.

N. The power company desires to aid in the development of the irrigation project and development of the rest of the land on the reservation and is willing to have the proposed contract contain appropriate provision securing to the Government, the project or the irrigation districts, the exclusive right to sell power within the Flathead Reservation.

The foregoing, of course, does not cover all the items that should be taken care of in the contract, but it is hoped that it sufficiently shows the lines upon which such a contract could be consummated. This memorandum is submitted so as these things can be concluded if this meets with your approval.

THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN POWER CO.,
By F. M. KERR,
Vice President and General Manager.
THE MONTANA POWER CO.,
By F. M. KERR,
Vice President and General Manager.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Montana Power Co. agrees in this to make the development. It agrees to pay back to the Reclamation Service the $100,000, or thereabouts, which has already been expended in the development of the Newell site, which is to be submerged if the larger development takes place. It offers to develop power to the extent of 100,000 horsepower, and to pay a dollar a horsepower for all it develops. Of that 100,000 horsepower which it contemplates developing, it proposes to turn over 15,000 horsepower to the irrigation district.

Every dollar that is thus paid goes to the credit of the Indians. It does not make any difference whether it goes to the irrigation district, or whether it goes to the Anaconda Co., or whether it goes to the Milwaukee & St. Paul road, for every horsepower they develop they give the Indians a dollar. So that if the proposal should be accepted the Indians would get paid for every pound of horsepower that would go to the district.

The district then proposes to construct a distribution system, and what the district does with the profits it makes upon the power which it sells is a matter of no more concern to the Indians than a consideration of what profits the Milwaukee & St. Paul Road makes upon the power they buy from the Montana Power Co. or any other company.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is the Senator quite accurate in saying that the district will construct the system? Is it not purposed that the Government of the United States shall make payment for the construction of the system?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, that is another question. We understand perfectly well that the Senator from Utah is against the Government spending any money for any purpose of this character. That is an entirely different thing. The legislation contemplates that the Government shall advance this amount to the district, and that the district shall operate the system and repay the amount to the Government. That is an entirely different question from the rights of the Indians. It is a matter of no consequence, so far as the Indians are concerned, whether the Government of the United States advances this money to the district or whether the district goes somewhere else and gets it. I am perfectly willing to canvass with the Senator any time the question of the wisdom of the Government advancing this money to the district, or the district getting it somewhere else; but that is a matter of no concern to the Indians, and we are now talking about the interests of the Indians and the opposition of the Indians to this proposition. I trust the Senator will segregate the two in his own mind.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that Mr. McCormack, the Lieutenant Governor of the State of Montana, was very explicit in accepting an amendment to the bill, providing—

> That no license shall be granted that will raise the waters of Flathead Lake to a higher elevation than 2,886, Kavanaugh survey.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That also introduces an entirely separate controversial question. Could we not dispose of this question of the Indians first?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any question about the policy of the Senate as to the Indians.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The argument is made that this legislation should not be accepted by the Senate because it is unfair to the Indians. I just rose, by the courtesy of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], to give him the information he sought, and the information is that if the Montana Power Co.'s proposition should be accepted—and there is no certainty that it will be—that company agrees to develop 100,000 horsepower, and it does not make any difference where that 100,000 horsepower goes, $100,000 goes into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Flathead Indians. It does not make any difference if 40,000 horsepower goes to the irrigation project, it does not make any difference if every pound goes to the irrigation district, the Indians get a dollar for every horsepower furnished.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does not the Senator think that the Montana Power Co., in calculating the amount which it would pay to the Indians as a rental for this horsepower, computed the 15,000 horsepower to be delivered to the irrigation district at cost, and that if that provision were not in the contract they would be willing to pay the Indians more per horsepower?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I dare say that in view of the low rate at which the district gets this power, if the Montana Power Co. were not obliged to give so much of it at this low rate to the Indians, there might be a fraction over and above $1, although my judgment is that there would not be.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me say that in so far as the 15,000 horsepower entered into their computation as to what they would pay in the form of rental, it would reduce the revenue to the Indians.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Whatever the rate at which they give the power to the irrigation district.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the statement which I made a few moments ago.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well. Now, let me state with respect to that what perhaps has not been attended to. There is a long story there. The irrigation district or the irrigation project claim in this matter an interest in the power site and in the power development. In my own judgment their claim is not very well founded, but I shall put in the RECORD a very able discussion of the whole subject, with a recital of all the legislation in relation to this matter, dating away back to 1907. A careful study of that legislation, with a knowledge of the facts and circumstances, will lead any man to believe that, whether the legislation gives the settlers on the project any right to this power or not or any interest in it, they had abundant cause to believe that they had an interest in it, and they are insistent upon that claim to this day.

For instance, it became necessary for the Government of the United States, in order to carry out that project, to appropriate the water of the Flathead River. They appropriated that water not only for the purposes of irrigation but for the purposes of power, because they contemplated at that time that a power plant was to be a part of the irrigation project. The people who went upon that reservation, from the time they went there, have been looking forward from day to day to a reduction of the cost of the construction of the project, which has mounted to enormous figures by reason of the delay of the Congress, of which I have complained here year after year, to make the appropriations to keep up the project. They have looked forward during all these years to reducing the cost of construction by reason of some revenues coming from that power.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In view of this contention between the Indians upon the one side and the settlers upon the other. I undertake to say it is picayunish to figure out about how much more than $1 per horsepower the Montana Power Co. might be willing to give if it did not have to give 15,000 horsepower to the district at this low rate. In other words, I submit that anyone who really has the interests of these people at heart and who is fairly conversant with the situation could not possibly say that this is not a splendid thing for the Indians, by which they will get $100,000 every year after the project is in operation. They have been looking forward to this for 25 years, and the settlers will insist upon their rights to the last, until an adjustment of the thing is made in some form or other, and the Indians will not have this development.

So that my own judgment about the matter is—and I assert that I am as good a friend of the Indians in the State of Montana as any Senator on the floor—that they had not better quarrel too much about the difference between $1 per horsepower and what it would be if this trifling matter of 15,000 horsepower out of 200,000 went to the project at this low rate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. What bothered me about the whole matter is the fact that it was testified before the committee that if the water was raised to a higher elevation than 2,886, Kavanaugh survey, the farmers would be drowned out and most of the property destroyed. Then when I tried to find out how many horsepower could be developed by keeping the elevation down to 2,886, Kavanaugh survey, the Lieutenant Governor of Montana and others did not know exactly; but it would not, as I understood them all in private conversation to say, amount to 100,000 horsepower. If we expect to get that amount of power, then, of course, we are going to flood the farms and homes and business of the citizens there.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That does not follow by any means at all, for the simple reason that above the lake in the valley of the South Fork of the Flathead—and I know the country there like I do the District of Columbia—the Geological Survey and the Reclamation Service have located a dam site within what is known as the Hungry Horse Canyon. By the construction of the dam there something over 200,000 acre-feet of water can be impounded, capable of production at the lowest stage of the water of something like 36,000 horespower, and for the greater portion of the year something like 110,000 horsepower, from that reservoir alone. So that if it becomes necessary to protect the farms and this will not develop sufficient power, it will be easy enough to provide that further storage should be installed above instead of flooding the farms.

Mr. SMOOT. I wanted to bring it to the attention of the Senate, because this is one of the questions I desire to take into conference.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have here now the article to which I referred, by Mr. Pope, giving the whole history of the legislation and the contentions and claims of the settlers with reference to their rights in this power site and in the development of any power under it. I ask that that be incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

CONCERNING POWER SITE ON FLATHEAD RIVER—COMPILED BY WALTER POPE, OF MISSOULA, ATTORNEY FOR THE FLATHEAD IRRIGATION DISTRICT

The Flathead River which drains Flathead Lake flowing in a general southwesterly direction through the former Flathead Indian Reservation, has a fall a short distance below the outlet of the lake which measures 55 feet in 2,800 feet. From measurements taken over a period of four years it was ascertained that the average annual run-off of the river at this point was 8,290,000 acre-feet and it has generally been understood that it was possible to develop power to the extent of 100,000 horsepower at the point previously mentioned with a possibility of increasing this to 260,000 horsepower by slightly raising the level of the lake.

It is now proposed by a subsidiary of the Montana Power Co. that it be granted a license to develop power at this point. The power site in question is not in private ownership and it is proposed by this company that it will pay for the privilege sought in addition to certain other benefits an additional annual rental or license fee to be calculated upon the basis of the number of horsepower developed.

Toward the close of the last session of Congress certain legislation was proposed looking toward the granting of authority to negotiate a license or permit for the development of this power by a private corporation, this proposal having been made in view of the proposition of the company referred to. At that time the question arose as to the disposition of the proposed rentals or license fees. On account of the fact that the power site is a part of the former Flathead Indian Reservation and was formerly a part of the tribal lands and property, the representatives of the Flathead Indian tribe asserted that the entire proceeds of the lease or license should go into and become a part of the tribal funds. On the other hand, persons interested in the Flathead irrigation project asserted that the major portion of the proceeds from this license or permit should be devoted to or made available for the use of the project. The irrigation project comprises certain lands allotted to Indians and also large amounts of other lands known as surplus unallotted lands which have been disposed of to white settlers. In addition, in the case of some Indians having allotted irrigable land patents in fee have been issued and the Indians have sold these lands to white settlers. There are many Indian allotments still owned by Indians which are not irrigable under the project. The consequence is that the interests of the Flathead Tribe and the interests of those having water rights under the project are not identical, for there are many white settlers under the project and many Indians who have either sold their allotted irrigable lands or have never had allotments under the project.

Some persons interested in the project have asserted that the power site and the power facilities referred to are part of the project. This memorandum has been prepared for the purpose of examining questions suggested by this controversy, and it should be suggested in this connection that not all who assert the interest of the project in the power site and facilities are insisting upon a division with the project of the proposed rentals. The position of these persons is that if the lease or license be made on such terms that the entire rental should go to the Indian tribe, the equities of the project in the power site thus taken away should be compensated for by commensurate reduction in the project's obligations for reimbursement of Federal funds heretofore appropriated.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The Flathead Indian Reservation was established under and pursuant to the treaty of July 16, 1855. Article VI of this treaty (S. Doc., 58th Cong., 2d sess., vol. 39, No. 319, p. 724) authorized the President of the United States to make allotments of the lands in the reservation to the Indians in severalty, subject to the regulations provided in the treaty with the Omahas. The treaty with the Omahas referred to, which was dated March 16, 1854, provided for allotment to Indians and provided that the residue of the land not so allotted might be sold for the benefit of the Indians under laws prescribed by Congress. (S. Doc., 58th Cong., 2d sess., vol. 39, No. 319, pp. 612-613.)

Acting in reliance upon the treaty provisions mentioned, Congress, by act of April 23, 1904, provided for the allotment of lands to the Indians on the reservation in the manner prescribed in the general allotment act, provided for a commission to classify and appraise all unallotted lands, and that all unallotted lands should be disposed of under the general provisions of the public land laws of the United States, the manner of settlement and entry to be determined by proclamation of the President, and the settlers to pay the appraised value of the lands as fixed by the commission in installments. No plan for an irrigation system was provided, and the only mention of irrigation is found in section 14 of the act, which provided that the proceeds received from the sale of unallotted lands should be expended in the following manner:

"One-half shall be expended from time to time by the Secretary of the Interior as he may deem advisable for the benefit of said Indians and such persons having tribal rights on the reservation, including the lower Pend d'Oreille or Kalispell thereon at the time this act shall take effect, in the construction of irrigation ditches, the purchase of stock cattle, farming implements, or other necessary articles to aid the Indians in farming and stock raising, and in the education and civilization of said Indians, and the remaining half to be paid to the said Indians and such persons having tribal rights on the reservation, including the lower Pend d'Oreille or Kalispell thereon at the date of the proclamation provided for in section 9 hereof, or expended on their account, as they may elect."

The files of the Flathead project office disclose that in the year 1907 the United States Reclamation Service, by special arrangement with the Indian Department, sent engineers to make a preliminary survey of irrigation and reclamation possibilities on the Flathead Reservation. The first congressional recognition of any systematic survey appears to have come through the act of April 30, 1908, making an appropriation for the preliminary surveys, plans, and estimates of the irrigation systems "to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation in Montana and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of." Under this appropriation the surveys commenced in 1907 were continued and the surveys which are available in the office of the project disclose that the engineers outlined as a part of the irrigation system the development of the power resources on the Flathead River, it being proposed to irrigate in excess of 40,000 acres of land through pumping, the power to be supplied through the development of the power site referred to in this memorandum.

In the same year in which this appropriation for preliminary surveys was made, and on May 29, 1908, sections 9 and 14 of the original act opening the reservation were amended to take care of the situation that was expected to arise through the development of a complete irrigation system. Section 9, which had made provision for payments of the appraised value of the land by the settler, provided that the entryman upon land irrigable by any system constructed under the provisions of section 14 of the act should, in addition to paying the appraised price of the land, pay for a water right the proportionate cost of the construction of the system in 15 annual installments. It also provided that applicants for water rights under the systems constructed should be required to pay any charges for operation and maintenance as should be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. The act also provided:

"The land irrigable under the systems herein provided, which has been allotted to Indians in severalty, shall be deemed to have a right to as much water as may be required to irrigate such lands without cost to the Indians for construction of such irrigation systems."

By this same act section 14 of the original act was amended to provide that the proceeds from the sale of lands should be expended as follows:

"So much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may deem advisable in the construction of irrigation systems, for the irrigation of the irrigable lands embraced within the limits of said reservation; one-half of the money remaining after the construction of said irrigation systems to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior as he may deem advisable for the benefit of said Indians in the purchase of livestock, farming implements, or the necessary articles to aid said Indians in farming and stock raising and in the education and civilization of said Indians, and the remaining half of said money to be paid to said Indians and persons holding tribal rights on said reservation semiannually as the same shall become available, share and share alike: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may withhold from any Indian a sufficient amount of his pro rata share to pay any charge assessed against land held in trust for him for operation and maintenance of irrigation system."

It should be noted that the scheme of this act was to make available for construction of the entire irrigation system both for allotted and unallotted lands the funds derived from the sale of the unallotted lands and the Indian allottee was to have a water right without charge for construction costs. The white settler making settlement under the act was to be required to pay his proportionate share of the cost of the construction in 15 annual installments. In substance, this would amount to constructing the system by the use of the Indian funds, the funds to be later reimbursed as the settlers' installments were paid. This plan was further carried out in subsequent appropriation acts, for on March 3, 1909, the sum of $250,000 was appropriated for construction of the system for the allotted and unallotted irrigable lands, the cost of the entire work to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale of land and timber in the reservation. Subsequent appropriations with the same provisions were made as follows:

April 4, 1910, $250,000.
March 3, 1911, $400,000.
August 24, 1912, $200,000.
June 30, 1913, $325,000.
August 1, 1914, $200,000.

As previously stated, all of these appropriations were reimbursable from funds derived from sales of unallotted lands and timber.

In the appropriation act of March 3, 1909, certain amendments to the original act of 1904, which opened the reservation, were added, among them a section 22, which read as follows:

"SEC. 22. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to reserve from location, entry, sale, or other appropriation all lands within said Flathead Indian Reservation chiefly valuable for power sites or reservoir sites, and he shall report to Congress such reservations."

The power site here considered was included in the descriptions reported.

It will be noted that section 22, quoted above, does not in terms state for what purpose the power site is reserved.

On May 22, 1909, President Taft issued his proclamation providing for the opening of the unallotted lands to settlement, and this provided for settlement in the year 1910. In the meantime, the work of appraising and classifying the lands had been going on, and when the lands were opened to settlement the irrigable lands had been designated as units and were entered as such by the settlers. The fact that as early as 1907, and before the appraisals had been completed, surveys for the irrigation system had been made furnishes some evidence that the possibility of irrigation of the lands entered into the fixing of the appraised prices. The prices themselves indicate that this may have been the case, for the appraised prices for the land were far in excess of the prices ordinarily paid the Government for homestead lands. At any rate, a commission appointed by the Secretary of the Interior in 1914 to investigate the status of the water rights on the reservation made the following statement:

"The understanding of the homesteader that water would eventually be delivered to his land enabled the United States as agent for the Flathead Tribe to dispose of practically all their surplus lands at the appraised value." (63d Cong., 3d sess., H. Doc. No. 1215, p. 36.)

At any rate, actual settlement began in May, 1910, and, of course, at that time the settlers understood that all lands designated as units were to be irrigated from the system contemplated the development of the power resources as a part of the project. In December, 1909, actual development of the power site was commenced through the beginning of the construction of what was known as the Newell Tunnel. This involved the construction of a tunnel approximately 1,700 feet in length at the point of greatest fall in the river and contemplated the construction of a dam to develop a head of 69 feet. The tunnel was 11 by 11 feet in dimensions and the power developed could be increased by increasing the size of the dam. (63d Cong., 3d sess., H. Doc. No. 1215, p. 32.) The construction of the Newell Tunnel was continued until December, 1911, during which period approximately $100,000 was expended on its construction as disclosed by the project records. In the meantime, and while this construction was going on, two of the appropriations previously mentioned were made, namely, the appropriation of April 4, 1910, and the appropriation of March 3, 1911, both of which were stated to be "for the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of under authority of law."

In the appropriation act of August 1, 1914, there was incorporated a provision requiring that there should be submitted to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1914, a report showing the status of the water rights of the Indians and the method of financing the projects on several reclamation projects, including the Flathead project, together with such other information as the Secretary of the Interior might deem necessary for full and complete understanding of all the facts and conditions in connection therewith. (38 Stat. L. 583.) In the report submitted, which is the document previously referred to, namely, Sixty-third Congress, third session, House Document No. 1215, it was pointed out that the project contemplated the development of power at the Newell Tunnel plant (p. 23) and a general description of the power development possible and contemplated may be found on page 32 of this report.

The report called attention to the fact that the funds of the Indian tribe had been set aside for the payment of the irrigation system and recommended that a change in this respect be made so as to attach the cost of construction to the lands irrigated under the system, and all future appropriations to be made reimbursable and repayment to be held a lien against the lands benefited without hypothecation of the tribal funds (p. 9).

Evidently, as a result of this report and recommendation, Congress by act of May 18, 1916, appropriating the sum of $750,000 for continuing the construction of the system, provided that all lands, including lands allotted to Indians in severalty, should pay their proportionate share of the total cost of construction of the irrigation system and authorized the Secretary of the Interior to make announcement as to the total cost of construction, whereupon the owners of all lands would be required to make payments in 15 annual installments. The act further provided that the tribal funds theretofore covered in the Treasury in partial reimbursement of appropriations made should be placed to the credit of the tribe and be available for expenditure for the benefit of the tribe.

It will be noted that this act made a radical change in the matter of financing the construction of the project. Thereafter tribal funds could neither be used for construction nor were they made available for reimbursement of appropriations made. This policy has been adhered to ever since and all tribal funds have been made available for the use of the Indians themselves except as deductions might be made from the distributive shares of individual Indians for payment of operation and maintenance charges.

There exists among project officers the impression that by reason of this change of policy evidenced by the 1916 act, the project is under an obligation to pay to the tribal fund for the reservoir sites reserved for the use of the project. This is not based upon any statute, but merely upon the consideration that since the tribe has now been relieved from any responsibility for the construction of the project, they should not be required to contribute these reservoir sites without compensation. It is understood that the compensation would have to be made at the appraised price fixed by the original board of appraisers. It is impossible to find any record of any discussion of the necessity of payment for the Newell Tunnel site in case the same is used by the project. No payments have been made by the project for the reservoir sites, but the Indian Department has in some of its requests for appropriations indicated that certain sums would be required for this purpose.

By the act of May 10, 1926, Congress appropriated the sum of $395,000 for the purpose of continuing the construction of the power plant of the project. Most of this appropriation, however, was not to be available for construction work until an appropriate repayment contract should have been executed between the Government and irrigation districts organized under State laws and including the lands under the project, providing for repayment to the Government of all costs of construction. This appropriation was continued in effect by the act of January 12, 1927, and the appropriation is available for the fiscal years 1927 and 1928, when the repayment contract shall have been executed. While irrigation districts have been organized for the purpose of negotiating such contracts, no contract has been executed and none of the appropriation has therefore been expended, except a small amount made available for plans and surveys of the power site and power project.

DISCUSSION OF THE LAW

It has been suggested that under the provisions of the Federal water power act (ch. 12 of title 16 of the Code of Laws of the United States) all the proceeds from the proposed lease are made payable to the Indian tribe. Section 17 of this act provides:

"All proceeds from any Indian reservation shall be placed to the credit of the Indians of such reservation."

However, it is submitted that the power site in question is not subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission or governed by the provisions of the Federal water power act. The later acts of May 10, 1926, and January 12, 1927, making continued specific appropriations for the development of the power plant by the project would properly be construed as a congressional declaration that this power site should not be deemed under the control of the power commission. It is understood that the Power Commission and the Indian Department have taken this view of the matter, while the Federal water power act provides for the issuance of preliminary permits by that commission; a preliminary permit for exploration at the power site by the Montana Power Co., or its subsidiary, has been granted by the Indian Department without any action being taken by the Federal Water Power Commission. When the word "reservations," as used in the Federal water power act, is examined, it will be found that it is defined as follows:

"Reservations means national monuments, national parks, national forests, tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations, and other lands and interests in lands owned by the United States and withdrawn, reserved, or withheld from private appropriation and disposal under the public land laws; also lands and interests in lands acquired and held for any public purpose."

It may be well doubted whether what was formerly the Flathead Indian Reservation is now any longer a true Indian reservation in the technical sense, but it is apparent that regardless of that consideration it is a question yet to be determined whether the lands embracing the power site are tribal lands. If, as is contended, they are lands set aside for the use of the project, they are not in a full sense tribal lands and hence might not come within the definition of the word "reservations" as used in the Federal water power act. Again, section 4 of this act contains this proviso:

"That licenses shall be issued within any reservation only after a finding by the commission that the licenses will not interfere or be inconsistent with the purpose for which such reservation was created or acquired."

If, as contended, the power site was reserved for the use of the project, the Federal Water Power Commission could not under the provision last quoted find that a license issued by that commission would not interfere or be inconsistent with the purpose for which the reservation was created unless the license made due provision for the needs and requirements of the project.

We are, therefore, forced to make the inquiry as to whether the evidence discloses that Congress has not only reserved the power site from sale, but has made the same a part of the reclamation project. The following considerations indicate that Congress has so done:

1. When the act of March 3, 1909, provided for the reservation from location, entry, etc., of all lands within the reservation chiefly valuable for power sites or reservoir sites, it did not specifically designate the power sites as being reserved for the use of the reclamation project. However, it is clear that the reservoir sites must have been reserved for that purpose and for no other. The power sites are mentioned in the same clause as the power development, and at this time it will be recalled the preliminary surveys of the proposed project made mention of the power site and the power development as a part of the project. It is fair to assume that this reservation was made in the light of that report.

2. That it was the intention of Congress to reserve the power sites, or at least the one here involved, for the use of the project is indicated by the fact that construction of the Newell Tunnel for the purpose of utilizing this site began in December, 1909, and continued until December, 1911, during which time Congress continued to make appropriations for continuing the construction of the irrigation system. It is fair to assume that it was known to Congress in what manner these funds were being utilized and the continued appropriation would be an apparent approval of the project as being prosecuted. Congress again in 1926 and 1927 has specifically approved the utilization of the power site by making specific appropriations to be devoted to that purpose alone.

3. After the power site and the reservoir sites had been reserved as indicated, the act of June 25, 1910, which was a general act, was enacted. Paragraph 14 of this act reads as follows:

CANCELLATION OF TRUST PATENTS WITHIN POWER OR RESERVOIR SITES

The Secretary of the Interior, after notice and hearing, is authorized to cancel trust patents issued to Indian allottees within any power or reservoir site and for allotments or such portions of allotments as are located upon or include lands set aside, reserved, or required within any Indian reservation for irrigation purposes under authority of Congress: Provided, That any Indian allottee whose allotment shall be canceled shall be reimbursed for all improvements on his canceled allotment out of any moneys available for the construction of the irrigation project for which the said power or reservoir site may be set aside: Provided further, That any Indian allottee whose allotment, or part thereof, is so canceled shall be alloted land of equal value within the area subject to irrigation by any such project. (June 25, 1910, ch. 431, par. 14, 36 Stat. 859.) (Sec. 352, title 25, Code Laws of the United States.)

This would indicate the general congressional idea that power-site reservations were a natural requirement of an irrigation project of this character. Paragraph 13 of the same act gave the Secretary of the Interior blanket authority to make similar reservations of power or reservoir sites in connection with irrigation projects. Surely at that time Congress took it for granted that a power site was a natural adjunct and requirement of an irrigation project.

4. The report to Congress concerning the Flathead project which has previously been referred to herein, when considered in connection with the act of Congress of May 18, 1916, which specifically followed its recommendations, must be considered as containing evidence that the report came to the attention of Congress. This report disclosed that the power site and the power development was treated as and deemed a part of the project itself. The very silence of Congress upon this point, coupled with the continued congressional appropriations for the continued development of the project, indicates reasons for arguing that Congress has interpreted its act of March 3, 1909, reserving the power sites and reservoir sites as meaning that such power sites and reservoir sites were reserved for the benefit of the irrigation project.

There is one other fact that should be borne in mind and that is that under the provisions of what is now section 7099 of the Revised Codes of Montana of 1921, the United States is permitted to appropriate the water of streams or lakes within the State of Montana for the same purposes for which private individuals may make such appropriation, such appropriations to be indicated by proper filings and to be held valid for a period of three years after the filing of notice. Pursuant to this act the project officials on March 29, 1910, filed claims for the use of water from the Flathead River at Newell Tunnel power site for power and irrigation purposes. These filings have been renewed every three years thereafter, the last filing having been made on January 26, 1925. It would appear, however, that while these filings might operate to reserve certain rights to the use of the water, it would not follow that they did give any title or right to the power site itself.

It therefore seems clear that the power site here in question has always been regarded by both Congress and the department officials as a portion of the reclamation project itself as fully as any of the reservoir sites. All plans and surveys for the project have included the power development at this point; work has been prosecuted there on behalf of the project and appropriations have been made for the specific purpose of continuing development of the power plant. It would, therefore, seem impossible to deny that the project itself has a real and substantial equity not only in the waters but in the power site itself and the evidence indicates that the congressional reservation of the site was made with a view to making the power site available for the project. It seems proper to say also that each landowner within the project has a substantial interest in this site as part and parcel of his water right and that the settlers might justly complain if they were to be deprived of the benefits which it has always been anticipated the project and the users thereunder would derive from the development of the power site. Attention is called to the fact that the expectation of the settler that his land would be irrigated from this system led to the purchases of these lands and payments into the Indian funds which otherwise would probably have not been made.

One thing that causes great difficulty in arriving at a proper solution of the whole question is the fact that the officials of the project have taken it for granted that the project must pay the tribe for the reservoir sites. They expect to have to pay out of the project funds the original appraised prices of these lands. If the project must pay the tribe for the reservoir sites, it would seem to follow that it must pay for the power site. But how much? It might be suggested that the price to be paid should be its actual value for power purposes. If so, the project would have a mere option on the site, which would be of little value to the project on account of the fact that in that case it would have to pay for it all that it was worth. The argument for his position would be that the appraised prices, which are comparatively small, merely reflect the value of the land as agricultural, grazing, or timber land, and that such prices were fixed with a view to sales which were never consummated—hence the tribe should now be paid, if it is entitled to anything, the full value of the land as a power site and for power purposes.

It is believed that the proper answer to this question is this: As disclosed in the history of the project herein related, it was the inclusion of a plan for power development in the irrigation system that led to the act reserving the power site. As shown herein, the available evidence indicates that the power site was reserved for the use and as a part of the project. Had it not been for this reservation, and had it not been for the work of the project officers in incorporating the power development into the project plans, the lands covered by the site would have passed through sale or entry into the hands of private owners, whereupon the tribal funds would have received the appraised prices therefor. It is therefore submitted that if the project is under obligation to pay the tribe for the power site, the just measure of compensation would be the amount the tribe would have received were it not for the project, which would be the appraised price.

Again, it has been suggested that since the power company's offer includes a proposal to furnish the project with 10,000 horsepower for pumping purposes, and at a nominal charge, and with 5,000 horsepower for other purposes at a somewhat greater charge, and to reimburse the project for the amount expended upon the Newell Tunnel, that the project would thereby receive all that it was entitled to from the power site. It would seem that such contention is not a valid one. The law of water rights has never recognized a doctrine that one who has acquired water rights, rights of way, or dam sites could be deprived of these rights by mere repayment of the amount expended in development.

It is therefore submitted that the project has a real and substantial interest and equity, not only in the right to use the water flowing in the Flathead River but in the power site itself, and that Congress can not with justice to the settlers under the project make disposition of this site without some compensation to the project and to those having water rights thereunder. It is not to be understood, however, that the rights and interests here asserted could be enforced in the courts in the face of an act of Congress to the contrary. The line of argument here suggested as the proper one must be presented to Congress, which is a court of last resort, for Congress speaks for the United States, which is both owner of the project and trustee for the tribe. But it is believed that even if Congress should by law deprive the project and its settlers of the use of revenues of the power site, Congress would in that case feel obligated to make commensurate compensation to the settlers in the form of a reduction of the construction costs which they are required to repay.

WALTER L. POPE.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have been listening to all the debate with a great deal of interest, but I am still unable to say that I have a fair idea of just what the situation is. I am seeking information. In the first place, the Senator talks part of the time about 200,000 horsepower and part of the time about 100,000 horsepower. How much is the horsepower to be developed?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The full development is something in the neighborhood of 200,000 horsepower. That would contemplate raising the lake to a level considerably higher than 2,886.

Mr. NORRIS. Application to build the dam and develop the horsepower is made to the Federal Power Commission?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. If they accept the Montana Power Co.'s or any other bidder's bid, the money will be supplied and the development made by the lessee?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. What does it mean when we are talking about the Government of the United States advancing the money and getting it back? If it is a question of leasing power under the regular Federal power act, can they go on and lease this without coming to Congress at all?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can make that entirely clear to the Senator. It is not contemplated that the Government of the United States shall spend a dollar for the development of the power. Under the proposition of the Montana Power Co., if that should be accepted, it would be under obligation to turn over 15,000 horsepower to the irrigation district to do what they pleased with it. The appropriation here is for a distributing system for the irrigation district.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the money the Government is going to advance?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the district through the rentals will be called upon to repay it in a term of years?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that one of the conditions under which the Federal Power Commission required the bidders to bid?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No. The Federal Power Commission has not laid down any conditions. It is simply inviting bids from anyone who cares to bid.

Mr. NORRIS. I am wondering just why it is that the Montana Power Co. in making its bid puts in that kind of a stipulation. Is there any law for it anywhere?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What kind of a stipulation?

Mr. NORRIS. That they shall furnish the 15,000 horsepower.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No. They realize this contention is going on between the Indians on the one side and the settlers upon the other, and in order to get general acquiescence in the situation they propose to turn this amount of power over to the district.

Mr. NORRIS. Some other bidder will probably bid and pay no attention to it, but just bid. There is no reason why the Federal Power Commission should not accept some other bid and pay no attention to this section whatever.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; so the appropriation is to authorize the irrigation district to construct the distributing system or to buy power, so that if some one else other than the Montana Power Co. should do the development work under the appropriation, if the other parties get it, the district could buy power from this company.

Mr. NORRIS. This rather appeals to me. The settlers are expecting it, though, perhaps technically, they are not entitled to it; but if it is a matter of good conscience I would like to see them get this power. But what assurance have we or they that they will ever get anything if, for instance, the Federal Power Commission accepts some other company's bid that does not contain anything about it? The lessee could prevent the irrigation district from getting a single kilowatt of power if they wanted to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They would be obliged to sell to them at the current rate.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose somebody else buys it, then the district would get nothing.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Some one else might do the development and, of course, might have contracts that would use up the whole production.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I am trying to get at. If the settlers have any right to some power, either technically or in good conscience, unless there is some provision in the bill or some statute there is no assurance that they will ever get a kilowatt, is there?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; none whatever. The appropriation contemplates just such a situation and authorizes the district to buy power from any source that they can get it.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose they could not buy power here; is there any other place they can get it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Then it rather seems to me that we ought to take a position here directing the Federal Power Commission, if they make this lease, either to consider or to throw out the claim of the settlers for a certain amount of power, because otherwise they may lose it all. There is no assurance that they will ever get anything. They might even be held up on it. They have no assurance that any other bidder would give them the same favor that the Montana Power Co. propose in their bid. If it is right that they should have that favor, it ought to be required that any other bidder should give it to them. It may be the Montana Power Co. should not be permitted to give them that. If the settlers have no claim in good conscience or law, the Montana Power Co.'s bid is rather unfair to the Indians to the extent of the profit that otherwise might be made on the 15,000 horsepower, and that would be quite a sum of money. That is either right or wrong.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My own judgment about it, if I may say so, is that the difference between $1 per horsepower and what the Montana Power Co. would be willing to offer if it did not have to give this 15,000 horsepower at the rates here specified, would be inconsequential.

Mr. NORRIS. I rather think that is correct.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is my judgment. I may be wrong about it.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps not enough to quarrel much about if there is enough money to go around.

But I am still wondering whether, if these settlers are right in their claims, we may not by the action that we are taking here to-day bring about a condition of circumstances in which they would get nothing, if I understand the situation aright.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is possible. But just now the discussion was rather precipitated by those who feel that the Indians are getting the worst of it.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that, and I am not judging that contest. If this should all go to the Indians, then, I think, the Federal Power Commission ought not to accept a bid such as the Montana Power Co. has made. If the Indians are entitled to it lawfully and equitably, then there is not any more reason why we should let somebody else get 15,000 horsepower than that we should let somebody else get 50,000 horsepower.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to say just this word in conclusion: The Indians stand to get $100,000 a year. I think there is a guaranty of $50,000 from the start; the proposition itself will so show; but I undertake to say that unless this matter shall be adjusted in some way it will be years before the Indians will get anything.

Bear in mind also that this power is running away into the Pacific Ocean year after year, and nobody is getting anything out of it. We in the State of Montana have looked for 30 years to the development of this great water power. There is a chance now to develop it. The Indians have been looking forward to the development of this water power, expecting to get something out of it for a generation.

Mr. NORRIS. How many Indians are on this reservation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My recollection is that there are 2,500. They have been looking forward to getting something out of it for a generation. Now there is a chance for them to get $100,000 a year out of it, and yet we are stickling upon the question of how much more than a dollar per horsepower the Montana Power Co. would give if it were not pledged under this proposition to give 15,000 horsepower to the irrigation district at the low rate that is specified in this proposition.

I undertake to say that it would not amount to $100,000 in all time. Of course, it is not necessary to fix that, because their permit would be only for 50 years. I undertake to say that the difference would not amount to enough in the whole period of their license of 50 years to make up for the loss of 1 year's revenue to the Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The Indians have usually had a delegation here to express their wishes in matters of this kind. I was not present during all the sessions of the committee, but at the hearings they were represented by an attorney and by a member of the Indian Defense Association.

Mr. SMOOT. By the lieutenant governor of the State.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood the Indians were not satisfied with this amendment. I wish to ask the Senator from Montana if he knows anything about their feelings on this question? The Senator will excuse me for asking the question, as I have not been here during the entire course of his remarks.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Kansas is quite right. The delegation had a conference with Mr. Grorud, the attorney for the Indians, and with Mr. Collier, and we went over the whole matter with them. They were apprehensive about how their interests might be affected by this proposition, but they went away from the conference satisfied that really this proposed legislation is needed in order to get rid of the legislation of 1926 and 1927. We supposed that the matter had all been arranged, but I got a letter the next day from Mr. Collier offering half a dozen different objections to the legislation. So I feel frank to say that the representatives of the Indians here are against this proposed legislation, but I am very confident that neither the one nor the other of those representatives has given any real serious consideration, if he is capable of doing so, to the business aspects of the proposition.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. Will the Senator from Montana state just briefly what are the objections which are urged by Mr. Collier and the other representative of the Indians?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be glad to put Mr. Collier's letter into the RECORD.

Mr. BRUCE. May I say to the Senator he need not trouble to do that if he will just let me see the letter to which he refers?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will ask my secretary to get the letter from Mr. Collier. I confess, after reading it, I am unable to state with any degree of accuracy exactly what it means.

Mr. WHEELER. I think I can state to the Senator just what the objections are.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong the discussion with regard to this matter, but I can not agree with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that the matter upon which the contention rests is one that should be taken lightly. In my humble judgment, if the rights of the Flathead Indians to this power site have been impaired, they have been impaired as the result of the exercise of the plenary power of Congress. The record of Congress is filled with legislation of that character. Nevertheless, Mr. President, I do not feel that Congress is justified in continuing an injustice merely because one has been committed in the past. All of us who have any familiarity with Indian legislation know that at each session of Congress we devote much time and pass many bills to rectify the injustices which have been done to the Indians by previous Congresses in the exercise of that plenary power which the courts recognize rests with Congress.

The Senator from Montana has said that a great deal of the discussion has been over the proposal of the Montana Power Co. That is true; and the reason for it, I believe, is found in the fact, unless I am entirely misinformed, that the proposal of the Montana Power Co. was finally made after conferences with representatives of the Department of the Interior, after conferences, of course, with Mr. Merrill, of the Power Commission, and with others interested in the matter. So we are not going far astray from the facts if we assume that the proposal of the Montana Power Co. is the one which is likely to be accepted if this proposed legislation shall be enacted.

The Senator from Montana views as worthy of no consideration, or practically none, the provisions for furnishing 15,000 horsepower each year to the irrigation district as proposed in the tentative offer of the Montana Power Co. Obviously, Mr. President, 15,000 horsepower each year is 15 per cent of the potential development which is contemplated at the site.

The Senator from Montana, if I understood him correctly, at first took the position that it would not make any difference to the Indians where this 15,000 horsepower was disposed of, but he subsequently stated he had no doubt the Montana Power Co. must have taken into consideration, as any other sound business concern would, the fact that they would be required under this proposal to furnish 15,000 horsepower each year to the irrigation project at an exceedingly low rate. It is a fact, which I do believe can not be gainsaid successfully, that any concern which is required to furnish 15,000 horsepower to this irrigation project at a surprisingly low figure will take that into consideration in arriving at the amount at which they can pay per horsepower as a rental to the Indians for the total amount of power developed on the project. Therefore, in so far as that entered into their calculations, in so far as they considered the fact that they would have to furnish 15 per cent of their potential development to the Government practically at cost, they thereby diminished the amount of rental which they offered to pay to the Indians and thereby diminished the revenue which the Indians would receive from this development.

Mr. President, it may seem that we have taken a great deal of time in considering a matter which on the surface does not appear to be important, but there are numbers of sites in this country where power will ultimately be developed which are contiguous to irrigation projects. If we are to establish the precedent of recognizing the rights, either directly given by Congress through its action in the enactment of legislation or given by inference to the white settlers upon irrigation projects, and thereby diminish the amount of revenue which the Indians are to receive from the power sites located on their reservations, it becomes a matter of much larger consequence.

The Senator from Montana said that this potential power has been running away to the sea for many years; that it has not been developed, and that, therefore, it has not brought any return to the Indians. That is true; it can not be denied; but they have been waiting, as the Senator has said, for a generation of time for this development, and now that it is at hand I believe that it is the duty of Congress to see that they get everything to which they are entitled when that development shall take place.

Therefore I believe that the committee certainly acted wisely in so far as it struck from the House text the provision with regard to the development of this site and provided for the provision being considered in conference. The Senator from Utah has assured the Senator from Montana that he will be afforded ample opportunity to appear there and present any arguments which he may have in behalf of his position, and I assume that the Senator from Utah will assure other interested parties who are primarily concerned that this matter shall be adjusted upon a basis which will absolutely recognize the equity of the Flathead Indians in this most valuable power site and that they will also be given an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that in my statement I said that not only the Senator from Montana be invited to the conference but the Senator from Wisconsin would also be invited, as well as others who may be interested.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I appreciate that assurance. Let me say in conclusion, in view of the statement made by the Senator in charge of the bill, that I sincerely hope the committee amendment will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WHEELER and Mr. COPELAND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I want to say that I have read the statements that have been made, and have heard the claims of the white settlers on the reclamation project. I think they are entitled to a great deal of sympathy by reason of the fact that representations were made to them that they had an interest in this power project; but, notwithstanding that fact, I have never been able to bring myself to any other conclusion than it belonged entirely to the Indians, because back in 1855 we entered into a solemn treaty with the Indians in which this property was given to them. It is true that by acts of Congress we have taken away certain privileges and certain rights of the Indians on the Flathead Reservation, as we have in every other reservation throughout the country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will go as far as the Senator from Montana desires to go if a showing can be made here that the settlers upon this irrigation project have been done any injustice or have been led to any erroneous conclusions by the Government or its officers; but I submit to the Senator from Montana that it is not fair and I am sure he would not agree that the Indians themselves should be the ones required to make good that return.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the position I have always taken in connection with the matter. I have always felt that the Government of the United States ought to rectify the mistakes that they have made on this project with reference to the white settlers themselves.

I have not only said so to the Indians, but I said so to the white settlers on the Indian reservation; and I went out to the reservation this summer and spoke to various groups of the white settlers. I had hoped that the Indians and the white settlers might come to some agreement, and, frankly, I thought at one time that they had reached some agreement with reference to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. KING. I am interested in the statement made by the Senator that under treaty the power rights—that is, the power that might be developed—would become the property of the Indians. I was not clear, from the statements made by the senior Senator from Montana and from what I read from the hearings before the committees of Congress, who was the owner of the water, or entitled to its use, whether it was claimed that the Indians owned the water because it flowed through an Indian reservation, or whether the waters were subject to capture and use by any person, or whether the usufruct was claimed by the United States. I did not understand from the Senator whether the United States made a filing upon the river and claimed ownership as a proprietor and pursuant to the State law governing appropriation of water for useful purposes. Does the United States claim the water is the power rights, claim it in its sovereign capacity for itself, or that it holds as trustee for the Indians, or for white settlers, or for reclamation projects?

Mr. WHEELER. It claimed it for reclamation projects, according to my understanding of the matter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from Montana yield to his colleague?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Reclamation Service, pursuant to a statute of the State of Montana, made appropriations of water for all irrigation projects in the State of Montana, as I understand has been done in the case of every irrigation project. Pursuant to the statute authorizing the United States to make the appropriation, the United States, as the representative of the settlers on the project, made the appropriation of this water. The appropriation by the United States is in trust for the settlers on the project, and for the district when it shall be organized.

Mr. KING. Then there is no claim that the Indians own the water?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know that anybody claims that at all. They claim they own the site.

Mr. KING. As riparian proprietors?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As riparian proprietors; and I fully agree with that.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the situation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They owned the entire reservation, portions of which were disposed of to settlers, and portions of which, including the power sites and the timberlands and the villa sites around Flathead Lake, were all reserved, and reserved, I take it, to the Indians. So the Indians own the riparian lands upon which the dams will have to be abutted; but the settlers say, "We own the water, and it takes water as well as the dam to make power, and therefore we have an interest in this power development." That may or may not be sound; but, in view of these contentions, I submit that we are talking about trifles here.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not entirely agree with my colleague about the discussion relating to trifles, because I think it does amount to something to the Indians with reference to the 15,000 horsepower; but there are two bidders, as I understand, for this project. Some one by the name of Wheeler—I do not know anything about him—has put in a bid, as I understand, of a dollar and a half per horsepower, or about 50 cents per horsepower more than the Montana Power Co.; and his contention is that because of the fact that he has not agreed to give this 15,000 horsepower to the Indians, he can thereby pay this 50 cents more. I submit, however, that there is nothing in this bill that would warrant the Power Commission in turning down his bid and accepting the bid of the Montana Power Co. Mr. Collier and those representing the Indians apprehend that the Power Commission is going to accept the bid of the Montana Power Co., and that it will look upon this provision relating to transmission lines as a direction to the commission that this should be done. That is the whole thing in a nutshell. They are afraid that the commission will look upon this in that light and require it as a condition precedent.

I have never been able to agree with their contention from a strictly legal standpoint, although I must admit that the things that have been done before by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with reference to this power site and other things upon the reservation justify some apprehension in their minds.

I want further to say, with reference to the matter that was called to the attention of the Senate by the Senator from Utah. The matter of flooding the lands in the Flathead Valley was called to my attention by the Chamber of Commerce of Flathead County, by the Farm Bureau, by other farm organizations, and by the county commissioners. I, for one, would not want to see the levels of the lake raised to such an extent that it would flood the beautiful Flathead Valley, and I should protest against any measure for the leasing of the power site if it were going to take away from these farmers their homes and their property.

The Flathead Valley is one of the most beautiful and fertile valleys in all of Montana. These farmers went out there years ago and built their homes, and it is not only a question of the value of their farms but there is a great deal of sentiment in it. From what I have learned from the engineers' report, this power project can be developed to such an extent that they will have more power than they can possibly use for some time to come, even though the level of the lake is not raised and these farmers are not flooded. I think the Congress of the United States should see to it that when this legislation is passed the farmers are protected in Montana in respect to that.

With reference to the one provision that was cut out by the committee as to an appropriation of $75,000, I want to say that I received a telegram signed by a number of individuals near Ronan saying that they were opposed to any further appropriations until such time as the Congress of the United States rectifies the mistakes that it has made in the past and cuts down the amounts of construction charges that have been charged against them. I likewise received a telegram from J. H. Newton and the board of commissioners of the Mission irrigation district, in which they say:

> Desire no further construction until satisfactory cost adjustments are made. Forty dollars per acre on a 40-year plan is the maximum. The project is mismanaged, poorly constructed, of prohibitive costs, and inadequate water supply. The present bill provides—> for $300,000 to replace original wooden structure, thus proving our claim on poor construction.
>
> They say—

They also say that the Jocko district is of the same sentiment. The Jocko district is another district.

I am personally acquainted with Mr. Newton, and know him to be a very highly reputable citizen who has given a great deal of study and thought to this question.

The other telegram, which I shall read and want to go into the RECORD, is from Ronan, Mont., and they ask that it be made of record. It is as follows:

> Hon. B. K. WHEELER,
>
> United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:
> We, the undersigned landowners residing upon our lands situated in what is known as the North Crow unit of the Flathead irrigation project, in the State of Montana, do hereby protest against an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of constructing laterals in said unit and on lands adjacent to Ronan, and we are also opposed to signing repayment contract now in the hands of the Flathead irrigation district commissioners. We think at least 60 per cent of actual landowners in this district are opposed to constructing these laterals and also the signing of contracts. We are circulating petitions for the signature of the landowners, which will be forwarded to you as soon as possible. If possible postpone Senate meeting relative to this matter until expressions from landowners reach your committee.
> ALPHONSE CLAIRMONT.
> RALPH E. ROGERS.
> Mrs. F. M. OWNES.
> C. L. PETTIGREW.
> JOHN NADRAU.

I have wired and written out there for further information concerning the situation at Ronan and hope that I shall have it before the committee acts on this particular provision.

In conclusion I want to say that a great deal has been said concerning this project, and a great deal of misinformation has been given to various Members of the Senate. Some have protested against its being developed at all. I am going to say frankly that I should like to see it developed by the Government, as I said to the committee, if it were at all feasible. There are, however, 2,500 Indians on this reservation. They own this project. They want to see it developed. As I say, I held meetings with them this summer, and they were unanimous in wanting to see it developed. There was not any question at all about it. They, of course, feel that this money belongs to them and that it ought to go to them, and that they ought to have every cent of it. The white settlers upon the reservation want to see it developed.

The business men around Polson want to see it developed, and the business men in Missoula want to see it developed, and, in fact, everybody that I came in contact with in that section of the country wanted to see it developed, with the exception of just a few people who feel that the Government ought to go in and take it up and develop it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator answer why with the five or six millions expended the development has proceeded to such an extent that there is only water for 30,000 or 33,000 acres? Five or six millions of expenditure, if the project is at all worthy of appropriation, ought to have brought results long before this.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that it is an entirely worthy project. It is some of the most fertile land in the West. It is a beautiful valley and one of the richest valleys in the whole country. I do think that part of the fault has been due to the Reclamation Service itself. Part of it has been due to the fact that Congress has neglected the reservation and not appropriated enough money to go ahead and complete in due time the work that it started. It has at times appropriated only such amounts as would pay the upkeep instead of going ahead and completing it and having it over with; and the result has been that the construction charges and expenses have been piled up and piled up until the settlers simply can not stand it.

I introduced at this session of Congress a bill to cut down the whole amount so that it would not exceed $40 an acre on any of the lands upon this reservation. I think that has to be done. If it is not done at this session, it will have to be cut down, because they simply can not pay the amount that is charged against them at present.

Mr. KING. That would be a loss to the Government of four or five million dollars.

Mr. WHEELER. A loss to the Government of some money, but it is due to the Government's own mistakes, and the Government should not saddle the loss onto the backs of these farmers, when its engineers have made mistakes. For instance, the Government spent over a hundred thousand dollars on the Newell Tunnel and then abandoned it. You can go out there to-day and find great ditches that have been abandoned, that never will be used. You can find great laterals that never were used after their construction. Yet these farmers are asked to pay for these mistakes.

I want to see this region developed, but I want to see the farmers of the Flathead Valley protected. I want to see the Indians protected, and the whites protected as well, and I shall oppose any legislation that does not do so.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before this measure is disposed of I wish to inquire about the San Carlos water-power site. I have had various letters from an organization referred to this morning, the Indian Defense Association, and many prominent citizens of my State appear to be much disturbed over what is proposed in this bill. It is said that this is sheer confiscation, in reality an amendment to the Federal water power act. Am I addressing myself to something that is entirely familiar to the chairman of the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Will not the Senator let us dispose of the pending amendment and then take up his matter?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland asked me for the objections urged by Mr. Collier to this legislation, and I answered that they were in the shape of a letter. I offer for the RECORD the letter of Mr. Collier, under date of January 26. It is as follows:

JANUARY 26, 1928.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: You will think that we are perverse to agree with what you said this afternoon and yet to disagree with it. I have tried to state the matter in the letter to Senator WHEELER, copy of which I attach. The talk with you and him was a hundred per cent satisfying in the matter of legal construction, and yet I can't escape the feeling of certainty that consequences will follow from the language of the appropriation bill as stated in my letter to Senator WHEELER.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN COLLIER.

Then follows the letter to Senator WHEELER, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 26, 1928.

Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR WHEELER: Your counsel and Senator WALSH'S about the appropriation bill clauses seems to me final and unanswerable from the strictly legal standpoint. And at the same time it is even clearer to my thinking that, practically speaking, the following facts do exist and might reasonably be taken into consideration by Congress, which after all is not a court, but a policy making body.

1. The scheme for applying $285,000 to the construction of a power-distributing system and the purchase of power would be an anomalous unexplainable thing, except for the Montana Power Co. proposal, out of which it has grown.

2. If it be enacted, the result will be to create an irresistible pressure from the irrigation district upon the Federal Power Commission to award the lease to that bidder who has made this proposal.

3. The Federal Power Commission can not in any event be effectively compelled to fix the rental through an objective consideration of the factors that ought to determine rental. Perhaps, as Senator WALSH states, there is no objective criterion. Under these circumstances, whether they be the unwillingness or the inability of the commission to fix an adequate rental, the commission under the above-described pressure, though not under any compulsion contained in the appropriation bill, will go ahead and award the lease to the Montana Power Co.

4. The effect will definitely be to exclude the competing bidder and to sacrifice that much of Indian revenue which his higher bid represents.

From all the above it seems to me that this organization must at least go to this point, namely, that we should lay before the Appropriation Committee the consequences which, as we see it, will follow from the enactment of the proposed language as distinguished from a total repeal. At the same time, what you and Senator WALSH state about the construction of the language seems irrefutable.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN COLLIER.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Senators will recall that during the past two or three years Congress has passed a number of bills referring claims of Indians against the Government for enormous sums to the Court of Claims for adjudication. It was contended before the Committee on Indian Affairs, as well as on the floor of the Senate, that the Indians had been deprived of their rights by the Government and that their property had been taken from them without proper compensation; that lands of great value were taken from them at an appraisal that was unfair and inequitable to the Indians. As a result of these measures, some of which became law, there are suits now pending before the Court of Claims aggregating hundreds of millions of dollars.

In my opinion, Congress has not always dealt fairly and justly with the Indians, and it has often violated treaties which, in good faith, were entered into by the Indians under which they were promised protection not only to person but to property. This view which I entertain of the mistakes and delinquencies of the Government in dealing with the Indians induces me when measures come before Congress involving the rights and interests of the Indians to evince some interest therein. I know that many Indians have been deprived of their property, many are homeless, wandering aimlessly through the land and often becoming charges upon the people. It is believed by many American citizens who have studied the Indian problem that this condition has resulted from the maladministration of the affairs of the Indians by the Government and by unwise legislation by Congress. In my opinion, we have not adopted a wise, satisfactory, and suitable policy for the conservation of the Indian lands and the protection and civilization of the Indians.

Mr. BRUCE and Mr. COPELAND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I yield first to the Senator from Maryland and then I will yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. BRUCE. I have listened with pleasure to what the Senator from Utah has said. I recall a very interesting statement of Benjamin Franklin in regard to the treatment of the Indians in his time. As the Senator knows, Franklin was one of the most just and fair-minded of men; and he said that in his opinion there never had been a war between the Indians and the white men during the colonial period that had not been provoked by white injustices; and I have no doubt there is a good deal of truth in it.

I would like to ask the Senator this question, however: Why is it that the Indians whom we see about Washington are all so fat? As a rule, they look much sleeker and fatter and better fed than the ordinary white man. It has been a matter of curiosity to me. I never see a lean, emaciated Indian. I suppose naturally they are very sturdy and strong. Is it because they are a little more inert than white men?

Mr. KING. There are Indians of the physical type stated by the Senator. There are many Indians living upon reservations who are well nourished, but if the Senator will visit other reservations, he will find many Indians much leaner than Senators, and many suffering from various maladies.

Mr. BRUCE. That is interesting to me, because I have been struck, ever since I have been in Washington, with the fact that I have never seen an Indian in the city of Washington who was not more or less corpulent. I can truly say that.

Mr. KING. I think it is a fact that some Indians, because of the rather indolent life which they lead, are inclined to obesity.

Mr. BRUCE. I am merely trying to satisfy an instinct of personal curiosity.

Mr. COPELAND. They do not have balanced meals. They eat too much carbohydrate food.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator is getting too technical for me.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think it is not inaccurate to say that Congress has been too careless, too indifferent to the rights of the Indians in much of the legislation which has been enacted. That fact has prompted me to examine somewhat the matter now before us. I am deeply interested in the preservation and development of the Indians. I have a good deal of sentiment, a good deal of religious sentiment, may I say, Mr. President, in connection with the Indians. I believe that they should be preserved instead of annihilated, and that they will be preserved and become a civilized and progressive people.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very much interested in what the Senator from Utah is saying. I want to ask him if he thinks that, as a result of the investigation that is about to be undertaken, there will be worked out a system by which these wards of the Government will be protected and taken care of, as apparently they have not been in the past?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not care to enter the realms of prophecy, but because of the many questions arising here, because of the fact that we were asked to pass bills referring to the Court of Claims demands of the Indians for hundreds of millions of dollars for the alleged spoliation of their rights, I felt constrained to ask for an investigation. I will say very frankly to the Senator that I have no desire to attack the Indian Bureau. I believe that much of its work has been efficient and honest. I hope that there will be a study or survey of the entire problem; that the examination or investigation will be for the purpose of constructive legislation, and with a view to determining whether Congress has adopted the best and soundest policy for the preservation, protection, and civilization of the Indians.

There are some who believe that any investigation will reveal the fact that the Indians are hopeless and helpless, and can not be saved, and are bound to extermination; that Congress, notwithstanding the hundreds of millions of dollars spent, has not solved the problem, and that no legislation can improve the situation or status of the Indian. There are some who think that the Government has done everything possible for the Indians, that no higher standard of administration or protection can be evolved or enforced than that which has been followed by the Government in the past. I believe that this investigation, if it is carried on as I feel sure it will be—with zeal and with a sincere desire to get at the facts, and do the greatest good for the country and for the Indians—will result in a modification of the plan which has been pursued by the Government for a hundred years in dealing with the Indians.

I did not offer the resolution for the investigation with the intention of denouncing the Indian Bureau or criticizing the officers of that bureau for their administration. I felt that many laws passed by Congress were imperfect; that many of the 4,000 statutes on the books dealing with the Indians are archaic and not suited for present conditions. New situations have developed since they were enacted and new remedies are required. In view of the many complaints from citizens of standing and repute concerning the Indian policy—or lack of policy—upon the part of the Government, and in view of the many suggested reforms and the various recommendations made as to substantive law and administration, I believed that Congress should appoint a committee to go into the whole matter in a constructive way, in order that Congress and the country might be advised as to whether we have reached the highest standard of service for the Indians, whether we have done our full duty, or whether other and different policies should be adopted, better calculated to protect the Indians and conserve them physically, financially, and in every other proper way.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I share the sentiments of the Senator from Utah. For years, ever since I have been in the Senate, I have been distressed over these various bills that have come forward seeking to take charge of the lands and property of the Indians and to dispose of them. I felt humiliated at times, thinking that we were really working an injustice to these wards of the Government. Furthermore, as a physician, I have been distressed about the health conditions of various tribes of Indians as they were reported to me. I do not know whether anybody is at fault or not. I have the same feeling the Senator has in regard to that. But certainly we ought to find out.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. COPELAND. We are proceeding as regards white people by way of public-health education to teach them how to live and to be in better health and to be more vigorous and longer lived. Here are these people. We have taken possession of their country, they are the remnants of those strong tribes of old, and certainly we must find some way to deal with them. In the Sixty-eighth or Sixty-ninth Congress—I forget which—I presented a resolution similar to the one introduced this year by the Senator from Utah. I do hope that out of this investigation will be found, not scandal or corruption, for that is not what the Senator has in mind and what any one of us has in mind, but I hope we will find some means of dealing with these native Americans, so that we may be sure, as a Congress, that full justice has been done them, and that they have had all their rights preserved.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I know many persons who have been connected with the administration of the laws dealing with the Indians, and I have found them desirous of advancing and protecting their wards. Some have thought that changes were needed in the laws and regulations, as well as the system generally. Some have believed that it is wrong to destroy the tribal conditions and apply the educational policies that prevail. Some have believed that it was unwise and improper to turn over the lands to the Indians without any restrictions.

I am familiar with a situation where a beautiful tract of land was given to the Indians, and they possessed a fee simple title to the same. I, as their attorney, defended their rights in a suit involving the ownership of water for use upon their lands.

Within a few years after obtaining patents from the Government most, if not all, of the Indian owners had alienated the same to white people, and they were left without homes or property. Some of them then went to a reservation where they had no rights and are now seeking to become wards of the Government.

I do not say it was unwise to convey the lands to them without restriction upon alienation after a certain period of time, and yet as I look at the few Indians who now survive of the group to whom I am referring I believe it was a mistake, because they are now paupers and are infringing upon Indians who do have something.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator think there is any hope for the Indian ever to be anything but a ward of the Government unless he is put upon his own resources?

Mr. KING. I have indicated that if the duty devolved upon me now of writing a bill dealing with the Indians, I would not be competent to accomplish the task. I would require additional information and data. I have studied the Indian question considerably and have come in contact with the Indians in the West, but I am not sure what policy should be pursued for the purpose of protecting and advancing them along the path of progress and civilization.

Mr. DILL. The policy that keeps the young Indians under the control of the Government is simply perpetuating the bureaucratic system of Indian affairs that will never in the history of the country ever get them out from under Government control.

Mr. KING. That is the view I have had at times, and yet when I have seen them turned loose and compelled to rely upon their own resources, and have seen them despoiled and oppressed by their white brethren, I have not felt sure that it was the wisest policy.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. As I read the history of what we call civilization on this continent, if there is one thing I am ashamed of it is the way the American Indian has been treated. If we can make up for it in any measure whatever by decent treatment of the Indians left, I want to be a party to giving the Indian that decent treatment. I am not sure that as Democrats we ought to interfere with their local self-government. I am not sure that they ought not to be left to work out their own salvation. But they must have some rights. They were here before we were, and for us to drive them out and disregard their rights would be exactly as if a civilized group came from the planet Mars, if that were possible, and took possession now of the North American Continent and drove white civilization off of it. The feeling I have in my mind is one of resentment regarding our treatment of the Indians, just as I would feel resentment if such a group came and took possession of our lands and our properties and what we feel to be our rights.

Mr. KING. I have had four delegations of Indians from the Senator's State visit me within the past year, complaining of the treatment accorded them by the Federal Government. They had some complaints about local officials in the State of New York, but, generally speaking, they said treatment accorded them by the State was reasonably fair and just; but they complained of the Federal Government and said that it had violated the Jay treaty and supplemental treaties which dealt with the rights of the Indians. For instance, if the Indians cross the border into Canada and return with personal property, they are arrested or their property is confiscated, notwithstanding the Jay treaty gave them the right to cross the border into Canada and from Canada back into the United States unmolested and unrestricted.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator know of any other treaty in the world that never ends?

Mr. KING. Does the Senator imply that the solemn treaty entered into with Great Britain involving the Indians, and in which the United States spoke for them and guaranteed them certain rights and privileges for all time, that the Government is absolved by the passage of time from its obligations? A moral obligation and a treaty obligation may be in perpetuity.

Mr. DILL. Either we must follow the policy that the Indian should have been allowed to hold all of the United States, that he should have been allowed to roam at will as he did for centuries, or we must follow the policy of civilization by which we have pushed him back until he has been forced either to become civilized or to be a mere ward, hardly better than a slave, under Government control.

Mr. KING. I am sure that the committee will be very glad to have the views of the Senator from Washington and I hope that he will present them; because if that policy is to obtain, let us declare it and announce that the ruthless extermination of the Indians is inevitable, because the great car of civilization moving forward will grind them beneath its wheels. But that is not my view. I believe there are potential possibilities within the Indians that will raise them to a higher standard of civilization than they have yet attained. Witness the record of many Indians who lived prior to and following the Revolution of 1776. They were gallant and able leaders, and some of them delivered orations that were classics. They were classics. They compare favorably with, indeed surpass, many of the speeches delivered by eloquent and eminent Senators in this body.

Mr. President, I am for the protection of the Indian. I am for the sacred observance of solemn treaties made with them. We have made treaties with them over and over again and violated them.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator know of any treaty we have made with them that we did not violate?

Mr. KING. I do not want to condemn my country in such a wholesale manner as indicated by my friend.

Mr. DILL. I do not know of any.

Mr. KING. But conceding, as the Senator has conceded, that we have violated every treaty made with them, it is not to the credit of a civilized nation. It is a historic fact that the red man sacredly keeps his word and fulfills his treaty obligations. Are we to concede that this great Republic is inferior in honor and integrity to the poor Indian?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Must we not first define the fundamental rights of the Indians? We have not done that. The question raised by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] seems to indicate that we do not know what our policy should be; but certainly the Indians have rights which should be formulated and made so definite in the way that they are worded that the wayfarer or fool need not err therein. We should be able to know what their rights are, and then certainly the Congress of the United States must respect those rights and see that their rights are protected.

Mr. KING. I agree with my friend from New York. Apropos of what the Senator from Washington said, may I add, and I have mentioned it before and apologize for repetition, that suits are now pending before the Court of Claims, authorized by us, and others will be brought by the Indians to recover more than a billion dollars for violations of treaties upon the part of the United States. The committee should, in my judgment, look into that question. I think it would be fortunate if the rights of the Indians can be protected without litigation. If suits are presented in the Court of Claims they may reach the Supreme Court of the United States and years may elapse before they are determined. The committee may consider what plan may be adopted that will enable the Indians, without suit, to be compensated for wrongs committed against them by the United States.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. DILL. If the Indian tribes succeed in winning in the Court of Claims the millions and billions of dollars of which the Senator speaks, most of it will be put into the hands of the Indian Bureau to be administered by them, to keep the Indian in subjection because they have some of his money.

Mr. KING. The committee ought to determine whether that should be done or whether some other plan should be adopted for the administration of the funds and property of the Indians.

Mr. DILL. The whole policy of the Indian Bureau is one of keeping those people in subjection and in a condition of wards. They will give a few patents in fee and let a few Indians go free, but they will keep enough in their hands to enable them to perpetuate their bureaucratic system and control literally billions of dollars.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Washington can not speak too eloquently or forcefully against the evils of bureaucracy. It is an evil—pernicious and pervasive. It is increasing in power both in States and in the Federal Government. It is a menace to democracy and liberty.

Mr. President, I have trespassed too long upon the time of the Senate. I want to make one observation in reply to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I thank him for the explanation which he has made regarding a very complicated question, I feel somewhat like apologizing for entering his State to discuss matters with which he is so familiar, but my excuse is that I am deeply concerned in all measures that affect the Indians of the United States. All that I desire is to get the facts. If the Indians have not been fully protected, I feel sure that by challenging the attention of the Senator to that fact he would be one of the first to see that their rights are protected.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator from Utah and other Senators who have discussed the matter that no apology is necessary at all. I am very glad the discussion has been precipitated because I think it has developed the fact that the contemplated legislation, so far as the Indians are concerned, makes it possible for the Federal Power Commission to accept the proposal of the Montana Power Co., with respect to which no criticism is made so far as the Indians are concerned, except the difference in the price the Montana Power Co. would be willing to pay over and above $1 per horsepower if it were not obliged under its proposal to furnish 15,000 horsepower to the irrigation district at the diminished figures given here. If there is any other objection to it on the part of the Indians I should like very much indeed to have any Senator present who has any other suggestion to make to offer it now.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Montana that nothing in my remarks was intended at all to have any relationship to the matter pending this afternoon. I was speaking about a chronic state of mind which I have had for a long time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understood perfectly. I also want to have it understood that no figures have been given that would indicate that the differential would not be entirely overcome by the amount the Indians would lose if the development were delayed even for the brief period of one year, not to speak about the indefinite delay of it, if this controversy shall go on.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to make one other observation before the Senator from Montana leaves the floor. The Senator stated rather broadly that I was opposed to any form of governmental ownership of power plants. Generally speaking, that is true; I do not believe that the Federal Government should go into private business; but where the Federal Government has a reclamation project, and as ancillady to it, or in the development of it, it can produce power needed in its activities and for the use of those with whom it is dealing, I can see no objection to it so doing. I feel, however, that the power when so developed ought to go to settlers and not be retained by the Federal Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that that is exactly what was contemplated in this case. The same kind of development was contemplated as has been carried out so successfully in the Salt River project.

Mr. KING. I understood that; but I thought the Senator's statement of my attitude was a little too broad, and I wished to qualify it for the RECORD.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, there has been a good deal of discussion in regard to the Flathead power project. There are many persons who seem to think there is a doubt as to whether the Indians are getting a square deal under the pending proposition, and I believe the committee ought to be commended for striking out that portion of the Interior Department appropriation bill at this time.

The fact remains that while there is some opposition to the Government going into the power business, nevertheless the Government has taken upon itself to care for the Indians, and it seems to me that the Government would be perfectly justified in a case where there is power going to waste year after year and generation after generation in developing that power for the benefit of the Indians upon whose land the site is located rather than turning it over to some private company to be exploited.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wish to address a question to the Senator. I sympathize very much with the remarks just now made by him and I desire to say that if the Government of the United States were going into the business of developing power sites on the Indian reservations and elsewhere, I should unquestionably urge the development of this particular power site by the Government; but I want to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota, has his experience here now for nearly six years in this body led him to believe that the Government is likely to embark on any such policy?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I will say in reply that, even admitting, from my experience here, that the Government is not likely to embark on any such project, that does not change my attitude in the least.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not at all. I understand perfectly well that the Senator would like to have the Government do it, and I might myself; but the question I addressed to the Senator—and he has answered it frankly enough—is what is the prospect of the Government doing anything of the kind?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, there are certain indications that there might be a little change in the sentiment of Members of the United States Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If I should introduce a bill providing for the Government appropriating the sum of $8,000,000 for the development of this power site, what does the Senator think would be the attitude of Congress with respect to it?

Mr. FRAZIER. It looks as if it would be hard to get any legislation of that kind through at this time, yet I believe there is no logical argument against a proposition of that sort, so long as the Government is going to continue to care for the Indians.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I say to the Senator that I have no general opposition to the Government engaging in an enterprise of that kind; in fact, I insist that the Government ought to undertake the development of the Muscle Shoals project for national-defense purposes. Having spent the amount of money that it has, it ought not to turn that over to a private company. I believe under the circumstances the Government ought also to develop the Boulder Canyon. Of course, the Senator knows that we are all in favor of the Government construction of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project——

Mr. SMOOT. No; we are not all in favor of that proposition.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Peculiar conditions and circumstances surround those projects. This is merely one of perhaps a dozen or 40 opportunities for development in the West.

The point I am making is, Mr. President, that we have now an opportunity to get this power developed through the operation of the water power act of 1920, and there is no prospect, so far as I can see, of getting it developed by the Government. Therefore I am in favor of allowing it to be leased under the provisions of the water power act of 1920.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I am not willing to agree to the statement that there is no likelihood of the Government developing water power, especially on Indian reservations for the benefit of the Indians. I believe there is still hope along that line, and I am going to keep up the fight for the Government doing that thing.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I thought I heard the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] say that we are all interested in the development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator meant those from the Middle West who are affected by it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was referring to the Senators from North Dakota and to Montana.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. I would not want to be included in that group.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to make one qualification to the summing up made by the Senator from Montana. So far as I am personally concerned, I am hopeful that perhaps the bid of the Montana Power Co. will either be altered to give more favorable consideration to the Indians or that some other offer which will be more advantageous to them will be forthcoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee on page 33.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I yielded the floor a moment ago in order that the pending amendment might be dealt with. I desire now to repeat the question I asked a few moments ago. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what about the San Carlos Indian water-power site?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. Pardon me; I thought the Senator from Wisconsin had finished.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I rise merely to inquire of the Senator from Utah, if the Senator from New York will permit me, whether all of the committee amendments have been disposed of?

Mr. SMOOT. All of the committee amendments have been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from New York, as I understand, desires to ask me a question.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have had various communications from my State saying that this clause in the bill——

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator refer to the San Carlos project?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; that it provides for sheer confiscation of certain lands; and that by the terms of this bill the earnings are to be diverted from the Indian tribes; and that, by and large, it is an improper action which is being proposed. My purpose in rising is not to go into detail in the discussion of the matter, because I am not prepared to debate it, but I want to be assured that no such evils are going to be accomplished as my correspondents state will follow if this provision shall be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I presume that every Senator has received the same kind of letter. Yesterday afternoon the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] explained in detail the whole proposition as provided in the pending bill. If the senior Senator from Arizona desires to explain it for the benefit of the Senator from New York, well and good.

Mr. ASHURST. The assertions made in the communication are not well founded. This bill as it passed the House and as it has been reported by the Senate committee would have worked no injustice to any of the Indians, but the disputed matter has been compromised to the satisfaction of all. The Arizona Senators and Representatives are all trying to protect the Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. The question was raised in the committee, I will say to the Senator, and a compromise was reached there that was satisfactory to all interested, as I understood.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me ask: Were the representatives of the American Indian Defense Association satisfied with what was done in the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. The representatives of the Indians who appeared there were satisfied. I do not know exactly to what association the Senator refers.

Mr. COPELAND. I refer to the Indian Defense Association.

Mr. SMOOT. Those who appeared before the committee were satisfied.

Mr. COPELAND. And so no crime will be perpetrated if the provision shall be enacted into law as a part of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, has the Senator from New York concluded?

Mr. COPELAND. I have.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to offer an amendment. I ask that the amendment may be read, and then I desire to make a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 30, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "Interior," in line 12, down to and including the word "full," in line 20, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, however, That the Federal Power Commission is hereby directed, within 30 days after the approval of this act, to report to Congress what compensation should be paid to the Apache Indians of the San Carlos Reservation by reason of the generation of hydroelectric power at the Coolidge Dam, in the manner provided in section 10 (e) of the Federal water power act and section 5 of regulation 14 of the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is my opinion that the language stricken out of the House text does impair a right which I believe exists in the Apache Tribe to the power developed in conjunction with the Coolidge Dam.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the matter to which the Senator is addressing his remarks relate to the San Carlos proposition to which I was referring a few moments ago?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is the same subject.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, the matter has not been satisfactorily settled.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; not in the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that this amendment was never offered or suggested to the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That may be true; the amendment may not have been offered in the committee; nevertheless, Mr. President, the situation is, I believe, clearly shown in the record that the title of the San Carlos Apache Indians to power rights in conjunction with the Coolidge Dam has never been impaired. There has been some statement made in conversations which I have had with Senators to the effect that, in their opinion, legislation enacted at some previous time had impaired that right, but there is no showing to that effect made in the record. The record, so far as it is made, clearly demonstrates, in my judgment, that the right of the San Carlos Apache Indians to power developed in conjunction with the Coolidge Dam has never been impaired. But believing that the proper time to test that question, if it must be tested by Congress, is not in conjunction with an appropriation bill, and in order to secure the speedy disposition of the bill, I have offered this amendment in the nature of a compromise to the extent that the distribution of the revenues from the power plant projected as proposed by the House text shall be deferred until subsequent enactment by Congress. The purpose of the amendment is to call upon the Federal Power Commission to report to Congress within 30 days as to what the San Carlos Apache Indians are entitled to as a result of this power development as though that development were being made by a private concern under the Federal water power act and under the regulations of the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have not the least objection to the amendment. I am perfectly willing that it shall be agreed to and go in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, and I want to state briefly why I have not yet called it to the attention of the committee.

As Senators know, this bill was considered by the committee in the afternoon. It was while we had the shipping bill up, and it was impossible for me to be present at the meeting of the committee or I would have called attention to the amendment that I intend to offer. It relates to the Rainier National Park; and I desire to explain it for just a moment or two before I offer it.

Under the act to establish the national parks it was provided, with reference to the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, as follows:

> He may also grant privileges, leases, and permits for the use of land for the accommodation of visitors in the various parks, monuments, and other reservations herein provided for, but for periods not exceeding 20 years.

Under this provision of the general act negotiations have been proceeding in the Rainier National Park with the company that now has the concession and has built a very fine hotel for the accommodation of tourists, for the purpose of extending these accommodations throughout the park. This is very important and very necessary. During the last season over 200,000 tourists entered that park. I know that last year more tourists entered that park than entered the Yellowstone.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that the amendment was not brought to the committee's attention at the time; but the proposition is a very meritorious one, and I have no objection to the amendment if the Senator will propose it.

Mr. JONES. Very well; I present the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 18, on page 93, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

> Provided, That the proviso to section 2 of the act approved February 26, 1919, establishing the Grand Canyon National Park, shall not apply to the Rainier National Park, State of Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I want to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that if in conference there should be any difficulty about agreeing to that amendment, I want an opportunity to be heard by the conferees.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to make too many promises, Mr. President.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, lines 18 and 19, it is proposed to strike out "$12,000; in all, $72,000," and in lieu thereof to insert the following: "$24,000, including $7,000 for repairs and improvement of warehouse, and $5,000 for lavatory extension to girls' dormitory."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall have to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. I should like to be heard on the point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to say that the amendment has not been estimated for, nor has it been reported by a standing committee of the Senate. The same amendment was offered in the committee, and the Senator knows that the committee could not agree to it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I desire to direct the attention of the Chair to section 13, title 25, of the United States Code, at page 690, known as the Snyder Act, authorizing appropriations for the Bureau of Indian Affairs. One paragraph of that section reads that appropriations may be made—

> For the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects.

This amendment is in exact conformity with that authorizing law. That is, I have offered an amendment to the Interior Department appropriation bill providing for the repair of an existing warehouse and an extension to an existing building at the United States Indian school at Fort Mojave, Ariz. There is authority of law to make such appropriations. As I understand the rules of the Senate, if there is authority of law to make such an appropriation, my amendment is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That is an authorization, but that is not an appropriation. Every appropriation, no matter whether it is authorized or not, must come through the appropriation bill; and under the rules of the Senate I shall be compelled to make a point of order against this amendment on the ground that it has not been estimated for. I do not do that with any thought or idea that if it were a bill by itself I would oppose it at all. I want the Senator to know that if it were legislation, and were brought before the body in the regular way, I should be perfectly willing to support it as an authorization.

Mr. HAYDEN. I appreciate that.

Mr. SMOOT. But if we should accept this amendment, any appropriation could be increased in a way that has not been estimated for; and I feel it my duty as the Senator in charge of the bill to do what the committee told me to do.

I therefore make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I believe that the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is correct in his conclusion as to the point of order, for he has pointed out that his amendment is for the purpose of carrying out existing law. The Senator quoted the law, called the Snyder Act, and under the practice of the Senate an amendment which carries out, or proposes to carry out, the provisions of existing law is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think for a moment that after Congress has authorized, we will say, the expenditure of $75,000,000 for the purchase of the buildings on the triangle here in the city of Washington, in the next appropriation bill that came along, because that was authorized, it would be in order to make the whole appropriation for that purpose without an estimate from the Budget?

The law says it is authorized. The bill that we are endeavoring to pass here makes an appropriation. They are two different things. In other words, I may say to the Senator, as far as authorizations are made at this session of Congress and the last session of Congress, we would not think of appropriating now the full, total amount that was authorized.

Mr. HAYDEN. But is not that a matter for the judgment and discretion of the Senate; or are the hands of all Senators tied by the lack of a Budget estimate? That is what I want to find out.

I am a new Senator. It is my desire to understand the rules of the Senate, in order that I may proceed in accordance with them. I have attempted to draw an amendment making appropriations strictly in accordance with the terms of existing law. I believe that my amendment is in order. Without any argument upon the merits of the proposal, which would be vain and useless if it is not in order, I should like to have a ruling of the Presiding Officer upon that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Rule XVI of the Senate provides that—

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law—

And so forth.

The Chair will rule that the provisions of the law submitted by the junior Senator from Arizona, authorizing the expenditure of appropriations by the Bureau of Indian Affairs for a number of purposes, including the one which covers the item he has mentioned, are not sufficiently explicit to be applicable in this case. Therefore, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 40, after line 2, it is proposed to add a new paragraph, as follows:

> For the Bureau of Reclamation to investigate and report to Congress upon the advisability of Federal cooperation in the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands, $25,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to make a point of order against that amendment. It has not been recommended by the committee, it has not been estimated for, and it is a legislative item in an appropriation bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, probably under a very technical and harsh application of the rule this amendment may be out of order, yet it is but fair to say in connection with the amendment that during the last session of Congress the Interior Department recommended an appropriation, and it was approved by the Budget, in the sum of $60,000, for the investigation and reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands and cut-over lands.

Unfortunately that appropriation was included in one of the deficiency bills which was defeated on account of the filibuster which took place during the latter days of the last session. Under an appropriation which then existed, I believe of $15,000, some investigation was made by the Bureau of Reclamation, but that investigation was very limited in its character and did not go to the extent of investigating the merits of the Federal Government cooperating in the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands by drainage.

This is a problem which I have presented to the Senate a number of times prior to this. I think all of the Senators must realize that in the South, where we have a great area of swamp and overflowed land, much of which would be fertile and productive if only reclaimed, it is not asking too much to request the Federal Government, which is expending such enormous sums of money in the arid land reclamation of the West, at least to have this problem investigated by the Bureau of Reclamation. That is what is contemplated by this amendment.

I had hoped that a point of order would not be raised against this amendment. Had it not been for the misfortune of the filibuster during the latter part of the last session of Congress, we would have had even a greater sum of money for this purpose than is called for by this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that there will be one deficiency bill, and perhaps two, coming over from the House before the end of this session. If the Senator can get an estimate for the amount covered by his amendment, and put his amendment on a deficiency appropriation bill, the same as was done before, he will get what he seeks, for I do not think that any deficiency bill, or any other appropriation bill, will fail, Congress not being compelled this year to adjourn upon any particular day.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I thank the Senator very much. Of course, I appreciate the fact that under a harsh application of the rule, this amendment is out of order. I wish to thank the Senator for his suggestion and to express the hope that this item may be included in one of the deficiency bills which will come up later.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I am in full sympathy with the appropriation; I think it ought to be made. But if I do not make the point against one, I certainly can not against others.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I appreciate the Senator's attitude, and thank him very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there is no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am going to take just two or three minutes to make a brief statement to make perfectly clear my position with reference to the measure that we acted on the other day.

Letters are written and articles published urging private ownership and operation of ships, and pointing out the evils of Government ownership. All these writers admit that substantial Government aid must be given to bring this about, but none of them point out how this can be done.

We have just had a week or 10 days' debate in the Senate on a bill that provides a way to build up our merchant marine and maintain it on a permanent basis. Government ownership was denounced unsparingly, and yet no Senator had the hardihood to offer an amendment or a substitute to give aid to private parties to build and operate ships. The only gesture made was a proposal to modify slightly the loan provision of the act of 1920. This was decisively beaten. It was made perfectly clear that no Government-aid proposal could pass the Senate. The only recourse, then, for the Senate was Government ownership, at least for the present. Thirty-one votes were cast for no merchant marine in preference to a Government merchant marine.

Good results will come. The importance of a merchant marine is being more generally and earnestly discussed than ever before. Its need is more and more appreciated. We have taken a long step by passing our bill. It has gone to the House. The leaders seem to be awakening to the need of positive action.

Particular provisions are being discussed. Hands are thrown up in horror at the unanimous-vote clause. Let them change that if they can. I do not think this bill will fail because of a difference of a couple of votes in stopping board action over the sale of a ship.

If it can be done, let the bill be amended so that Government construction or ownership will not be needed. I will rejoice if this is done. The Senate will not, in my judgment, defeat it. There must, however, be no uncertainty about such a proposal, and there need be none. We must be sure that ships will be built under any new proposition.

Our bill may be supplemented by several alternatives to promote private shipping. To the extent they succeed, our method need not be followed.

If our bill comes back with an adequate ocean-mail pay provision, with the loan provisions of the act of 1920 reasonably modified, and with certain provisions of the Wood bill and other bills now pending, such amendments will, in my judgment, have most sympathetic consideration and an adequate measure be passed.

It is rumored that this bill will be stifled in committee. Such action will demonstrate the inability to get Government aid through Congress and fully justify the Senate's course.

The merchant-marine problem should be met boldly. It should be met patriotically. The Senate did the best it could. There was no partisanship in our action. We are for an American merchant marine, Government owned, rather than no merchant marine at all. We will confer gladly over any proposals that give any reasonable assurance of success.

A tax reduction bill has come from the House. It will probably not be brought up for action until after March 15. This will give ample time for action on the shipping bill. I deem it but fair and right to give ample notice of what I intend to do. I shall present an amendment which I intend to offer to the tax bill when it comes up for consideration. This amendment is in order under our rules and against it no constitutional objection can be urged.

Therefore, Mr. President, out of order, I ask leave to offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I ask that it may be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and printed, and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Insert at the proper place the following as a new section:

SEC. —. (a) That the policy and the primary purpose declared in section 1 of the merchant marine act, 1920, is hereby confirmed.

(b) The United States Shipping Board shall not sell any vessel or any line of vessels except when in its judgment the building up and maintenance of an adequate merchant marine can be best served thereby, and then only upon the affirmative unanimous vote of the members of the board duly recorded.

(c) In addition to ordinary repairs to vessels incident to their regular operation, the board may recondition and improve vessels owned by the United States and in its possession or under its control, so as to equip them adequately for competition in the foreign trade of the United States.

(d) The necessity for the replacement of vessels owned by the United States and in the possession or under the control of the board and the construction either by the board or by private companies or corporations owned and controlled by citizens of the United States, of additional up-to-date cargo, combination cargo and passenger, and passenger ships, to give the United States an adequate merchant marine, is hereby recognized, and the board is authorized and directed to present to Congress, from time to time, recommendations setting forth what new vessels are required, together with such proposals, if any, which have been made to the board by private companies or corporations owned or controlled by citizens of the United States for the replacement of these vessels and their permanent operation under the United States flag in foreign trade, and the estimated cost thereof, to the end that Congress may, from time to time, make provision for replacements and additions. All vessels built by the board shall be built in the United States, and they shall be planned with reference to their possible usefulness as auxiliaries to the naval and military services of the United States.

(e) The appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this act are hereby authorized: Provided, That all offices, employments, and positions under the United States Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation except offices and employments calling for the exercise of executive initiative or discretion, and positions calling for manual or menial services shall be subject to the provisions of the Federal laws relating to the Federal classified civil service.

(f) All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed to the extent of any such inconsistency.

(g) That in the allocations of the operations of the ships, the Shipping Board shall distribute them as far as possible and without detriment to the service among the various ports of the country.

Mr. JONES. I will simply say that this is the shipping bill just as we passed it through the Senate.

I ask leave to print in the RECORD a statement made by Kermit Roosevelt with reference to the shipping problem, and also a letter that I received from former Congressman Ball, of Texas. It is a very clear, concise, and comprehensive statement of this proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE FUTURE OF THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

(An address before the Propeller Club of the United States on January 19, 1928, by Kermit Roosevelt)

At no time since the close of the war, when the United States Government found itself in possession of a huge fleet of merchant ships built for the emergency, has there been a greater interest throughout the country in the maintenance of an adequate merchant marine. The failure of the conference at Geneva has crystalized sentiment in the country in favor of a strong Navy and has emphasized the necessity of the maintenance of American-flag merchant vessels on the high seas as an adjunct to the Navy. In addition, the producers of raw material in the country and the manufacturing companies of the country are now fully alive to the importance of having available a merchant fleet which will enable them to sell abroad their surplus products at all times.

There are several bills looking toward the permanence of the American merchant marine now before Congress; there is the Wood bill, the Copeland bill, and the Jones bill. As far as I can make out, these bills can be reconciled, as each of them deal with certain phases of the situation, and a combination of them would go a long way toward solving the problem.

There has been a great deal of general criticism of the United States Shipping Board. The majority of this criticism has been destructive. Any number of people have criticized the manner in which the United States Shipping Board has carried on its tremendous work. There has been, however, a lamentable lack of constructive criticism and almost a complete absence of any helpful suggestion. I think it is time that the record of the Shipping Board be examined impartially. Under the terms of the merchant marine act of 1920 the United States Shipping Board was instructed to build up key-trade routes, and when they were built up to sell them to American citizens whom they were sure would keep the necessary lines in operation. Since 1920 the United States Shipping Board has built up 35 trade routes, trading from the large American ports to practically all the important world ports. The Shipping Board has sold 1,141 ships and 9 lines.

In 1921 the deficit in operating the ships of the United States Shipping Board was some fifty millions of dollars; this loss has steadily decreased until in the year 1927 the appropriation was only one-third as much, or some seventeen millions of dollars. I have been in intimate contact with the work of the members of the United States Shipping Board for the past eight years. While in many cases there was an honest difference of opinion over details, as is to be expected when seven men from different parts of the country are engaged in discussing one problem, I may say, without fear of contradiction, that never has a body of this nature worked harder, more painstakingly, and over a more difficult problem than have these gentlemen. Quite naturally they have not been able to grant all the requests that individuals have made of them, and in many cases the disappointed have felt they were unfairly treated, and criticism has arisen; but when the immensity of the task set before them is considered and when the results, as shown to-day, are also considered, it is apparent that they have done a splendid piece of work.

I am not an advocate of permanent Government ownership of the American merchant marine; however, I do feel that if the Shipping Board is allowed to continue to work for the same ends, and given some encouragement by public opinion, and along the same lines they have been working for during the past eight years, that the steady reduction of costs that has been made during the past seven years will be continued, with the result that there is a very good chance that in three years, as a minimum, the operations of the United States Shipping Board will not need any appropriations from Congress to be continued.

On Tuesday, January 10, there was held, under the auspices of the Shipping Board, in Washington, an open meeting, to which all persons interested in the development of the American merchant marine were invited. In my opinion the meeting was productive of some very helpful suggestions. Governor Brewster, of Maine, made an excellent statement, in which he urged that no stone be left unturned to develop an American merchant marine commensurate with the wealth and dignity of this country.

Mr. Stewart represented the chambers of commerce of the Middle West and made a very illuminating address, in which he said that he had been instructed by his constituents to say to the Shipping Board they felt the fact that the Shipping Board had maintained key services, even at a loss, to the very important countries of the world had been of the greatest benefit to the producers of raw materials and manufactured articles in the various middle-western communities. The fact that the services have been maintained has enabled these communities to more readily reach their foreign markets than had been the case before the Shipping Board entered the business, and in some cases has even enabled them to reach markets that would not have been possible without Shipping Board services.

Mr. Stewart pointed out, although there is no accurate way of checking the figures, it is the opinion of many of the people whom he represented the fact that Shipping Board services were in existence has so largely increased their opportunities to sell abroad on a profitable basis that the increase in the income tax that the United States Government collected has probably more than offset the $17,000,000 now being spent to maintain these Shipping Board services.

As I said before, I am most emphatically not in favor of permanent Government ownership. I am in favor of the Government, through the Shipping Board, building up the key services, because it is the only possible means of accomplishing it, and when they are built up selling them to private companies. I am in favor of these services being sold to business people whose primary business is the steamship business. I am not in favor of the Government selling these services to companies who operate ships as an adjunct to their real business. I am not in favor of the Government selling the services to large corporations whose ships are nothing more than a plant facility built and maintained primarily to enable them to sell the products which they manufacture abroad on a c. i. f. basis, regardless of the freight rate.

There is not the slightest doubt that if large corporations of this kind, who are not primarily interested in the shipping business, gain control of these key trade routes it will be more difficult, and at times impossible, for their competitors to sell in the foreign markets. The sale of these lines to giant manufacturing companies will tend to close on the smaller manufacturers the door of opportunity to do an export business. In the case of the railroads of this country, the smaller manufacturer is protected by the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but in shipping abroad what chance has he of doing foreign business when the ships that he wishes to use are controlled by his larger and more powerful competitors.

I am not in favor of merchants owning or operating any of the key services sold primarily to carry their own products and then holding themselves out as common carriers. In the long run the steamship business can only be built up in this country on a sound basis by people who have no interest other than the successful operation of ships, whatever trade it may be.

Now, in my opinion there are sound business men in all the large ports along the coast line of this country who would welcome an opportunity to risk their capital in the steamship business if they were convinced that the line is sufficiently developed by the Shipping Board, and not prematurely thrown on the investment market; also that through enterprise and hard work they had a reasonably good chance of making a fair return on the money invested. The question is how to give them this opportunity.

In my opinion, the American flag will be kept on the seas by private initiative if American shipping companies are put in a position where their tools do not cost them any more than the cost of equally good tools to their important competitors; that is, equalization of building cost in American yards. Second, once the ships are built and put in operation, the cost of running the ships must not be any higher to the American shipping companies because of our laws than the cost of running ships under the flags of our more important competitors.

Mr. WOOD, in his bill recently introduced in the House of Representatives, has made provision for the equalization of building costs by having section 11 of the merchant marine act of 1920 amended so that the Shipping Board may loan up to three-quarters of the cost of construction of a vessel built in American yards for a period of 20 years, the loan bearing an interest rate of 2 per cent per annum. There is precedent for a provision of this kind, as I understand the British Government loaned the Cunard Line the funds to build the very successful trans-Atlantic steamers Mauretania and Lusitania at an interest rate of only 2¾ per cent, and then granted them a contract for the carriage of mail that would take care of the interest charges and in 20 years wipe out the principal through the operation of a sinking fund. In Mr. WOOD'S bill there is also a provision for an insurance fund that will make it possible to insure vessels built in American yards and operated under the American flag at as low a rate as it is possible for our principal foreign-flag competitors to obtain in their home insurance markets.

I whole-heartedly indorse the above provisions of Mr. WOOD'S bill.

Now, as to the equalization of operating costs. The American Steamship Owners' Association, in a statement made before the Shipping Board in Washington on Tuesday, January 10, stated—in my opinion very properly—that they were not in favor of the repeal of the La Follette Seamen's Act nor of any reduction in the standard of living on American-flag vessels. The American Steamship Owners' Association showed in their statement that the monthly cost of wages and subsistence on an oil-burning 9,000 dead-weight-ton American ship is approximately $4,041, as compared with $2,690 on a substantially similar British ship. The cost of operating Italian, French, and Japanese ships are all lower than the cost of operating ships under the British flag. Of course, one of the chief reasons why British ships are able to compete with the more cheaply operated vessels under some other flag is the world-wide extent of the British Empire, of which under empire trade British patriotism sees that 93 per cent is carried in British ships, as well as the insistence of British merchants selling to and buying from foreign countries that so far as possible their cargoes must be carried in ships of England.

I am in favor of legislation similar to that outlined by Mr. COPELAND in his bill introduced recently in the Senate of the United States, to the effect that every ship built in American yards and operated under the American flag, providing she is built to specifications passed upon by the United States Shipping Board and run regularly in a service between the United States and a foreign country, shall receive a mail contract that will equalize the cost of operation under the American flag as compared with the cost of operation under the British flag. With this differential as a minimum the amount of the mail contract could be increased as provided for in Senator COPELAND'S bill, the amount varying with the speed of the vessel in question.

Senator JONES has recently introduced a bill in the Senate which provides that the United States Shipping Board be authorized and directed to present to Congress from time to time recommendations setting forth what new vessels are required and the estimated cost thereof, to the end that Congress may from time to time make provision for replacements and additions; all of these vessels to be built in the United States and to be planned with reference to their possible usefulness as auxiliaries to the naval and military services of the United States.

I am heartily in favor of this provision, as it is obvious that unless an adequate replacement program is embarked upon shortly the present trade routes can not be properly maintained.

After Senator JONES'S bill was reported in the public press an article appeared in the press to the effect that his bill means permanent Government ownership, because there is one member of the United States Shipping Board who has never voted for the sale of a line. This statement is evidently based upon misinformation. There is not a single member of the Shipping Board who has not frequently voted for the sale of ships, and at times for the sale of a service. The record of the Shipping Board will show this clearly, and I know from my own experience that in the cases of the sale of several lines the vote has been unanimous. This statement, therefore, in the press is erroneous, and I am very glad to have this opportunity to correct it.

I believe that the passing of legislation combining the three bills mentioned above will result in the building up of important services until such time as they are in proper condition to sell, when they can then be transferred to private ownership and operated successfully, so that eventually we will have an adequate merchant marine in the hands of private companies whose primary business is the steamship business.

HOUSTON, TEX., January 27, 1928.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR JONES: Press reports of committee and congressional proceedings indicate that there is much confusion and division of sentiment in regard to the best plan to create and maintain a merchant marine, owned and controlled by the National Government or American citizens, that will insure the carrying of the American flag upon every sea and into every port of the world.

There should be no disagreement among thoughtful citizens as to the necessity of a settled and permanent policy upon this important matter.

We can not and ought not to hope for a merchant marine only made possible by making American sailors subject to the same conditions and wages as prevail upon foreign bottoms.

The American people are not likely to be persuaded to permit ships to be bought in foreign lands and open to unrestricted registry here for coastwise and foreign service. It therefore follows that there are only two ways to carry out this necessary policy, if we are to have American sailors subject to American control, to contend for supremacy with the other nations of the earth upon the high seas in time of peace, and to carry necessary munitions and supplies to our war vessels at all times. It is worse than folly to talk of building up a great Navy, which would have its ships dependent upon boats bearing foreign flags owing allegiance to countries at war or neutral.

I think every one is agreed that the maintenance and building up of an American merchant marine is dependent upon governmental aid, either by ownership and operation by the National Government, or subsidies, bounties, or contributions, directly or indirectly, at Government cost, for the use and benefit of private corporations building or operating American vessels.

If we adopt the first-named policy, all taxpayers will know where and to whom the money goes and in what way it is expended, and just how much the annual cost thereof will be.

If we adopt the latter policy, no man will ever know its costs, and there is certainly as much objection to governmental subsidies, and, to my mind, more than to Government ownership and operation.

The first policy, if adopted, will be a guarantee of the success of the proposition, with the cost thereof a subject of criticism or objection.

If the latter policy should prevail, we will have no guaranty of success, at least under present conditions, with the cost unascertainable and unknown, but always open to objection and criticism, and the gain therefrom much more largely confined to a few favored corporations than would prevail under Government control and operation.

The thought which most impresses me is that Government control and operation is absolutely now necessary if the development of the commerce of every section of the Union is to be deemed, as I believe it should be, the controlling thought and purpose in the development of an American merchant marine. No one questions the wisdom of our public policy to carry the mail to every citizen under the American flag, regardless of the cost, in sparsely settled sections or regions; and who will deny that national control and operation of postal facilities has been the greatest single factor in symmetrically building up and developing our national resources and populating sections that would not have otherwise been peopled?

Who will deny that Government control and development of our rivers and harbors has been attended by a marvelous development that could not have been otherwise had, and waterways have been provided that private capital would not have improved, or if it did, at a tremendous toll or tax upon the users thereof?

Will any man question the wisdom of National, State, and municipal construction and maintenance of our public road system?

Is there any serious question in the minds of thoughtful men and women that as a whole all of these agencies created and controlled by governmental authority have represented development and success worth many times their cost, to say nothing of achieving a position largely due thereto which places us easily and foremost among the nations of the earth?

If we adopt a definite policy of Government ownership and operation of a merchant marine, trade relations can be built up with a certainty, and regional development of such trade relations can be had with due regard to the interest and rights of every section of our States and Territories; whereas if subsidies or bounties or indirect contributions are resorted to, they will go into the pockets of a favored few, who will use their gain to advance their own interests and confine their operations much more largely to highly favored sections which have already been builded up at the cost of our people and deny a "place in the sun" to localities whose development has been retarded by concentration of Government recognition and appropriations to interests and communities which have already grown fat because of such policies rather than the advantages of their location.

It is not my purpose to criticize corporations, private or quasi public, because of their almost uniform attitude in seeking to give their stockholders the largest return upon their investment, regardless of the wishes or interests of those denied the consideration and service necessary to the promotion of their interests.

If we own, control, and operate an American merchant marine system, it can be successfully developed, and when developed, if the Government wants to go out of the shipping business, it can do so to much better advantage than it now can; will have regional trade relations established which will represent a large good-will value, which value does not at present exist; and we will have accomplished the great object in view, which, in my judgment, can not be otherwise achieved.

My lifelong interest in public questions, my especial concern upon this subject, and association with you during our service in Congress prompts me to let you have this letter as my approval of what I understand to be your position, and to let you know that the friendship formed when we served together is as warm and lasting as it was when the distance between the State of Washington and the State of Texas was lessened to me when we first learned to know and esteem each other.

Very truly your friend,

THOS. H. BALL.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I had intended to ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, but a number of Senators told me that they would object. Therefore, I am going to ask for an executive session, and then for adjournment.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate (at 3 o'clock p. m.) adjourned until Monday, February 6, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 4 (legislative day of February 1), 1928

FOREIGN SERVICE

TO BE SECRETARIES IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

McCeney Werlich, of the District of Columbia, now a Foreign Service officer, unclassified, and a consular officer with the rank of vice consul of career, to be also secretary in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America.

SENATE

MONDAY, February 6, 1928

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, forasmuch as without Thee we are not able to please Thee, mercifully grant that Thy Holy Spirit may in all things direct and rule our hearts. Look with loving mercy upon the people of these United States. Turn the strivings of men to Thy glory. Purge all our hearts of the evil spirit of selfishness, and grant that as the dim and tangled web of our thought, which but yesterday we carried to our pillow, now stands illumined and unraveled by the touch of day, so may our spirits at last rouse from the overnight dusk of mere mortal experience into the clear shining of the morrow's intuition. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, February 1, 1928, when, on the request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WOOD, Mr. WASON, and Mr. CULLEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint Resolution 8, relating to the negotiation of a treaty with Canada for the early completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway

Whereas the improvement of the St. Lawrence River by a series of canals and locks, so as to make it possible for the largest ocean-going vessels to pass through its channels and to come to all ports on the Great Lakes, is to Wisconsin and the entire Middle West the most important of public questions; and

Whereas this St. Lawrence seaway project has now been brought materially nearer realization by the recent favorable report of the advisory committee appointed by the Canadian Government, which followed the exchange of notes between Secretary of State Kellogg and the Canadian Foreign Office in the spring and early summer of 1927, in which the United States declared itself ready to enter into immediate negotiations for the construction of the St. Lawrence canals and locks while Canada asked for further time for consideration of this project; and

Whereas the only remaining obstacle to the conclusion in the near future of an agreement between the United States and Canada regarding the St. Lawrence seaway appears to be that Canada believes that it should not be asked to pay half of the estimated total cost of about $167,000,000, because it is now at its own expense building another important link in this seaway project—the Welland Canal—and also that it is entitled to compensation for the loss caused Canada by the lowering of the level of the Great Lakes through the diversion of above 8,000 cubic feet of water per second through the Chicago drainage canal; and

Whereas such an attitude on the part of Canada is entirely reasonable and the United States will benefit so greatly from the St. Lawrence seaway that it can afford to be most liberal with Canada: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Winconsin hereby again affirms that the early completion of the St. Lawrence seaway is a matter of vital importance to this State and also of great benefit to the entire country, and urges that Canada be advised through proper diplomatic channels and by congressional resolution that this country stands ready to give credit in the apportionment of the costs of this project for the expenditures made by Canada upon the Welland Canal and also to compensate it for the losses caused by the Chicago diversion of a large volume of water from the Great Lakes if the United States Supreme Court shall finally uphold this diversion. Be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member of the United States Senate and Houses of Representatives.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint Resolution 12, commending the action of the United States Senate for refusing to seat Frank L. Smith, of Illinois

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin hereby expresses its approval of the recent action of the United States Senate and of the votes cast by the Senators from Wisconsin, Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., and Hon. JOHN J. BLAINE, in refusing to seat Frank L. Smith, of Illinois, and expresses the hope that in any similar case like action will be taken, so as to insure freedom from corruption in our legislative bodies; be it further Resolved, That copies of this resolution, duly attested, be forwarded to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate and to Senators ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., and JOHN J. BLAINE.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Joint Resolution 9, relating to the leasing of the water powers on the Menomonie Indian Reservation to private interests

Whereas the Wisconsin Power & Light Co., an Insull property, is seeking permission from the Federal Power Commission to allow it to lease and develop the water powers on the Menomonie Indian Reservation and the Federal Power Commission has granted a preliminary permit for the survey of these water powers by this corporation; and

Whereas this power project is opposed by some of the Indians, the Wisconsin League of Women Voters, the Isaak Walton League, and other civic organizations because it involves the exploitation of the resources of the Indians by private interests without adequate compensation, and also will result in the destruction of the great scenic beauty of the reservation and of this part of the Wolf River; and

Whereas this legislature in adopting Joint Resolution 92, A., has already gone on record in opposition to the leasing of these water powers to private interests and has asked Wisconsin's Representatives in Congress to consider the feasibility of converting the river and timber tract on the Menomonie Indian Reservation into a national park: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the attorney general be, and is hereby, directed to represent the State of Wisconsin in opposition to the granting of any permit for the leasing and development of the water powers on the Menomonie Indian Reservation by private interests, and that the railroad commission is requested not to issue any permit under the State law for this purpose; be it further

Resolved, That this legislature again expresses its views that the wonderful scenic beauty on the Wolf River on the Menomonie Indian Reservation should be preserved for the benefit of the entire public, and to this end favors the acquisition, with fair compensation to the Indians, of all lands on the east side of the Wolf River from Keshena Falls to Sullivan Falls and west of State Trunk Highway 55 for State park purposes, together with control over the waters of the Wolf River, if it shall not be feasible to convert the entire river and timber tract of the Menomonie Indian Reservation into a national park; be it further

Resolved, That the conservation commission is instructed to ascertain upon what terms these lands and water rights can be acquired, and is further directed to purchase the same at a reasonable price from any funds appropriated and available or which may hereafter be appropriated for State park purposes; be it further

Resolved, That Wisconsin's Representatives in Congress be, and are hereby, requested to do everything within their power to assist the State authorities to preserve the scenic beauty of the Menomonie Indian Reservation for the public, and the Federal Power Commission is requested to withhold any permit for the leasing and development of the water powers belonging to Indians by private interests; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution shall be sent to all departments and officers mentioned therein and also to the Federal Power Commission and the United States Bureau of Indian Affairs.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Joint resolution 10, relating to the Norris resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for the earlier seating of Congress

Whereas the United States Senate in the present session of Congress has for the fourth time passed the Norris resolution, which submits to the several States an amendment to the Constitution eliminating the so-called "short" or "lame duck" session of Congress, by advancing the date for the convening of the first regular session of a new Congress from 13 months after its election to January 15 following the November election, and at the same time advancing the date of the inauguration of the President and Vice President from March 4 to January 2; and

Whereas under the present system it is a frequent occurrence that a Congress and a President who have been repudiated at the election are able to defeat the wish of the people, not only for many months but often permanently, and the reason which in 1789 rendered necessary the long delay in the seating of Congress has been removed by the great improvements in transportation since that time; and

Whereas despite the fact that only six Senators voted against the Norris resolution, there is danger that the House of Representatives will again shelve this resolution without allowing it to come to a vote, as it has done in the three preceding sessions: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Wisconsin Legislature hereby again goes on record in favor of the passage of the Norris resolution for the earlier seating of Congress and petitions the House of Representatives to act favorably upon this resolution without delay. Be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring the early completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, commending the action of the Senate in refusing to seat Frank L. Smith, of Illinois, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(See above joint resolutions of the Wisconsin Legislature printed in full when previously presented to-day by the Vice President.)

Mr. THOMAS presented memorials numerously signed by citizens of the State of Oklahoma, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Brookhart bill, relative to the distribution of motion pictures in the various motion-picture zones of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WILLIS presented memorials numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Brookhart bill relative to the distribution of motion pictures in the various motion-picture zones of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FRAZIER presented a resolution adopted by Vaarliv Lodge, No. 303, Sons of Norway, at Fairdale, N. Dak., protesting against the national-origin provisions of the existing immigration law, favoring amendment of the existing law so that the quota distribution may be based on the census of 1890, and requesting that no further measures of reduction of the Scandinavian quotas be adopted, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented the memorial of L. I. Langness and 16 other citizens of Rolette, N. Dak., remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 1752) to regulate the manufacture and sale of stamped envelopes, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania presented the memorial of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against the adoption of the resolution (S. Res. 83) authorizing an investigation of public utility corporations, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

A bill (S. 2855) for the relief of the estates of John Frazer, deceased, Zephaniah Kingsley, deceased, John Bunch, deceased, Jehu Underwood, deceased, and Stephen Vansandt, deceased (Rept. No. 249).

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2781) to amend the Code of Law for the District of Columbia so as to empower the corporation counsel for the District of Columbia and his assistants to administer oaths, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 250) thereon.

Mr. BLEASE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon and moved that they be indefinitely postponed, which was agreed to:

A bill (H. R. 4661) to correct the military record of William Mullins; and

A bill (H. R. 6389) for the relief of Samuel Pelfrey.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1405) granting six months' pay to Maria J. McShane, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 251) thereon.

BRIDGE ACROSS ARM OF LAKE MEMPHREMAGOG, VT.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 2698) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Vermont to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Clyde River at or near Newport, Vt., and I submit a report (No. 237) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. Let it be reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendment was, on page 1, line 5, to strike out the words "the Clyde River" and to insert in lieu thereof "an arm of Lake Memphremagog," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of Vermont to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across an arm of Lake Memphremagog, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Newport, Vt., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State of Vermont to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across an arm of Lake Memphremagog, at or near Newport, Vt."

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] has just reported from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. 1162) granting the consent of Congress to the Sistersville Ohio River Bridge Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a toll bridge across the Ohio River at Sistersville, Tyler County, W. Va. The bill was introduced by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness. So far as I know, there is no objection to the bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if this bill shall not be passed, a great public improvement will be stayed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Sistersville Ohio River Bridge Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation within the city limits of Sistersville, Tyler County, W. Va., to a point opposite in Monroe County, Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Sistersville Ohio River Bridge Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon land, and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use, real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and other maintenances of such bridge and approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes, or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State or States in which such land or property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State or States, and the proceedings therefor may be had in any court of competent jurisdiction in such State or States.

SEC. 3. The said Sistersville Ohio River Bridge Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rate until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, the State of West Virginia, or the State of Ohio, or any political subdivision or subdivisions thereof within or adjoining which such bridge is located, may at any time, jointly or severally, acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and any interest in real estate necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation in accordance with the law of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages of compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion costs not to exceed 10 per cent of all other cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property, and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvement.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are charged for the use thereof in fixing the rate of toll to be charged, the same shall be so adjusted so as to provide, as far as possible, a sufficient fund to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid for such bridge and its approaches within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of acquiring the bridge and its approaches, and any interest that shall accrue on money borrowed for that purpose, shall have been provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of toll, or the rate of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and if the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The Sistersville Ohio River Bridge Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, shall immediately after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real estate necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate the cost of constructing the same, and for such purpose the Sistersville Ohio River Bridge Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the financing and the construction thereof. The finding of the Secretary of War as to the cost of the bridge shall be conclusive, subject to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Sistersville Ohio River Bridge Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE AT OR NEAR LOUISVILLE, KY.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] a few moments ago reported the bill (S. 2730) authorizing the city of Louisville, Ky., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near said city. It is a local measure of interest to the municipality, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the city of Louisville, Ky., or any board or commission of said city which may be duly created or established for the purpose, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, extending from some point in the city of Louisville, Ky., across said river to a point opposite on the Indiana shore, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the said city of Louisville, or such board or commission and the successors thereof, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said city of Louisville, or such board or commission and the successors thereof, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of tolls so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches or to amortize bonds or other securities issued for such cost, with reasonable financing charges, as soon as possible under reasonable tolls but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been provided such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of tolls shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I introduce the bill which I send to the clerk's desk, and ask to have it read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The bill (S. 3037) increasing the number of copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD furnished gratuitously to the Vice President, Senators, and Representatives was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the forty-sixth paragraph of section 73 of the act entitled "An act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 12, 1895, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"To the Vice President and each Senator, 300 copies; and to the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, each 20 copies; and to the Secretary for office use, 10 copies; to each Representative and Delegate, 150 copies; and to the Clerk and Doorkeeper of the House, each 20 copies; and to the Clerk for office use, 10 copies; and to the Clerk for use of Members of the House of Representatives, 50 copies; and to the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, for the use of the Senate, 20 copies; to be supplied daily as originally published or in the revised and permanent form bound only in half Russia, or part in each form, as each may elect."

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the bill which I have introduced amends the old statute upon this subject. There is general complaint amongst Senators and Members of the House of Representatives that the number of copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD now allotted is not sufficient. Each Senator has only 88 copies to distribute in his entire State. Frequently this year, as well as last year—in fact, ever since I have been in the Senate—I have had to write my constituents that my quota of the RECORD was exhausted, and I find that other Senators have had the same experience. A similar situation obtains in the House.

It has been, I believe, 30 years since the apportionment of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was made. The population of the country now is over a hundred million people, and certainly 300 copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each Senator is not too much. If the Senator from Kansas would permit, I should like to have the bill considered now.

Mr. CURTIS. I will have to ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well; but I shall ask that the bill may be considered at an early date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

EMPLOYMENT OF NAVAL FORCES IN NICARAGUA

Mr. BORAH. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 137), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, instructed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate, first, the facts relative to the use of the Navy in Nicaragua since the recognition of the Diaz government; the extent of the naval force, both as to ships and as to men; the number of conflicts had with armed forces in Nicaragua; the number of individuals killed or wounded on either side; and such other data as will enable the Senate to have before it all the facts relative to the use of the Navy in Nicaragua; together with the report of the naval officers to the Secretary of the Navy touching matters in Nicaragua.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution may go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

BELLIGERENT OPERATIONS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. KING submitted a resolution (S. Res. 138), which was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Whereas the Constitution invests Congress with the power:

"To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water;

"To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years;

"To provide and maintain a Navy;

"To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;

"To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions;

"To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress"; and

Whereas armed military and naval forces of the United States under the command of the President are carrying on belligerent operations in and against foreign countries with which Congress has not declared a state of war to exist: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary examine into and report to the Senate upon the question whether or not the Executive, in the exercise of the powers invested in him by the Constitution, has the right to employ the armed military and naval forces of the United States to carry on belligerent operations in foreign countries in cases where Congress has not declared a state of war to exist or authorized the employment of the military or naval forces in or against such countries.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. GILLETT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 139), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the Senate, on January 27, 1926, by a vote of 76 to 17, gave its advice and consent to the adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice upon certain conditions and with certain reservations; and

Whereas the signatory states in transmitting their replies referred to "such further exchange of views as the Government of the United States may think useful": Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States respectfully suggests to the President the advisability of a further exchange of views with the signatory states in order to establish whether the differences between the United States and the signatory states can be satisfactorily adjusted.

ASSISTANT PRINTING CLERK

Mr. WATSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 140), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to employ an assistant printing clerk from February 1, 1928, for service in the office of the Secretary, at the rate of $1,940 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, until the end of the present session of Congress.

FUNDING OF GREEK WAR DEBT TO THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 51)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWANSON in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am submitting herewith for your consideration a copy of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury regarding the proposed plan for the settlement of the debt owed by Greece to the United States, and of the differences existing between the two Governments arising out of the tripartite loan agreement entered into at Paris under date of February 10, 1918.

The plan of settlement has my approval, and I recommend that the Congress enact the necessary legislation authorizing it for the following reasons:

It provides for the funding of the Greek war debt to our Government and for the settlement of the Greek claim for further advances under the tripartite loan agreement made during the war. While our Government is to advance some twelve millions to Greece, the loan is amply secured, is to be repaid over a period of 20 years at an adequate rate of interest, and is to be used exclusively for reconstruction work of great humanitarian as well as economic value. This loan discharges what the Greek Government has consistently contended is a legal and moral commitment of our Government.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 6, 1928.

CLAIMS OF THE STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA (S. DOC. NO. 50)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 123, agreed to January 27, 1928, a statement of the indebtedness of the State of North Carolina to the United States upon certain bonds of the State and the claims of the State of North Carolina for advances during the war of 1812, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

THE CHINESE PROBLEM

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I have here an article by the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] and an article by the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] relating to the Chinese question, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post]

CHINA IS PREY OF RUSSIA, SENATOR GOFF DECLARES—SOVIET STRIKING AT GREAT BRITAIN BECAUSE OF HER GREAT INFLUENCE IN EAST—UNITED STATES INVOLVED SERIOUSLY AND VITALLY—MEANTIME WAR LORDS ARE OPPRESSING HELPLESS PEOPLE—PEACE OF WORLD AT STAKE

By GUY D. GOFF, United States Senator from West Virginia

While the news from China is not reassuring, it is not unexpected when one considers the logical flow of events in that very disturbed section of the world. As every one knows, there is a so-called Nationalist Party operating in China, and it is completely under the influence of Soviet Russia. It is not necessary to state when it so became or what so influenced it; it is sufficient to state the fact. This all came as an aftermath of the so-called Republic, which was established in 1911.

Surprising and as anomalous as it may seem, there is no government in that country; no one to-day stands out as a patriot worthy and competent to lead. There is a gradual and almost perceptible absorption and usurpation of the rights of the people by the war lords of tuchuns. Each is devoid of a love of country or a policy except as dictated by self interest and personal aggrandizement.

WAR LORDS OF CHINA

The Peking government does not function outside the walls of that historic city. Therefore the political factions of war lords who are constantly at war with each other consist prominently of the following:

Chang Tso-lin, the tuchun of Manchuria, who is now established in Peking and who is popularly known as the northern war lord.

Chiang Kai-shek, who is the commander in chief of the southern nationalist army. This party is split into two wings. He, however, heads the moderates, supporting the late Dr. Sun Yat Sen; and there is the communistic section, or nationalist party, represented by Eugene Chen and Borodin, the representative of Russia, as well as several other men of lesser note.

Feng Yu-hsiang, the so-called Christian general, exercises a great control in the northwest, but his sympathies are with the southerners, and it is difficult to determine whether he favors the right or the left wing of that party. He is at present the enemy of Chang Tso-lin.

Gen. Chang Tsung-Chang, the Shantung war lord, who is assisting Gen. Sun Chang-Fang, overlord of five southeast Provinces.

Yen Hsi-shan, the military governor of Shansi, who is generally known as the military governor of the "Model Province."

The fifth group, known as the Hankow Nationalists, is dominated by Moscow and by Eugene Chen, formerly a British subject, born in the Isle of Jamaica. This group is frankly Russian, bitterly antiforeign, and the prolific parent of most of the outrages which have been committed upon foreigners and their property in China. No good purpose is served in mentioning or discussing the characteristics of these so-called war lords or prolonging the list of those who have constituted themselves the so-called saviors of their country. Whatever they do, they are doing largely individually, and not, with the exception of Chiang Kai-shek, in response to any national movement. However, mention should be made of Gen. Yang Sen, whose seizure of the British ships precipitated the Wanhsien incident, and also Gen. Wu Pei-fu. General Yang is the leading figure in the Province of Kueichow, and General Wu is the leading figure in the Province of Yunnan.

TWO MAJOR MOVEMENTS NOTED

It is sufficient to say that there are two major movements taking place in China to-day; one the struggle of the Chinese people to free themselves from the tyranny of the militarists; the other an organized attempt of Russia to involve China in her program of world revolution and world destruction. It is permissible, and therefore helpful, to summarize these aims and purposes as follows:

The war lords are fighting solely to maintain their respective military dictatorships, always, however, with the settled purpose of selling out at any time to the highest bidder. Gen. Chiang Kai-shek proposes to abolish the so-called unequal treaties and extraterritoriality and establish, if possible, a constitutional government based essentially upon the principles of Dr. Sun Yat Sen; and Russia aims to drive all foreigners out of China and convert the Chinese to bolshevism, with Russia, of course, paramount. This means that China becomes a Russian Province.

The Chinese people are ignorant, long-suffering, and pathetically patient. They see things from an oriental point of view. They do not think as the western nations do. Their point of view and their outlook on life, mentally, morally, and ethically, is diametrically opposite to that of the citizens of the west. The Chinese, as a nation, live in the past. They are introspective and static and never dynamic. They determine things and do things as their fathers did—not the fathers of a generation ago, but the fathers of 40 centuries ago. They are the victims of maxims, no doubt completely applicable to the times of which they were the outward expression, but in no sense useful in this prospective, progressive, and moving age.

PEOPLE CONTENT TO MEDITATE

The people of China are content to meditate and reflect and find enlightenment in what the western world can classify only as mental and moral darkness. The people of China, if I may so phrase it, orientate by facing antiquity, utterly oblivious, so to speak, that the dead past, regardless of its wisdom and its ethics, can not enlighten or illuminate the pathway of a present that is always converging on the future.

These unfortunate people—and I use this term advisedly—are reduced to-day to a state of abject subjection, where misery and red-handed anarchy rule supreme. The overwhelming majority of them are helpless, fatuous, and hopeless. They are a nation of 400,000,000 people, and 98 per cent of them are illiterate. Once they had, when it flourished in the infancy of human thoughts, a great civilization. The people never outgrew it, and it has ever failed to save them.

It is a civilization that dates back 5,000 years. Its great thinkers lived and recorded their thoughts four centuries before the birth of Jesus Christ. Its great philosophers were the contemporaries of Aristotle, Socrates, and Plato. The day of such things belongs to the sacred and the reverential past, and that it can not serve mankind as a practical form to-day is proved in the answer to the question, If the civilization of China is worthy to be copied, worshiped, and followed in this busy, practical—yes, altruistic—period of the twentieth century, what are its beneficial effects upon the people who now inhabit the continent of China; and, judging them as its finished product, what has it done for them?

The great majority of the intelligent Chinese to-day are practically unanimous in condemning this widespread misrule of the war lords.

These so-called patriots confiscate property, loot the homes and the business houses of their constituents, starve and terrorize the multitude, and make human life the cheapest commodity in all the world. In fact, during the last 16 years, since the formation of the Chinese Republic, the attempt to engraft the principles of democratic government on this helpless and hopeless people, schooled, environed, and indoctrinated for 5,000 years with every degree of superstition and dependency, has meant and will mean for some time to come death, slavery, and the visible pursuit of annihilation.

China, left alone, might have worked out in her own way an escape from her present chaos. She has not been left alone and she is not now, and she never has been free to be herself and to think out and choose her place among the nations of the world.

The Chinese people are morbidly and weakly susceptible. They are intensely sensitive and responsive to suggestion. As a people, they have neither a sense of obligation nor a spirit of forgiveness. They are easily excited, and when passion and anger hold their sway, both their graciousness and their gratitude lose all sense of memory.

RUSSIA CAUSE OF IT ALL

Russia, the malicious and the malignant; Russia, the sinister and the perfidious; Russia, always the growling, snarling, undomesticated bear, is the cause of it all. Russia is the pariah and the venomous outcast of civilization. Russia destroyed her own civilization and history will indelibly record that she can never remove this blot from her escutcheon. Russia denies the existence of a God and glorifies herself in this position. Russia destroyed the Christian home, degraded womanhood, and made the little children of her firesides the visible immortality of the race that they are, the mere pauperized pets of the State.

Russia to-day, the marionette of the Third Internationale or vice versa as the regencies may require, is training her citizens to be prowling, spying beasts, ready to devour all who may cross their track. In a word, Russia is a reversion to the Tartar from which she sprang, and she plans to dominate the Orient and the world as compensation for her self-expulsion and her self-flagellation from the family of nations.

To-day she is exploiting and using China, hoping that her disintegration will affect other countries, and so hasten the world revolution which she feels will destroy the British Empire and move the center of capitalistic influence to Moscow. Under her tutelage young China, as expressed in the student movement, is destroying the mental balance of the people. Think of an unsophisticated and student class assuming to confiscate the savings and control and direct its elders, and if allowed to achieve its purposes, destroy not only the people but the very stability of law and order, without which no government can either be constructed or exist.

RUSSIA BEHIND LABOR DISPUTES

Russia to-day is behind every labor dispute in China; and it is due directly to her superintending and blighting influence and her millions of pounds sterling, not always logically spent even from the viewpoint of her endeavor, that trade and industry are each being gradually eliminated and driven from the land. Again the question arises: And why? And again the answer is the same; the Russian bear is always just the same unchanging brute, whether poked by a czar or a proletariat.

It wants to-day, as it has always wanted, Constantinople, and an outlet to the Mediterranean. It wants Peking and an outlet to the Pacific. It wants Delhi and an outlet into the Indian Ocean; and it wants Japan out of Mongolia, Manchuria, and Korea; and this wish is very near to its communistic, fur-encased heart. And last, but not least, it wants the Philippines and the Dutch East Indies.

It wants the white man out of the Orient that it may dominate the yellow races and compel Japan to become communistic and do the Tartar's bidding. It knows that there is no government in China except a government of organized bandits, treacherous political leaders, and traitorous military war lords. It knows that the only order existing to-day in that wide domain is the order which the fear of the military dictator instills and suppresses into those who are inspired by the simple and the ancient rule. That they should take, who dare, and that they who can should keep all that they do steal.

ENGLAND OBJECT OF ATTACK

The bolsheviks and the Chinese have agreed in singling out England for attack. They appreciate that it would be a mistake to attack all the powers at once and in their Oriental astuteness they realize that in attacking one power they will receive a certain measure of benevolent neutrality from certain of the other powers. Great Britain is singled out in China because of the preponderance of her trade as well as her great influence as a colonizing and elevating force in the East.

The Chinese problem and its solution is of world-wide interest, and in my judgment, this solution is essential to world peace. The stability of our present civilization, morally, religiously, and commercially, and the security of the generations yet to come, depend upon the correct solution of this problem. This bolshevik influence in China expressing itself in the desire for "self-determination," appeals so strongly to certain of the political, the philosophical, and ethical idealists in America and Europe, that many of them are now openly and frankly communistic and antiforeign without appreciating where their sentiments and their emotional inspired thoughts are leading and, in fact, have led them.

As the press reports from day to day indicate, the tide of battle sweeps on, bringing victory north or south of the Yangtze as the dice or the dollars may fail. One party advances only to retreat. One war lord after another sells out and expatriates himself from his country because he has become a millionaire and therefore ceases to be a communist. The people suffer, their homes are looted and burned; and they are impressed into the army as bandit warriors or they are requisitioned as mere beasts of burden for the looting soldiery. The entire world is personally interested and deeply concerned. The world is involved ethically, morally, religiously and, least of all, commercially.

UNITED STATES ALSO INVOLVED

Great Britain, Japan, France, Holland, Italy, and the United States are obviously, seriously, and vitally involved. What these countries will decide to do is not embraced within this interview or in any opinion here expressed. These nations are confronted with the necessity of choosing between friendly, immediate, inexpensive intervention or a future costly, devastating, horrible war.

These nations to-day are drifting timidly and consciously along the line of the least resistance. These nations to-day are knowingly following and advocating the policy of negativity. These nations, like the hermit crab, are living in the shell of "watchful waiting," seemingly oblivious to the fact that logically negativity always achieves the very converse of the object sought.

Many say that intervention is as impossible as it is impracticable. Many say that China should be allowed to work out her own destiny. Those who so argue suffer from and are enmeshed in the fallacy of reasoning by analogy. China has tried for 16 years to find a George Washington to lead her out of a wilderness of howling, looting, bribing, grafting chaos, and neither by night nor by day, in answer to her pathetic cry, "Come over into Macedonia and help us out," has there ever been an answering voice or an echo to her cry.

IS CHINA TO DIE ASKED

Is China to go on slowly committing national and racial suicide? Is civilization doing its duty when it stands placidly by and sees a great people helplessly, hopelessly, and supinely rushing to its ruin? Does civilization answer the test when it does not step in for the sake of humanity and aid those who can not help themselves? Am I to refrain from preventing a suicide merely because certain schools of thought proclaim that every individual has the right to do with his life as he sees fit?

Is the present civilization of which we boast worthy of the name or worthy of continuance if it allows a nation not only to destroy itself by ruthlessly murdering its inhabitants but to destroy its relationship and its place in the family of nations?

In a word, does civilization transgress or commit evil when it says, "You have tried for 16 long years to find your way out, to find even a pathway that leads to the road that brings you to the light, and you have not only failed but in your failure you have brought waste, rapine, and ruin upon a peaceful and prosperous people, and you are also bringing utter and hideous destruction upon those who have the right to look to you for security, salvation, and the right to live"?

These are the questions which the Chinese problem includes, and upon their correct answer lies the immediate salvation and the future welfare of more than a billion human souls and the peace and prosperity and the continued liberty and happiness of the entire world to-day.

FAMILY LOYALTY—THE CHINESE PROBLEM

By HIRAM BINGHAM, United States Senator from Connecticut

(The United States Senator from Connecticut, by reason of his early associations, has an understanding of the Chinese which varies considerably from popular feeling on the subject. This article results from a recent trip to the Orient.)

My first impressions of the Chinese were gained more than 40 years ago, when I was a boy in Honolulu. My father and mother had several warm friends in the Chinese colony. My first photograph album contains the picture of one of these Chinese friends who endeared himself to me by his habit of making attractive presents to little boys, a not uncommon Chinese trait. Some of the nicest and most valuable presents I treasured in my childhood came from Chinese friends. When I was old enough to celebrate the Chinese New Year by making calls on the Chinese shopkeepers, rice planters, and vegetable gardeners of my acquaintance, I was naturally delighted to find them very generous not only with goodies and delicious confections but also with packages of firecrackers, which were usually carefully treasured for use on the succeeding Fourth of July!

The best cooks in Honolulu were Chinese, and I always considered it a privilege to be invited to partake of the delicacies prepared by Ah Sam, Ah Sing, or Ah Fat. Their soups, curries, and gravies were unexcelled. Not until my recent visit to China, however, did I realize that the variety and delicacy of dishes at a family dinner party in Peking can only be equaled in Paris or in some great hotel whose chef learned his lessons in France.

As a boy I had known the Chinese as generous, kindly, courteous, and faithful. No prejudice against them was ever expressed by the members of my family. Nevertheless, I was not prepared for the elaborate courtesy shown by conservative Chinese in their own homes to-day. We busy, hurrying westerners have much to learn about the amenities of life from the true followers of Confucius.

Every visitor to China is familiar with the fact that whenever one calls on a Chinese gentleman one is treated with courtesy and hospitality. It was not, however, until I spent several days in the interior of the Province of Shansi and had an opportunity to come into personal contact with conservative gentlemen of the old school that I realized the extent to which Chinese kindness can go in providing for the physical wants of a visitor as well as in making him feel spiritually welcome. The weather was fairly warm, the roads were dusty. One came to appreciate fully, not only the excellent fresh tea which was served continuously, but also the moist, delicately perfumed individual hot towels offered to each guest as soon as he arrived and at refreshing intervals. At first it seemed a little strange that no dry towels were offered afterward, but actually the evaporation of such fragrant moisture as was left on face and hands proved cooling and delightful.

A pleasant drink and a chance to bathe one's hands, however, are not unusual forms of hospitality all over the world, although nowhere have I ever found it so invariable a custom as in China. In Shansi, however, courtesy went farther. On various occasions I was taken to interior towns and cities to visit temples or to see the private collections of wealthy Chinese connoisseurs. In each case we were met outside the walls by our hosts, who likewise walked back with us through the dusty streets until we reached our motor cars.

The climax came on the evening in which I had been invited to dine with Governor Yen, an ardent Confucian. The dinner was set for 7.30. Shortly after 6.30, at the end of a long day of dusty travel, while I was in my bath, one of the hotel servants rushed up to my room in a great state of excitement to tell me that Governor Yen's automobile was waiting for me at the door and that I must go to the governor's Yamen at once. Owing to my ignorance of old-fashioned Chinese etiquette I took this message seriously, and was much distressed that I could not possibly go immediately. Slipping on a bathrobe I looked out of the window to see what kind of a car the governor had sent, only to observe it rapidly driving back to the Yamen. This was a relief. Evidently the driver had made a mistake. So I proceeded leisurely with my dressing. Twenty minutes later one of the hotel "boys" again rushed excitedly into the room to tell me that Governor Yen had telephoned his disappointment at my nonarrival and his desire to have me come at once. It was still half an hour before the time set for the dinner and Governor Yen's English-speaking secretary, who had been with us all day, had definitely promised to come for us in one of the governor's cars at 7.30. We were puzzling over this second message when some one suggested that it was merely the old-fashioned Chinese custom which required the courteous host to send two or three messengers at intervals before the time set for dinner, urging the guest to come immediately, chiefly to assure him that his arrival was eagerly awaited. Of course, the well-bred guest would never embarrass his host by really arriving ahead of time. The idea was merely to make him feel that the invitation had not been a cold formality, but that a true welcome awaited him. Surely hospitality could go no farther.

There are Americans in China who treat the Chinese as social equals and have learned that there are no more delightful hosts or dinner guests than well-bred Chinese. There are others, on the other hand, who never invite them to dinner and who insist that no Chinese gentleman shall cross the threshold of the Shanghai Club. "Old China hands" have threatened to resign from the clubs they founded, if a rule were adopted making Chinese gentlemen eligible for membership, or even eligible to be brought into the clubs by members as luncheon or dinner guests. This snobbish custom seems to have been brought to China by the British from India. It has been copied by those Americans who believe it best to follow in English footsteps. It is deplored by many of both nationalities. It is to be hoped that liberalism will soon prevail.

In dealing with the Chinese it would seem to be the part of wisdom to follow so far as we can the dictates of courtesy and good breeding according to Chinese standards. The American Club in Shanghai has recently set a good example in this particular.

It is easy for us westerners to criticize the Chinese because their standards of right and wrong are not our standards. They put family loyalty and private welfare far ahead of patriotism and the public welfare. In fact, only an infinitesimal part of the Chinese people appear to have the slightest conception of what is meant by the term "the public welfare." To them whatever will benefit the family and its members is right. Whatever hurts the family is wrong. Consequently, the Chinese official who looks after his relatives at the expense of the state is right, while the Chinese official who permits the members of his family to suffer while he serves the state is wrong, wholly wrong, inconceivably wrong.

The same ethical attitude makes it practically impossible for Chinese joint-stock enterprises or business corporations to succeed. It is ethically the duty of the directors to look after their families. Similarly, it is the "duty" of the employees to provide for their family needs. Neither directors nor employees have any conception of the western attitude of loyalty to a corporation. The same thing was true of our own ancestors during the Middle Ages.

This fundamental difference between the orientals and the occidentals of to-day virtually makes it impossible for the Chinese Republic to copy successfully the political institutions of Europe or America. Our Government is possible only because good citizens are willing to serve it honestly and faithfully, even when this service requires the subordination of family interests. Since that concept is virtually nonexistent in China it is easy to see why the Chinese Republic does not function successfully, has no president, no legislative body, and has not had for several years.

The nations of Europe and America are partly responsible for the present condition of affairs in China. We have introduced western methods of trade and commerce based on conceptions quite at variance with those of the Chinese. In America there are more jobs than hands to do it with; consequently, we have invented labor-saving machinery. China has more hands to do it with than things to do; consequently, when labor-saving machinery is introduced it means unemployment, starvation, and disaster to thousands of people.

Furthermore, we have taught visiting Chinese students the art of government based on a wholly different habit of mind and thought from that to which the Chinese have been accustomed for centuries. Their efforts to put our theories into practice have failed.

We have taught them political "science" when politics is really an art, not a science. A science is something which is true in all lands, like the multiplication table or the laws of gravity, while that form of government which works in Connecticut will not necessarily work in Nicaragua or even in North Dakota; and not at all in China.

An able student of Chinese politics who has lived in China for a quarter of a century and who is well conversant with Chinese public opinion and political thought told me that the basic fact in the Chinese poltical problem is the apathy of at least 400,000,000 Chinese, who not only are not democratic in their political thinking and practices but have no conceptions and no conscious interest such as could lead them to become a democracy. At present, and for centuries past, their chief interest, almost their sole interest, has been family and clan welfare. It would seem as though the quickest way to bring the Chinese people up to the point of interest in and fitness for popular government would be for a number of provincial or regional governments to be established, each small enough for its people to see its working and to realize that it is not a vague abstraction but a piece of machinery that works for them and gets results, that improves their farming, their commerce, and their other activities.

I believe that the United States ought to take the initiative in an effort to induce the several warring groups in China mutually to agree to respect certain boundaries and each to form a government within its own boundary and confine its efforts to solidifying that government and to increasing productiveness in its own area. We could offer to place a diplomatic commissioner within each such area to help with advice and friendly counsel. We might lend the weight of our good offices to those governments that were willing to assume their share of existing national obligations.

It may be objected that any such arrangement is not practicable at the present time. I talked with a number of "old China hands" and their friends, who believe that an expeditionary force of 100,000 trained western troops could easily pacify China and by policing railways and rivers bring back the good old days of profitable trade. I do not agree with them. I believe that such an undertaking would greatly promote the growth of that very antiforeignism which has been fostered so carefully by Russia and her agents. It would cause widespread boycotting of all foreign goods. It would be followed by a period of widespread guerilla warfare. Hundreds of thousands of Chinese soldiers would become bandits. Armed bands of marauders would, if anything, put China in worse chaos than it is in to-day. Furthermore, it would tremendously hamper the efforts of the wisest Chinese bankers and merchants, who wish to bring China back to normal, peaceful conditions.

On the other hand, I have listened to missionaries and students, who assured me that the great mass of the Chinese people were as intelligent as the great mass of the American people; that our policy of protecting American lives and property in the treaty ports threatens to forfeit the high regard which the Chinese people had for America; that, while heretofore military leaders have been handling political affairs, "the prospect now is that the people themselves will soon assume control"; that China can easily put her house in order if foreigners would only keep their hands off, get out, and abrogate the special privileges which they have enjoyed under the "unequal treaties." These statements and claims I believe to be just as wrong and unwise as the claims of the "old China hands" that China can be pacified by foreign troops.

The group of Nanking missionaries who issued a statement several weeks after the Nanking outrages of March 24 had a remarkably clear grasp of the situation when they said that "the securing of equal recognition in the family of nations depends more upon the Chinese's own efforts than on the foreign governments * * * foreign nations have taken actual steps in meeting Chinese claims and are agreed to go further.

"But the Nationalists' government has not kept its promises nor fulfilled its obligations. * * * We have favored the return of concessions to China, but to-day a foreign settlement is our only place of refuge. We have assured our people abroad that the Nationalist movement was not anti-Christian nor antiforeign, but now we are driven from our homes and dispossessed of our property. * * * Everything we have said in behalf of the Nationalist movement is made to appear false. * * * We know there are many Chinese people who see these events as we do and who sincerely regret them. But regret and good wishes are not sufficient. Those sections of the Chinese people who really disapprove of the conditions we have pointed out should find some way to make their influence and good will effective."

As a matter of fact, violent antiforeign agitations have occurred repeatedly and appear to be widespread in central and southern China. Christianity and the Christian religion are being persistently and systematically attacked. Their leaders are being maligned and persecuted, their properties are being desecrated, looted, and seized, notwithstanding promises of protection by the Nationalist government.

I do not mean in any way to charge the leaders of the Nationalist government with bad faith. I believe that they sincerely desire to deal honestly and fairly with their foreign friends. On the other hand, it is obvious that their armies are so badly disciplined that they can not prevent their soldiers from taking possession of foreign property, looting, robbing, and burning. Furthermore, they are in most cases quite helpless in the face of mob violence caused by agitators and demagogues seeking their own selfishness. Nevertheless, the leaders of the Nationalist movement are chiefly to blame for the nature of the teaching which they have countenanced for the past few years. This has been destructive rather than constructive, charged with hatred rather than brotherly love, marked by envy, jealousy, covetousness, and greed rather than by farsighted patriotism and altruism.

"Chinese history alternates between good government and anarchy," said the late Doctor Sun Yat Sen, hero of the Nationalist movement, in his famous book, The Three Principles of the People, "and in times of anarchy there has always been the struggle for imperial power. Foreign countries have always fought battles either for religion or for freedom, but in China, during these thousands of years, the question fought over has always been imperial power." This would seem to be a fairly accurate diagnosis of the present situation. Certainly the greater part of the Chinese generals are to-day fighting not for a principle but for imperial power. The fact that they do not openly so state may be due to the last paragraph of lecture seven in The Three Principles, where Doctor Sun says: "Each time in Chinese history when the government has changed, those who had great military power contended for the throne; if their armies were smaller they sought to be kings or princes. To-day no one in the army, whether high or low, dares attempt to be even a king or a prince. This is a step forward as far as quarrels in history are concerned." It is said that Chang Tso Lin would like nothing better than to establish a dynasty, particularly as he has an attractive and energetic son and several husky little grandsons. Although some of his followers have urged him to assume imperial power, he has been content hitherto with gradual promotion from the rank of general to marshal and during this past year from marshal to generalissimo. Rumor has it that the imperial robes of office have been ordered.

Nevertheless, it seems foolish to expect China to become a unified nation, in the Western sense of the term. I am inclined to agree with Doctor John Willis Slaughter when he says in his recently published East and West in China: "Representative government must make its beginning in the villages, expand to areas not too large for the personal character and influence of the gentry to be lost to view, and then develop into representative provincial government. China must in the end be a federation of Provinces on a system of representation which should, for a long time, be as simple as possible. * * * It is natural that China, involved in the circumstances of effecting a change, should imagine that all good things can be made to flow from a wise and powerful central authority. There is no basis in history for this expectation. National achievement rests with a people, and not with a government. No people have proved this in a more impressive manner by their past than have the Chinese. Some day Chinese leadership may produce a genius who realizes how very little government China needs. At that point she will have mastered the first and greatest of all political lessons."

China has four times as many people as the United States. Her people differ from one another as do the peoples of Europe. Her culture is largely medieval. Only a small percentage of her people can read. The educated classes of the different countries of Europe in the Middle Ages could read the same language, though they could not understand one another's ordinary conversation. So it is in China to-day. Medieval Latin was spoken by relatively few people; so with classical Chinese.

Modern China is just about as cohesive as Europe was in Middle Ages. The Holy Roman Empire crumbled. China appears to be falling apart. Medieval industry was largely a family affair; so it is in China to-day. It took the people of western Europe several centuries to emerge from the Middle Ages. Yet their culture was not nearly so old and firmly established as is Chinese culture. China is not likely to become westernized in our day. Family loyalty is not likely to give way suddenly to patriotism.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the American Farm Bureau Federation touching the Muscle Shoals proposition.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1928.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILLIS: Apparently Senator NORRIS entirely missed the point of my argument when he read to the Senate last Wednesday portions of my letter of January 31, setting forth the reasons why organized agriculture is unable to accept the Senator's proposal for the operation of Muscle Shoals.

Senator NORRIS proposed to turn over to the American Cyanamid Co. nitrate plant No. 2 without charge; to furnish at cost all the power needed to make fertilizer to the full capacity of the plant; and to remove the 8 per cent limit on fertilizer profits, provided the company would agree to operate to capacity during the 50-year term of the lease.

We are informed that the American Cyanamid Co. would be willing to accept this proposal, if Senator NORRIS is in position to deliver. What I tried to indicate in my letter was that the American Farm Bureau Federation could not accept such a proposal because it carried no provision for limitation of profits and therefore no limitation on fertilizer prices. I indicated in the hearings in Senator NORRIS's presence that our chief fear is that new and cheaper fertilizers will be so held in monopoly control that without a limit on profits prices to the consumer will be reduced very little. This principle of profits control is a very important one to us.

Senator NORRIS naively told the Senate that he would cure this objection by inserting in his proposal the 8 per cent profits limitation. Evidently he has not given the matter much thought from a business standpoint. It must be self-evident that with profits limited to 8 per cent in the good years and perhaps disappearing entirely in bad years, there must be some offsetting adjustments to make up for this restriction. That is why a small amount of surplus power must be rendered available to the company for other uses. But under the terms of the Willis-Madden bill this additional power is bought and paid for at a price that fully compensates the Government.

Furthermore, Senator NORRIS evidently does not realize what he is promising when he offers "all the power needed to produce fertilizer to the full capacity of nitrate plant No. 2." Including the electric current needed to produce phosphoric acid to mix with the nitrogen to make it usable, a total of not less than 280,000 continuous horsepower is required. The continuous power available at the present Muscle Shoals Dam is only 82,000 horsepower. To get the required horsepower the Cove Creek Dam as well as Muscle Shoals Dam No. 3 must be built and the present steam plant enlarged 50 per cent to change some of the secondary power into continuous power. With these new installations called for in the Willis-Madden bill a total of about 300,000 primary horsepower would be available at Wilson Dam and Dam No. 3, according to statements of United States Army Engineers. This is barely enough to operate the Muscle Shoals fertilizer plants to capacity. Whatever extra power the American Cyanamid Co. would get would be mainly intermittent secondary power, but would include perhaps 40,000 horsepower primary power at Cove Creek, and possibly a total of 20,000 horsepower at the three small dams on the Clinch River, which under the terms of the bill as amended by the Military Affairs Committee of the House the company would build at its own expense. This Cove Creek power is to be paid for at a rate giving the Government a profit on its investment and the other three dams built on exactly the same terms as power companies are building all over the United States without any question of Government concern or restriction being raised.

All the talk about 1,250,000 horsepower in connection with this development is mere talk and is chiefly useful in obscuring the real issues involved.

The above are matters of engineering fact which can be readily demonstrated. But we differ with Senator NORRIS on another and somewhat less tangible principle. He insists on Government operation. We believe in private operation wherever possible. We believe that a private company will produce power cheaper than the Government is able to do it with the various limitations imposed. The Government's best service in this matter is, we believe, to lend its credit in hiring the necessary capital to build the dams and power houses at a rate much lower than private parties can hire capital. This is a big contribution toward low power costs. Beyond that point private initiative is likely to operate more economically.

These are the considerations that have caused us to evolve the Willis-Madden bill. This bill does exactly what Senator NORRIS says he wants to do in the way of producing cheap fertilizers at Muscle Shoals, but takes into consideration engineering and business facts which Senator NORRIS seems to have ignored. We trust that further study of these points will cause Senator NORRIS to support the Willis-Madden bill if he sincerely desires a practical, businesslike, and speedy solution of the Muscle Shoals problem.

Very respectfully,

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
CHESTER H. GRAY,
Washington Representative.

ANNIVERSARY OF TREATY WITH FRANCE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the New York Times yesterday concerning the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the treaty between France and the United States.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sunday, February 5, 1928]

HOW OUR FIRST FRENCH PACT WAS SIGNED—A NEW TREATY WILL BE CONCLUDED ON ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FRANKLIN'S

In a fire-lit room in Paris just 150 years ago to-morrow four men sat about a paper-strewn table. Three of them were of early middle age, elegantly turned out, with their hair punctiliously powdered and curled. The fourth was past 70, his ponderous form clad in plain velvet, his thin gray hair straggling down from his massive bald head. But his face, in which shrewdness, wit, and benignity seemed to meet, was probably for the moment one of the most frequently pictured in France.
